This little sentence should be written over every heart—stamped on every memory. It should be the golden rule practice, not only in every household, but throughout the world. By helping one another, we not only remove the thorns from the pathway and the anxiety from the mind, but we feel a sense of pleasure in our heart, knowing we are doing a duty to a fellow creature. A helping hand or an encouraging word is no loss to us, yet is a benefit to others. Who has not felt the power of a little sentence? Who has not needed the encouragement and aid of a kind friend? How soothing when perplexed with some task that is both difficult and burdensome; to feel a gentle hand on the shoulder, and to hear a kind voice whispering "Do not be discouraged; I see your troubles; let me help you." What strength is inspired, hope created, what sweet gratitude is felt; and the great difficulty is dissolved as the dew before the sunshine. Yes, let us help one another, by endeavoring to strengthen and encourage the weak; and lifting the burden of care from the weary and oppressed, that life may glide smoothly on, and the fount of bitterness yield sweet waters; and he whose willing hand is ever ready to aid us, will reward our humble endeavors, and every good deed will be "bread upon the water, to return after many days," if not to us, at least to those we love.

Purdue University.

The annual catalogue of Purdue University for the year 1878-79 contains the names of 195 students—including those in Summer Art School, 209. This shows that Purdue is now the third college in the state in attendance, and, if the rate of increase of the last three years continues, it will soon stand first. The number of students enrolled in 1875-76 was 67, in 1876-77 the number was 139, and in 1877-78 it was 166. It is thus seen that the attendance has trebled in three years.

The catalogue contains the completed scheme of instruction and training, including course in Science, Agriculture and Horticulture, and Mechanics. Arrangements for practical and efficient work in these departments are now made, and the institution is well equipped for thorough work.

The expenses of students are very low. Good table-board is furnished at $2.50 per week, and the charge for rooms, including heat and light, is only 50 cents per week. The entrance and incindental fees are $5 per term. Students appointed by counties are exempt from the payment of entrance and incidental fees and the charges for rooms heat and light. This reduction amounts to $33 a year. Each county in the State has the right to appoint two students. For full information send for a catalogue, addressing President of Purdue University, LaFayette, Ind.

August Belmont's Family History.

[New York Correspondence Cincinnati Gazette]

The marriage of August Belmont to Miss Parry (daughter of the commodore) was in its day a deeply-interesting social event. Prior to that Belmont had no standing. He was merely known in Wall street as agent for the Rothschilds, while aside from his office he was merely a fast man, whose money went freely in the most disreputable manner. He still carries the marks of his early career in a lame leg, the result of a pistol shot received in a duel occasioned, it is said, by an intrigue. Up to that time, indeed, Belmont was considered rather an adventurer. His true name was "Schonberg," which he changed to Belmont on his arrival here, and his family connections were unknown. Hence, for a New York belle to marry such a man could not but create a sensation. The wedding was preceded by the conveyance to the bride of a Fifth avenue establishment and $100,000 in first-class securities, and it was not long before the Belmonts were received among the creme de la creme.

In this manner the Jew Schonberg, having renounced his Hebrew preferences, became a leader in the more dashing element of New York society. He is the only Jew who has shown a special love for horses, and his name has long been identified with the American turf. His son, Perry Belmont, is one of the leaders of young society, and recently his daughter was married in good style, the ceremony being one of the most brilliant ever witnessed in Newport.

Belmont is one of the small number of Jews who has renounced his national faith, and yet he retains some of his ancient customs. His wife attends the Episcopal church, but when death entered his family he obeyed the old Hebrew custom of closing his picture gallery for a year. He is now about three-score-and-ten, and his wealth is estimated at a million. Rather strange, though he has been a Wall street man for so many years, he has never been drawn into stock speculations. No one has ever heard of Belmont's name in any "corner" or street operation among bulls and bears. He has confined himself closely to his original specialty, and has built up an immense banking business, which will be a grand inheritance for his sons. His married life has been one of reputable character, and it may be said that in no case has the daughter of a naval officer done better than in the instance above referred to.

Is There a Jew Farmer?

Who knows of a Jew farmer? They are as rare as white blackbirds; not merely in this country, but in every country. Either natural inclination or circumstances which have resulted in centuries of special training, have made the Jew peculiarly fitted for the busy haunts of men; have made him a trader and always a financier; have fitted him to come out better in the struggle against the vice and crime of city life—the courts rarely show the name of a Jew; against the struggle with business stagnation and commercial distress—unquestionably they have tided over hard times better than their Gentile brethren. They are the financiers of the world, and in many countries of the far east the only traders, but farmers never.—Indianapolis News.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A GOLD-BEARING vein of quartz has been discovered in Penobscot, Me....A bold plot to release the convicts in the Massachusetts State prison has just come to light. The arrangements were made on the 4th of July, when the 700 convicts were together for an hour or two, and, but from an intercepted letter from one convict to another, it would certainly have been carried into effect. The plan was to pounce upon the officers and guards, seize their weapons and make a simultaneous rush for freedom.

THE New Jersey Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment in the case of Mrs. Smith and Cove Bennett, sentenced to be hanged at Jersey City for the murder of Police Officer Smith, husband of Mrs. Smith. The case now goes to the Court of Errors and Appeals.

CHASTINE COX was placed on trial at New York on the 14th inst., for the murder of Mrs. Jane Lawrence De Forest Hull. The prisoner was flashily dressed, looked happy, and chatted unconcernedly with those around him.

A FURIOUS tornado visited Boston a few days ago, causing the destruction of a vast amount of property and considerable loss of life. A yacht was upset in the bay, and five of its six occupants found a watery grave. Several smaller craft were wrecked and the occupants drowned. In the city numbers of houses were unroofed, chimneys and signs blown down, and thousands of dollars' worth of window glass broken. The same storm swept over Fitchburg, Springfield, Pittsfield, Worcester, and other towns in the interior, playing havoc wherever it struck. It was the most furious and destructive visitation of the kind ever experienced in New England.

ANTHONY ZABRISKIE, a millionaire, living at Central Morrisiana, N. Y., a member of an ancient, historical, and very eccentric family, was instantly killed, a few days ago, by being run over by a railway train. Zabriskie's property is estimated at $16,000,000.

CHASTINE COX, the murderer of Mrs. Hull, in New York, has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged on Friday, Aug. 29. The defense was short and wholly devoted to an effort to show by medical testimony that Mrs. Hull might have died from fright or apoplexy....Boston dispatches give additional particulars of the recent destructive storm in the East. A yacht capsized off Nantucket beach and four persons were drowned. One man, two women and two children were lost off Governor's island. Two boats capsized off Scituate and three persons were drowned. Near Montreal Mrs. Peter Robertson was killed by lightning. Round about Kingston and Saugerties, in New York State, the crops were ruined, and barns, fences and outhouses blown down. The hailstones resembled large chunks of ice. The rainfall was very heavy in various places, and some hailstones measured seven inches in circumference. The lightning caused the loss of a few lives.

THE WEST.

FIVE Texas cow boys got on a tear at Ogallala, Neb., the other night, rode through the streets firing revolvers, and threatened to capture the town. The Sheriff and posse attempted to arrest them, when a fight ensued. One of the cow boys, William Shook, was shot and instantly killed. Another, Henry Parker, was badly wounded, and will probably die. The other three escaped.

EX-GOV. WILLIAM ALLEN died suddenly at his home, near Chillicothe, Ohio, on the 11th of July. He retired to bed in apparently his usual health. About 1 o'clock he became somewhat restless, and being unable to sleep he called to Dr. and Mrs. Scott, his son-in-law and daughter, who at once appeared at his bedside to aid him to arise. He signified his wish to be aided to reach a chair. While being thus helped, he retained all his faculties, but upon reaching the chair a slight but almost imperceptible change passed over his face, and without a struggle and without a word he easily dropped into the chair. A slight fluttering of the heart was only noticeable, his head fell back, and his eyes closed as in peaceful slumber.

SAN FRANCISCO dispatches give some additional particulars of the disaster at the mining town of Bodie, Cal. The magazine which exploded contained five tons of giant powder. The shock was scarcely felt under ground. At the 300-feet level the men felt a slight jar, but paid small attention to it. Fortunately, the drifts had just been connected, so that no injury was done to any below the ground. The shock was felt on the surface a distance of twenty miles. Many boarding-houses, restaurants, and other buildings were more or less shattered. Eleven men were instantly killed and upward of fifty injured, some of them fatally.

FROM appearances last week, Manager McVicker has found a gold mine in Gilbert's "Engaged," which drew crowded houses, even with the mercury away up toward the boiling point. Anyhow, Chicago may expect a run of this piece as long as she wants it, as "A bird in the hand," etc. The company was engaged with especial reference to this play, and is an excellent one.

DAVID CARMINE, a prominent street-broker at Dellsboro, Ind., committed suicide the other day, by hanging. Samuel N. Booker, aged 23, committed suicide at Bashington, Ind., by hanging. Too much hard work. Austin E. Bush, aged 45, salesman for J. J. Badey & Co., Philadelphia, hung himself at Greenfield, Ohio.

A SAN FRANCISCO dispatch says that Arthur Townsend was murdered by Indians in Tulare county, Cal., and the Indians were lynched by the white settlers....The contest between the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Companies, for the possession of the Denver and Rio Grande road, has at last come to an end. The Federal courts having decided in favor of the Santa Fe's claim, the road has been formally surrendered to that company by its officers.

THE SOUTH.

THERE were four hangings in the South, on Friday, the 11th of July, namely: Antonio Garcia, a Mexican, at San Antonio, Texas, for the murder of Augustin Amallo, Sept. 7, 1878; John Davis (colored) at Smithville, N. C., for the murder of Henry McDuffie (colored), December last; and two negroes—John Williams and Winter Payne—at Warrenton, Va.

BY the explosion of a boiler in the box-factory of Adams & Setzer, at Baltimore, in Low street, demolishing the boiler-house, August Setzer, one of the proprietors, and Henry Ulrich, engineer, were killed, and a number of workmen seriously injured.

MEMPHIS dispatches of the 14th report no new cases of yellow fever in the city, and the excitement subsiding. Physicians are of the opinion that there will be no epidemic there this summer.

WILLIAM J. LEWIS, a prominent St. Louis merchant and banker, and largely interested in the Big Muddy coal mines of Southern Illinois, was overcome by the heat at Carondelet, six miles below St. Louis, a few days ago, and died in twenty minutes. Mr. Lewis belonged to the firm of Bartholow, Lewis & Co., bankers; was President of the Commercial Bank, and was one of the most active and influential business men of the city....Edward Mercer shot and killed his nephew, J. McIntosh, eight miles from Nashville, Tenn. In the affray Mercer was severely if not fatally wounded in the left breast.

A PARTY of Indians have been murdering and robbing near Fort Davis, Texas. The meager accounts of the outrage do not indicate whether the raiders were from across the border, although the nearness of the locality to the lurking ground of the Mexican cut-throats makes it likely that such is the case.

FIVE new cases of yellow fever were reported to the Memphis Board of Health on the 17th. The cases consisted of the members of two families named Hester, residing under one roof, in the southern portion of the city. There was much excitement in consequence, and a general stampede of citizens at once set in.

GENERAL.

LATE advice from Pembina state that Sitting Bull has declared his independence of British authority, set the Canadian soldiers at defiance, and sent out runners to gather his clans for a raid into the United States.

INFORMATION has recently been received by the Treasury Department at Washington, which shows that the entire coast of Alaska, including the islands, and embracing 2,800 miles of sea frontage, is a vast reservoir of fish. This report to the Treasury discloses the existence of a new store of wealth for American industry. This information is contained in a report from Special Agent of the Treasury Morris, who spent two years in investigating the resources of Alaska. From this report it is apparent that as fine cod-fishery banks as exist anywhere in the world lie along the coast of Alaska, from the peninsula of Unalaska, through Norton's and Kotzebue's sounds into Behring straits, and that the fish in quality and size are equal to those caught off the banks of Newfoundland. Capt. White, of the United States revenue marine service, who was on the Alaska waters last year, reports that he sounded along the shores of Alaska for 700 miles, and found the entire length a codfish bank, with plenty of halibut.

DUN, BARLOW & CO.'s quarterly commercial report shows that the number of failures in the country for the second quarter of 1879 has been smaller than for any previous quarter in five years, and that there is an increase of over 20 per cent. in business.

CINCINNATI telegram: "Inquiry at the headquarters of the different railroads leading out of Cincinnati develops the fact that their freight business is unprecedented at this season of the year. Every available freight-car is in use, and there is a general demand for more cars to accommodate the sudden eastward shipping movement. The harvest-fields of Kentucky, Tennessee, Southern Ohio, Indiana and Illinois are pouring their products into Cincinnati more rapidly than they can be disposed of."

A VESSEL arrived at Philadelphia recently from San Domingo, with seven cases of yellow fever on board, and only two of the crew able to work. Four deaths occurred on the passage....Our Minister at St. Petersburg, Mr. Stoughton, of New York, is said to be dissatisfied with life in the Russian capital, and unwilling to return there. He is at present in New York, and, though urged not to resign by Secretary Evarts, it is stated that he is determined not to go back to Russia. Courtland Parker, of New Jersey is mentioned as his probable successor.

A HALIFAX (N. S.) dispatch chronicles the loss of the steamer State of Virginia, from New York for Glasgow. She went ashore on Sable island, 125 miles out from Halifax. Four women and five children were lost in the surf while landing. The vessel had seventy-four passengers, 104 head of cattle, and a general cargo. Sixty cattle were saved.

WASHINGTON.

AN Associated Press telegram from Washington says: "A circular has been prepared by the Attorney General, setting forth that the Judicial Appropriation act for the present fiscal year itemizes all court expenditures. The different items are quoted, and directions given to Marshals to make their requisitions in accordance therewith. The circular cautions these officers against applying money received for one grade of service to that of another grade. Judging from information received at the Department of Justice up to date, the United States Marshals intend to proceed with the duties of their offices, and undoubtedly anticipate reimbursement by Congress."

A STATEMENT has been issued by the War Department giving the number of men furnished the Union army by each State and Territory and the District of Columbia, from April 15, 1861, to the close of the war of the Rebellion. It shows that the total number of volunteers was 2,678,967, distributed as follows:

Maine	72,114	Missouri	109,111
New Hampshire	36,629	Kentucky	79,025
Vermont	35,262	Kansas	20,151
Massachusetts	152,048	Tennessee	31,092
Rhode Island	23,699	Arkansas	8,289
Connecticut	57,379	North Carolina	3,156
New York	467,047	California	15,725
New Jersey	81,010	Nevada	1,080
Pennsylvania	366,107	Oregon	1,810
Delaware	13,670	Washington Ter.	964
Maryland	50,316	Nebraska Ter.	3,157
West Virginia	32,068	Colorado Ter.	4,903
Dist. of Columbia	16,872	Dakota Ter.	206
Ohio	319,659	New Mexico Ter.	6,561
Indiana	197,147	Alabama	2,576
Illinois	259,147	Florida	2,190
Michigan	90,272	Louisiana	5,224
Wisconsin	96,424	Mississippi	545
Minnesota	25,052	Texas	1,965
Iowa	76,309	Indian Nation	3,530

The troops furnished by the Southern States were, with the exception of those of Louisiana, nearly all white. Florida furnished one regiment of cavalry, Alabama one white regiment, Mississippi one battalion, and North Carolina two regiments of cavalry.

AN Associated Press telegram from Washington says: A memorandum of the financial operations of the Government has been issued from the treasury, showing that the reduction in the interest-bearing debt from the highest point, Aug. 31, 1865, to July 31, 1879, amounted to $583,886,594, and the reduction in the annual interest charge, when the present funding operations are completed (Aug. 1, 1879), will be $67,208,919. The total debt has been reduced $729,224,315, and the reduction since March 1, 1877, is $61,553,880. The bonds refunded under the acts of July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871, amounted to $1,390,022,000, on which the annual interest charge was $81,673,947. In place of these bonds there will be issued when the present refunding operations are completed, which will not be later than Aug 1, 1879, bonds on which the annual interest charge will be $61,-765,880, making an annual saving hereafter in interest charge, on account of the refunding operations, of $19,907,001, of which amount $14,297,177 arises from transactions since March 1, 1877. Bonds have been sold for resumption purposes since March 1, 1877, the interest on which represents the annual cost of coin reserve, as follows:

Title of loan.	Rate, p. c.	Amount.	Amount int. charge.
Funded loan of 1891	4½	$65,000,000	$2,925,000
Funded loan of 1907	4	25,000,000	1,000,000
Total		$90,000,000	$3,925,000

Making a net annual saving in interest through the refunding and resumption operations since March 1, 1877, of $10,372,177. In addition to the above bonds, there were issued in 1878, to replace the coin used in payment of the Halifax award, 4 per cent. bonds of 1907 amounting to $5,500,000.

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE RAUM has sent a circular to all Collectors of Internal Revenue in the "moonshine" districts, informing them that, although the usual appropriation for the fees of United States Marshals has not been made by Congress, his office will not relax the efforts to suppress fraud by the seizure of illicit distilleries, and the prosecution of offenders. He directs Collectors to relieve, as much as possible, the Marshal from the embarrassments of his situation, and informs them that he proposes to give the necessary force to execute the laws.

AT the Cabinet meeting held last week the question of the importation of cattle from abroad was considered, and it was decided that such importations heretofore prohibited should be allowed under certain conditions. A circular containing these conditions and other information on the subject will be prepared by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury....The President has appointed Howard M. Kutchin Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District of Wisconsin.

THE Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of Gen. Schofield, commanding at West Point, has dismissed six cadets for hazing.

POLITICAL.

THE Wisconsin Greenback State Convention was held at [illegible] on the 16th of July. Col. E. May, of Vernon county, was nominated for Governor; Col. W. L. Utley, of Racine, for Lieutenant Governor; George W. Lee, of Grant, for Secretary of State; P. F. Griffith, of Oshkosh, for State Treasurer; George B. Goodwin for Attorney General, and Mr. Searle for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The pith of the resolutions adopted by the convention is as follows: They denounce the money despotism that has grown up in this country; demand the payment of the bonds in greenbacks; convict labor to be abolished; the rate of interest on money should not exceed the rate of profit; denounce all efforts of both parties to make a solid South or a solid North; denounce the coinage of gold and silver dollars; the issue of greenbacks may be limited to the demand of trade; demand the abolition of the national banking system; denounce all fusion or coalition with either of the old parties, and invite all honest men to join them; a man may deduct his indebtedness above his credit when listing his property for assessment; the public lands must be kept for actual settlers, and no more grants to corporations....The Greenbackers of Pennsylvania also held their State Convention on the 15th. A full ticket for State offices was nominated, headed by Peter Sutton, a wealthy farmer of Indiana county, for State Treasurer.

THE Pennsylvania Democrats held their State Convention at Harrisburg on the 16th inst. D. O. Barr, of Allegheny county, was nominated for State Treasurer by acclamation. The platform "favors a constitutional currency of gold and silver, and of paper convertible into coin," upholds Congress in its fight with the National Executive, and denounces the latter as an usurper and conspiritor against the people's liberties....The Iowa Prohibitionists met in convention at Cedar Rapids, the other day. After considerable noise and confusion a resolution was adopted that it was inexpedient to make nominations for State offices, and then an adjournment was voted. Subsequently about forty delegates met and nominated the following State ticket: For Governor, Prof. G. T. Carpenter, of Oskaloosa; Lieutenant Governor, Frank S. Campbell, of Newton; Supreme Judge, J. M. Beck; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. J. A. Nash, Des Moines.

WASHINGTON dispatch: A telegram from St. Paul announces that the President has stood by his original intention in offering the position of Secretary of War to ex-Senator Ramsey. The appointment is to take effect when McCrary can assume the Iowa Judgeship. A letter has been received by the President from Ramsey, accepting the office.

CROP PROSPECTS.

SUMMARY OF REPORTS FROM THE ENTIRE COUNTRY TO THE NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Returns to the Department of Agriculture at Washington of the cotton crop show that the condition of June, which was ninety six, has not been maintained, and is, for July 1, ninety-three. Figures indicating the condition compared with June figures are:

	Condition.	Gain.	Loss.
North Carolina	104	6	..
South Carolina	81	..	11
Georgia	86	..	7
Florida	91	..	4
Alabama	90	..	..
Mississippi	92	..	7
Louisiana	93	..	2
Texas	90	..	4
Arkansas	103	3	..
Tennessee	101	7	..

The condition of the other crops is thus stated:

Corn—The area planted in the whole country exceeds that planted last year. Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee show the largest gain in the South. Ohio and Indiana show some decrease, while Illinois increases 7 per cent. The States west of the Mississippi river make the largest gains as a section, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and Missouri all ranging from 104 to 118. The condition in all the Southern States is low, on account of drouth in Texas—not over half a crop. The Northern States show a fair condition, while those west of the Mississippi river show a very high average, over 100.

Tobacco—The acreage for the whole country shows a decrease. In the four States of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, in which the bulk of seed-leaf tobacco is grown, there is an increase in average of about 13 per cent. as compared with 1878. Of the States producing shipping, manufacturing and smoking tobacco, which constitute nine-tenths of all the tobacco grown in the United States, North Carolina alone shows an increase in area planted. All the others indicate material decrease from the acreage of last year. The condition for the whole country is slightly below that of July 1, 1878. Massachusetts alone, of the States bordering on the Atlantic, shows increased condition; and Tennessee, in the West, places her condition at 94, against 89 last year.

Spring Wheat—Returns for July give average condition of spring wheat at 91 against 106 on July 1, 1878. The Northern New England States range nearly up to the average. A few counties in Northern New York average 80. Texas, the only Southern State producing it to any extent, reports but 61. The Northwest spring-wheat States range from 92 to 96, but Iowa falls to 88. The spring-wheat crop of Kansas is but 68. On the Pacific coast most of the California crop is returned as spring wheat, and the average 92. The small spring wheat crop of Oregon is full average. The condition of the crop in the Southwest and Northwest was largely affected by drouth. In some sections the Hessian fly was injurious. In the Northwest local storms were more or less destructive.

Winter Wheat—July returns show an average condition of winter wheat of 91, against 101 on July 1, 1878. The New England States average 99. The crop here was small and late, but promising. Middle States, 86. Complaints of drouth, mildew, Hessian fly and local storms. In the South Atlantic States the condition is 95; stands thinned by winter killing and growths stunted by drouth in many northern counties, but farther down the coast the condition is greatly improved. This section would be a full average but for injuries in Virginia, bringing the State average to 85. Georgia reports 108, with an excellent quality of grain. Commercial authorities report an almost entire cessation of the movement of Northern wheat to Georgia, the local mills finding materials sufficient in their home growth. The Gulf States report an average of 75. The small crops of Alabama and Mississippi are in high condition, but the crop of Texas is a third below the average, through drouth and local storms. Southern inland States, 98; grain of remarkably fair quality generally. States north of the Ohio river, 101; straw short, but grain plump and heads heavy, and greatly improved by recent rains. States west of the Mississippi, 89; injuries by chinch bugs in southern parts, and by storms in northern portions. Pacific States, 108. The winter wheat of Oregon averages 112.

FOREIGN.

A BELGRADE dispatch says the Austro-Hungarian troops are concentrating near Novi-Bazar. It is said that the Albanians are organizing for resistance. Unless the Turks co-operate with the Austrians the consequences will be serious. Traders between Servia and Bosnia have been plundered and killed....A torpedo-boat attached to Admiral Lazareff's frigate, at Cronstadt, Russia, was blown up while at practice. Five men were killed and fourteen wounded, some fatally.

THE French Prince Imperial was buried at Chiselhurst, England, on the 12th inst. The funeral ceremonies were of an unusually solemn and imposing character....A new Italian ministry has been formed, under the presidency of Signor Cairoli, who takes for himself the portfolio of foreign affairs.

GERMANY is about to increase her military establishment because France and Russia have enlarged theirs....A dispatch from Alexandria reports that the Egyptian steamer Samanoot has been lost at sea. She was returning from Mauritius. Twenty-three natives and two Europeans perished....A dispatch from Constantinople represents that the Circassians are terrorizing the district of Adabazar, on the east coast of the Sea of Marmora, by murdering and plundering.

THE Mark Lane Express, in its last review of the British grain crops, says: "In consequence of the continuance of rain, wheat made little if any progress. The ears have already begun to appear. The bulk of the hay remains uncut, or, in cases where it has been cut, has been left lying to rot. In Scotland, crops are fully three weeks behind hand. The pastures are mostly well covered. Potatoes are looking fairly. On the whole, the agricultural prospects there, though far from promising, are less gloomy than in England."....De Lesseps, in a recent speech at Rouen, France, declared that the friendship between France and the United States would facilitate the construction of the Darien canal. He believed the canal would be completed in five or six years.

LARGE numbers of mill operatives are emigrating to America from Lancashire, England, in consequence of the long-continued depression there....The terrible epidemic, diphtheria, continues its ravages in Bessarabia, where a rescript of the Governor is published, ordering the universal fumigation of dwellings and the clothing of the peasantry...A Berlin dispatch says the cholera has made its appearance in Smolensk Russia.

LATE advices from Port-au-Prince, Hayti, state that in consequence of a dispute in the House of Representatives the brother of the President was shot by another member, who took offense at language which had been used. Mons. Canal, though wounded in the arm, returned the fire and shot his opponent. There was then a general firing in the House, and the populace and police outside fired into the building. The President of the Senate, with others, were shot down, and at last accounts the Government troops were raking the streets with a mitrilleuse....Advices from Constantinople state that English influence in the Turkish capital is reviving....The French residents of England will erect a memorial to the Prince Imperial....Bismarck and family have gone to Kissengen.

MATTHEW AND JOHN GUY VASSAR, following in the footsteps of their illustrious predecessor, propose to erect a home for old men on the grounds now occupied by the Vassar mansion, in Poughkeepsie.

WHEN Gov. Foote was going to fight his duel with Prentice, the latter, who had a slight lisp, said to a boy up a tree near the field of honor: "Look out, bub; the Governor shoots wild, and he may hit thee."

EX-GOV. TILDEN'S summer home at Yonkers is known as "Greystone." The grounds cover thirty-three acres, including lawn, meadow and forest. The mansion and grounds, which are leased by Mr. Tilden, cost $400,000.

IT was curious, as showing the newness of Western life, that, at the recent dinner given by the Boston Commercial Club to the Commercial Club of Chicago, Robert T. Lincoln, son of the late President, was the only native-born citizen of Illinois present, and he was a graduate of Harvard.

FIFTY years ago William Lloyd Garrison wrote a letter to a friend, asking a loan of $5, to pay a fine imposed on him for not "training." He says that he is announced to speak on the "Fourth," and that his "knees knock together at the thought of facing so large a concourse;" and he adds: "I expect to get a journeyman's berth immediately after the Fourth; but, if I do not, I shall take the stage to Newburyport, and dig on the case." He was a type-setter then.

WILLIAM TWINING, of South Rutland, N. Y., writes to the Evening Post that he was a classmate with William Cullen Bryant in Williams College. He was obliged to leave college on account of ill-health, but singular as it may appear he is now 90 years of age and without a white hair or bald spot on his head. Young men who are inclined to despair because their health is not good should feel encouraged by the long life of Mr. Twining.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

THE CANTELOUPE.

Its firm and fragrant rind along each fold
Of grayish green reveals a stripe of gold;
And, when the knife is cleaving through the seam,
The fiber gently yields like frozen cream;
Then from the pores the lucent nectar wells
As freshest honey from its broken cells.
There is no fruit that can completely cope
In luscious sweetness with the canteloupe;
If ripe, by these few hints you'll quickly con it;
And, as for dressing—you want nothing on it.

COMMON MAT.—The nicest mat for common use is made of No. 4 six-thread Dexter's crochet cotton.

TO RID A HOUSE OF "PESTS."—If two or three bottles of ammonia, left unstoppered, are put in prominent places in a room they will soon leave. No insects whatever can tolerate it.

TO PROTECT STEEL-WARE FROM RUST—If all steel or tinware is well rubbed with lard and then with common unslacked lime before being put away, it will never rust. This is also the best plan to remove rust.

RASPBERRY JAM.—Use three-fourths of a pound of sugar to every pound of fruit. Put the fruit on alone, or with the addition of one pint of currant juice to every four pounds of raspberries. Boil half an hour, mashing and stirring well; add the sugar, and cook twenty minutes more. Blackberry jam is very good made in the same way, only omitting the currant juice.

TO MAKE MATS FOR THE TABLE.—Take small sticks of black walnut and pine; plane them down to one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness and one-half inch in width. Place them alternately, and glue to a piece of heavy cloth. They can be cut round, square, diamond-shaped, or any other pretty way, and when varnished make quite a pretty ornamental mat.

GRAPE CATCHUP.—The following is a reliable recipe for grape catchup. I can safely promise those that try it a delicious relish for cold meats. We like it on our bread and butter. Four pounds of stewed grapes, boil and rub through a coarse sieve; one scant quart of vinegar; one table-spoonful each of ground cloves, allspice, cinnamon, nutmeg and pepper; one-half table-spoonful of salt. Add the grape pulp and boil until thick.

TO COOK A HAM.—A good way to cook ham is to bake it. Soak about twelve hours. Wash very clean, trimming away any rusty parts. Wipe dry and cover the part not protected with skin with a paste or dough made of flour and hot water. Lay in a dripping-pan, with the paste-covered side upwards, with enough water to keep it from burning. Bake until a fork pierces it easily, allowing about twenty-five minutes to each pound of ham. Baste occasionally with the drippings to prevent the crust of the paste from cracking off. When done peel off this crust and remove the skin of the ham.

DESIGN FOR A CROSS.—I have a pretty design for a cross, made of white straw, which can be obtained at any crockery store. Use six straws, nine or ten inches long, for the upright part; for the cross-piece, five straws, about five inches long, and sew it on diagonally; for the base, commence with one straw, a trifle over four inches long, the one above a little shorter and so on, until you have nine sewed together; fasten to the bottom of the upright part; cut the cross-piece and top diagonal, and ornament with ferns and leaves touched with frost, or vines and flowers. Use black velvet for a background, and frame. The effect is very pleasing.

A RUSTIC HANGING BASKET.—Take three ends of cigar boxes, cut them into triangles, glue them together into shape, paint in some color like bronze, get from the woods grapevines and any pretty rustic things you may find; cut a piece of vine five inches long, bend and glue two inches from point of basket, another piece five inches long, bend the ends together, tie them, glue on the first piece two more short ones to go inside of the first; glue them on the basket crosswise, take two longer ones for the handle, split at both ends, lap on two corners, and glue another for the other corner; tie them together; make a loop of vines to hang by; begin at the edge of the basket; glue on the rustic ornaments; varnish it. I have half a cone at each corner of mine, and in the interstices I put moss.

SOFA CUSHIONS OF AWNING CLOTH.—Take a strip of blue-striped awning cloth, seven or eight inches wide and long enough to go around the middle of a sofa cushion. Baste in the center of the broad stripes black velvet an inch wide, and embroider it down in points on the gold margin with heavy gold-colored floss. Baste in the center of the plain white stripes silk braids of different colors, half an inch wide, and button-hole or catch-stitch them down with contrasting flosses. If the awning cloth has in it hair-lines of the blue, cat-stitch them together with bright floss. On the broad velvet bands embroider stars in white colors, or in two shades of the same color, as dark and pale blue, or green, pink with red, mauve with purple, etc., etc. The beauty of the stripes, when finished will depend upon the taste with which the colors are assorted. The effect ought to be something like that of a Roman scarf. When the stripe is completed, select a shade of stout silk that will contrast well with it, and insert the stripe in the center of it with a narrow band of black velvet between. The silk should be lined with silesia, or something similar, to prevent the feathers from coming through. Stuff the pillow not too hard for comfort, and you have an extremely ornamental, cheerful and useful sofa cushion, such as is not seen every day.

A Lincoln Anecdote.

A Lincoln anecdote is told by a correspondent of the Decatur Sun. While Judge Logan, of Springfield, Ill., was Lincoln's partner, two farmers, who had a misunderstanding respecting a horse trade, went to law. By mutual consent the partners in law became antagonists in this case. On the day of the trial Mr. Logan, having bought a new shirt open in the back, with a huge standing collar, dressed himself in extreme haste, and put on the shirt with the bosom at the back, a linen coat concealing the blunder. He dazzled the jury with his knowledge of "horse points," and, as the day was sultry, took off his coat and summed up in his shirt sleeves. Lincoln, sitting behind him, took in the situation, and when his turn came remarked to the jury: "Gentlemen, Mr. Logan has been trying for over an hour to make you believe that he knows more about a horse than these honest old farmers who are witnesses; he has quoted largely from his 'horse doctor,' and now, gentlemen, I submit to you (here he lifted Logan out of his chair and turned him with his back to the jury and the crowd, at the same time flipping up the enormous standing collar), what dependence can you place in his horse knowledge when he has not sense enough to put on his shirt?" The roars of laughter that greeted this exhibition, and the verdict that Lincoln got soon after gave Logan a permanent prejudice against "bosom shirts."

BOILED MONKEY FOR DINNER.

Some of the Delicacies of the Brazilian Cuisine.

A member of the Philadelphia company which is now engaged in railroad building on the Amazon river has returned, and relates some incidents of life in that region. He says that, when not engaged at railroad labor, the principal business of the population is hunting up the delicacies of the season in the way of food. The company furnish the solids, such as flour and salt beef, but, fruit being a luxury which demands higher prices than are charged in Philadelphia, the epicures have been compelled to venture on the live stock that the forest provides. Tiring of bread and beef as a steady diet, one of the laborers, urged on by a stomach strongly appealing for a change, made a bold break one day from the regular bill of fare and announced that he was going to have boiled monkey as the choice dish of his menu just once anyhow. An accurate shot brought a plump young "monk" tumbling to the ground, and sent a score or two more chattering and squealing into the depth of the forest. Quickly skinned and cleaned, the dispute arose as to how long the game should be cooked, which question was finally settled by an agreement to put the monkey into the pot and let him boil away until it was decided by test that he was done. The first test was made after an hour's steady boiling. The cook picked the animal out with a long, two-pronged fork, and after more than one attempt sliced off a piece from the upper part of the leg. Chopping it into pieces, he handed one to the nearest diner. Placing it between his teeth, he chewed and chewed and chewed in vain, and then brought it forth from his mouth, and, holding it for a moment in his hand, cast it on the ground with the single remark: "Gum boots." The monkey returned to the boiler at once, where he remained for another sixty minutes, and the second tasting brought him out tender and juicy—that is, tender and juicy for a monkey—and, by dint of active mastication and a lively imagination, he passed as a delicate side-dish. Several more attempts and a little more practice and experience in monkey cuisine developed the fact that, with the meat chopped fine and stewed with a flour thickening, a palatable Brazilian-Irish stew could be manufactured out of the ingredients at hand. Flushed with this first success in the experimental culinary line, parrots were next tried, and, after repeated attempts at roasting, boiling and stewing, were found to be edible, although somewhat strong in flavor. With monkey, parrot, the company's provender and plenty of large fish, which are caught by spearing or shooting barbed arrows with cord attached, the settlers are enabled to exist in comparative comfort, working and eating being about the only amusements they have.

CHARLES FOSTER, Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio, is an active gleaner of sequins. In Fostoria, which takes its name from him, he is a banker, a dealer in general merchandise, in grain, and in hardware, and a partner in a spoke factory and barrel factory. He Fosters all these different interests.

CHICAGO has a Bald Men's Society. A requisite for membership is a bare spot on top of the head not less than four square inches in extent. The object of the organization is to discover a cure for baldness. The President has not a hair on his head, and was elected for that reason.

CÆSARISM.

The "Man on Horseback" in the United States.

[From the International Review.]

It was Caleb Cushing who first used this now familiar phrase. It is a brief and pithy expression of the prevailing theory that free institutions, by a law of their being, lead to despotism; with the added suggestion that the republic of the United States is already very near that end. More than this, it points at one particular form of despotism—"Cæsarism"—as the inevitable fate of this nation.

Into the merits of the theory itself it is not worth while to enter, further than to remark that the Swiss republic has been in the prosperous enjoyment of free institutions for over 500 years, and shows no signs as yet of falling under despotic rule. Switzerland is, however, a very small republic, and the United States a very large one; and it has always been remarked that the difficulties of free government increase immensely with the increased size of the nation. At any rate, there are examples enough of republics, large and small, ending in despotism.

Another point to be observed is that, when we come to scrutinize more closely, we find, after all, only one clear example in history which corresponds to the anticipated American "man on horseback." Cromwell and Napoleon, favorite illustrations, took republics which had hardly entered upon their existence, before they had in any degree developed republican temper and habits, and restored the former government to which the people were already used, and which was still fresh in their memories. So with the failure of the South American republics. They started with no traditions or habits of republican institutions. The republics of ancient Greece were overthrown by external force. The tyrannies of early Greece come nearer to the required type; but they superseded narrow and oppressive oligarchies, in the interest, not of the lower classes as such, but of the fresh democratic and industrial life of the age.

Cæsar himself is the only conspicuous example of the Cæsarism which is expected to befall this republic. It would require an elaborate comparison of institutions and circumstances to warrant any conclusion as to whether we are or are not prepared for the deserved fate of the great Roman republic. There is, however, one point to which attention may well be directed. The Romans had the utmost abhorrence for the name of King; they, nevertheless, conferred the royal authority, almost undiminished, upon the Chief Magistrate of the republic. So did the framers of our constitution, for the matter of that, take the English Kingship as the model for the Presidential office; and, in both cases, the royal authority of the republican magistrates was more or less attenuated, in the course of time, by the progress of events. But there is this difference: With us the externals of royalty were more speedily got rid of. It is hardly an exaggeration to speak of the "Republican Court" of Washington and Adams; but Jefferson cast away all the circumstance of office and introduced a studied simplicity of style, which has since sometimes been carried to downright vulgarity.

The Roman Consul, on the other hand, was always a King. He wore the royal purple, and was attended by the royal body-guard. There was in Rome nothing of the servility of Eastern monarchies; but the observance of the formalities due to sovereign authority were never forgotten, even in the times of wildest radicalism. The Roman Consul walking in state from his house to the Senate, clad in royal robes, preceded by lictors to clear his passage, and attended by a throng of noblemen and citizens of lower rank—this picture hardly needs to be altered in any detail to adapt it to the Emperors of the early empire.

For in truth it is just in these externals that the essence of monarchy consists; that is to say, of the decent constitutional monarchy of the present day. As Mr. Bagehot has very well shown, it is upon the undefined influences that surround the person of a monarch that the success of constitutional monarchy must mainly depend. And these are not things that can be created.

But the "man on horseback" has no need of these. Very true. If Cæsarism is ever set up on the ruins of the American constitution, its court and its state will not be those of Queen Victoria, but of "King" Stephano; our Augustus will not be surrounded by Agrippas and Maecenases, Messalas and Pollios—it will be Boss Shepherds and Belknaps, Babcocks and Ben Butlers; or, at best, Chandlers and Mortons, who will compose the new court. We have no material for any other monarchy than such.

When Americans of the upper class fall to lamenting the degeneracy of the republic, as they sometimes do, and to wishing for some form of princely rule, one cannot help applying to them the words that Cicero addressed to one class of Catiline's partisans: "Quod si jam id quod cupiunt adepti, num illi se consules ac dictatores aut etiam reges secrant futuros? Non vident id se cupere, quod si adepti sint, fugitivo [defaulter] alicui aut gladiatori [swashbuckler] concedi sit necesse?" No "swallow-tails," and none of "them literary fellers" need apply.

When Cæsar, Cromwell, and Napoleon established monarchies in the place of republics they took to themselves an authority which was at bottom only the type of authority that existed before, somewhat transformed in its outward characteristics. The "man on horseback" in the United States will do nothing of the sort. He will set up by intrigue and violence a rule which will have absolutely nothing in common with the Government organized by our fathers, which will be vulgar through and through—steeped in corruption, political and social.

We must look somewhere else, then, than to the "man on horseback" for the form of despotism which is likely, if any, to triumph over our republican institutions; it must be something which not only carries on the traditions of the republic, but is built directly upon the principle of authority which has prevailed under the republic. This authority, all will admit, is party. According to our unwritten constitution party is the highest authority in the land. Neither the express provisions of the organic law, nor the honor and welfare of our country, nor the fundamental principles of free government, are ever allowed to stand in the way of the interests of party. Nor is it ever admitted in practice, hardly even in theory, that the Government has any duties toward any but members of the party which it represents.

A party, under our political system, is an association of persons who combine together for the purpose of conducting the Government. Some common political principles or points of policy are convenient for the purpose of keeping a party together, and especially of attracting voters; but these are noways essential. Nothing is more common than for persons, even those occupying high and influential positions, to subordinate entirely their private opinions, whether as to men or doctrines, and to give their assent to measures to which they had before been entirely opposed. Thus, when the Democratic party accepted Horace Greeley as its candidate in 1872, and the Republican party declared in favor of civil-service reform in 1879, it was evident that the sole object, in both cases, was to enable the party to get possession of the machinery of government.

From these two well-established facts—that party is the highest authority in the land, and that the sole object of party is the possession and management of the machinery of government—it necessarily follows that the only department of governmental action which is of any importance or value is administration. A further consequence is that Congress, which was primarily a legislative body, and which still attends occasionally to the business of law-making, has found it expedient to devote most of its energies to the details of administration; in this way relieving the Executive of a considerable share of its burdens, and making sure that the interest of party shall not be sacrificed, even in the most trifling matters.

Under the system of government thus developed the men of mark and influence will, of course, be the men of administrative ability—whether it is a strong masculine power to control other men or skill in finesse and intrigue. What used to be called statesmanlike qualities—knowledge of the principles of government and of the interests and needs of the country, and the capacity to adapt measures to desired ends—qualities that are useful in legislation—are no longer in demand; any attempt at legislation beyond what is called for by the needs of the party is an impertinence. It was a small number of men of this administrative type, distinguished for vigorous executive qualities, which, under the name of the "Senatorial group," virtually ruled the country under the last administration.

When it is said that "a party is an association of persons" it should be carefully borne in mind that it is not necessarily a large number of persons. The great majority of the so-called members of the party are attached to it only for purposes of voting, since this is, by the special form of government machinery established by our constitution, an essential part of the process. The party, however, in the true sense of the word, is composed exclusively of those few men of special taste and ability for administration who are represented in the National Government by the "Senatorial group," and in the lesser public divisions by men of the same type who are candidates for this higher position, and from whom, by successive siftings, the real rulers of the country are derived.

It is not hard, therefore, to see what form of government is likely to rule this country if republicanism breaks down, and if, as seems probable, the "man on horseback" should not prove to be an institution adapted to our customs and national temper. The "Senatorial group" affords an example of the kind of oligarchy which is likely, under these circumstances, to come into power. It will be an oligarchy of men of marked executive ability, especially skillful in the details of party machinery, occupying seats in the national Senate (which body may be regarded as the repository of the chief authority in the nation), and recruited from time to time from the several States and lesser communities by a national process of selection. It will be a developed and organized form of that "boss Government" with which this country has of late years become familiar.

It might seem that we had omitted the most essential element of a legitimate Government—the source and sanction of power. The "man on horseback" builds his authority on brute force; the constitutional King derives his, in the last resort, from popular sentiment; and the same thing may be said of the head of a republican Government, such as ours professes to be. But the oligarchy described above needs none of these. Our party system already possesses a method for the transmission and retention of power, perfected, or nearly so, by a long series of experiments, which it has applied on the largest scale and with the happiest results. In this method popular suffrage plays an essential but by no means a controlling part. With few improvements in detail, it will be wholly within the power of such a group of statesmen, when once in possession of the Government, to secure themselves against being deprived of their authority by any change in popular sentiment, however great. The boldness and thoroughness with which this method has already been carried into execution on one occasion, and the warm approval with which the best citizens greeted its success, on the ground that a change of the party in power, even by the popular will, would be disastrous to the best interests of the country, are facts of the best augury for its success in the future. That the result was, on the whole, a disappointment to the managers, is due merely to some slight defects in the details of the method; we may feel very sure that no such mistake will be made in future.

Who will venture to say that the condition of things here described as possible is not already imminent? Three years ago there seemed to be a popular uprising against the rule of the oligarchy; there was, indeed, a gentle sentiment of disgust and indignation at its misgovernment. In terror the politicians themselves raised the cry of civil-service reform; Saul, also, became one of the prophets. The "Senatorial group" seemed ready to disperse and disappear as its patron left the Presidential chair; its ablest and most intrepid leader died; several of its members were contumeliously dismissed from public life, and the demoralized remainder hid themselves in harbors of refuge and sulkily bided their time.

It must be confessed that the time has not been long in coming. Events have shown how powerless is the popular will against a united and unscrupulous cabal. The new President, at heart fully in sympathy with the movement for reform, has not shown himself able to carry it out successfully. And now, after three years, the mention of civil-service reform only excites derision; three of the most obnoxious of the dismissed members of the "Senatorial group" have smilingly resumed their seats, in token that all Puritanical notions have been laid aside, and that harmony is re-established in the party; and all things are in preparation to give us again as President the man under whose administration all these abuses culminated before. Has the party, indeed, in all these years produced a single statesman with unequivocal qualifications for the place, so that he could be nominated instead with any hope of success?

Meanwhile the American people are tired and discouraged. Twice have they been cheated by the politicians out of what seemed a hopeful promise of reform; with what assurance can they be called on for a third effort? They thoroughly despise the present order of things, as is shown by the contempt with which the politicians as a class are regarded; and yet they follow these very politicians like a flock of sheep. What wonder that the leaders are shameless and defiant, when they feel sure that all talk and criticism will cease on election day? Little they care for indignation and contempt, so long as the offices are secure; aderint dum probent is their motto; "disapprove as much as you like, only give us your votes." So long as this is the spirit in which men vote, the rule of the oligarchy is secure; for the highest allegiance is to party, and they are the party.

Truth for All Times.

"When men vote, and when their chosen officers meet to conduct the affairs of their political Governments, no soldiers can interfere. This limit to their antagonisms no political party can safely pass."

So said William M. Evarts, at a mass meeting of the people of New York, a dozen years ago, when as yet he had never dreamed of linking his political fortunes with those of the then unknown man Hayes.

"An armed force in the neighborhood of the polls is almost of necessity a menace to the voters and an interference with their freedom and independence."

So said Geo. W. McCrary, in his book on elections, before he had lent himself to Hayes.

"Civil liberty and a standing army for the purposes of civil police have never yet stood together, and never can stand together."

So said William H. Seward, speaking with the same wholesome abhorrence of military interference with the rights of the citizen which led the founders of our Government to subscribe within the narrowest limits both the size and the functions of the regular army.

But we now see Hayes, in his vetoes, marching beyond that limit in party maneuvers which Mr. Evarts once declared unsafe to pass; insisting on that right of using troops at the polls which Mr. McCrary declared to be a menace to the independence of voters; and intending to make the use of a standing army as a police which Mr. Seward declared to be incompatible with the continuance of liberty.—New York Sun.

Underground Curiosities.

At the city of Medina, in Italy, and about four miles around it, wherever the earth is dug, whenever the workmen arrive at a distance of sixty-two feet, they come to a bed of chalk which they bore with an auger, five feet deep. They then withdraw from the pit before the auger is removed, and upon its extraction the water bursts up through the aperture with great violence, and quickly fills the newly-made well, which continues full, and is affected neither by rains nor drought. But what is the most remarkable in this operation is the layers of earth as we descend. At the depth of fourteen feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, paved streets, houses, floors and different pieces of mason work. Under this is found a soft, oozy earth, made up of vegetable, and, at twenty-six feet, large trees entire, such as walnut trees, with the walnuts still sticking to the stem, and the leaves and branches in a perfect state of preservation. At twenty-eight feet deep a soft chalk is found, mixed with a vast quantity of shells, and the bed is eleven feet thick. Under this vegetables are found again.

PHILADELPHIA has an ordinance against the sale of oysters in summer, and an Oysterman's Protective Association, that employs detectives to get evidence against offenders.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Advice to a Gentleman on the Subject of Health.

[Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms.]

The first great secret of good health is good habits, and the next is regularity of habits. They are briefly summed up in the following rules:

SLEEP.

Give yourself the necessary amount of sleep. Some men require five hours of the twenty-four; others need eight. Avoid feather beds. Sleep in a garment not worn during the day. To maintain robust health sleep with a person as healthy as yourself, or no one.

DRESS.

In cold weather, dress warmly with underclothing. Remove muffler, overcoat, overshoes, etc., when remaining any considerable length of time in a warm room. Keep your feet warm and dry. Wash them in warm water two or three times a week. Wear warm stockings, large boots and overshoes when in the snow or wet. Wear a light covering on the head; always keeping it cool.

CLEANLINESS.

Have always a pint or quart of water in your sleeping-room. In the morning, after washing and wiping hands and face, then wet with the hands every part of the body. Cold water will not be disagreeable when applying it with the bare hands. Wipe immediately; follow by brisk rubbing over the body. The whole operation need not take over five minutes. The result of this wash is the blood is brought to the surface of the skin and made to circulate evenly throughout the body. You have opened the pores of the skin, allowing impurities in the body to pass off, and have given yourself in the operation a good, vigorous morning exercise. Pursue this habit regularly and you will seldom take cold.

INFLATION OF THE LUNGS.

Five minutes spent in the open air after dressing, inflating the lungs by inhaling as full a breath as possible, and pounding the breast during the inflation, will greatly enlarge the chest, strengthen the lung power and effectually ward off consumption.

DIET.

If inclined to be dyspeptic, avoid mince pie, sausage, and other highly-seasoned food. Beware of eating too freely of soups; better to eat food dry enough to employ the natural saliva of the mouth in moistening it. If inclined to over-eat, partake freely of rice, cracked wheat and other articles that are easily digested. Eat freely of ripe fruit, and avoid excessive use of meats. Eat at regular hours, and lightly near the hour of going to bed. Eat slowly; thoroughly masticate the food. Do not wash it down with continual drink while eating. Tell your funniest stories while at the table and for an hour afterward. Do not engage in severe mental labor directly after hearty eating.

EXERCISE.

Exercise, not too violent, but sufficient to produce a gentle perspiration, should be had each day in the open air.

CONDITION OF MIND.

The condition of the mind has much to do with health. Be hopeful and joyous. To be so avoid business entanglements that may cause perplexity and anxiety. Keep out of debt. Live within your income. Attend church. Walk, ride, mix in jovial company. Do as nearly right as you know how. Thus conscience will always be at ease. If occasionally disappointed, remember that there is no rose without a thorn, and that the darkest clouds have a silver lining; that sunshine follows storm and beautiful spring succeeds the dreary winter. Do your duty, and leave the rest to God, who doeth all things well.

Gen. Grant to Remain Abroad Another Year.

From a private letter received from Gen. Grant it is evident that his change of movements has been brought about by the accounts he has received of the officious intentions of some of the individuals who fastened themselves upon his administration, and whom he found it difficult to shake off. These same parties, he has been informed, intend to obtrude themselves upon the public by tendering him a reception, and against which he expresses the greatest aversion. He has, therefore, made up his mind rather to exile himself until after the Republican nomination is made for President than to submit to such an annoyance. He states that, though he has everywhere been received with the greatest consideration, and more so than, he felt, as an ex-official, he had a right to expect, he was extremely anxious to return home as soon and as quietly as possible; but, in view of the super-serviceable zeal of some parties, whose acquaintance had not justified the confidence reposed in them, he has determined to sacrifice his own wishes and remain abroad. He expects that his Australian tour, and possibly a voyage along the west coast of South America, the isthmus, and Mexico, will consume the period between the present and the early part of June next, by which time he expects the excitement incident to a Presidential nomination will be over. He, however, is much gratified at the tone of the leading Republican and Independent journalists of the country in condemning as they do the machinations of these people, as he thinks a political movement inspired and operated by such influences could only bring the party into discredit and throw it on the defensive; that it was important for the party to purge itself of such material rather than encourage it. The General has not forgotten the kind offices of his real friends, and the step which he has now taken has been as much out of deference to them as a matter of personal relief to himself. He feels that by this course he can make that discrimination between those who have been worthy of his confidence and those who have betrayed him for their own selfish purposes.—Washington Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Russian Method.

One of the objects of interest at the present moment to the lounger in the Strand, London, is a copy of an English newspaper displayed in a window in the condition it reached a subscriber in Russia, after passing through the hands of the Russian authorities. An article on Russia is entirely obliterated. The manner in which the Russian authorities manage these things is wonderfully simple and effectual. They take a printer's roller, covered with printer's ink, and run it up and down the objectionable columns till not a word can be deciphered.

INDIANA ITEMS.

MRS. JOHN HUNTLEY, Vincennes—kindled fire with kerosene—can scarcely recover.

GOV. WILLIAMS is planning an extended Western tour at the close of his official term.

ELIJAH MUNSEY, of Liberty township, was killed by damp in a well, and his brother came near suffering a like fate.

A SEVERE wind and rain storm visited the central part of Hamilton county last week, doing considerable damage to crops.

ARTEMUS RICKER, a soldier of the war of 1812, born in 1793, died at his residence, five miles above Brookville, recently.

THE blue-ribbon men of Cloverdale are arranging for a monster picnic on the occasion of their second anniversary, in August.

MR. WILEY BURNES, one of the pioneers of Indiana, aged 86, living four miles south of Martinsville, has died suddenly.

MOSES TURNER, one of the old residents of Ohio county—he is 88—was sunstruck the other day. His recovery is doubtful.

A MR. LAMBERT, of Clinton township, Steuben county, has killed 500 snakes on his farm this year. Forty-four of them were rattlesnakes.

ROBERT HENLY, one of the leading citizens of Rush county, who resided at Carthage, has died from injuries received from a reaper.

A FAMILY at New Albany were poisoned by drinking lemonade which had been made with tartaric acid. Medical aid was summoned and the proper antidotes used.

REV. R. F. BREWINGTON, who has filled the position of chaplain of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Knightstown for the past six years, resigned a few days ago to resume his ministerial labors.

TWO FINE club-houses have been built this season at Lake Maxinkuckee, and handsomely furnished. There have also been two or three fine sail-boats put on this lake. The two clubs have already expended about $5,000.

JOHN A. FINCH, who has been appointed President of the Commission to prepare an Insurance Code for the State, has issued a circular asking for information and suggestions. The Attorney General and Auditor of State are the other members.

MISS ALLIE SCANLIN, daughter of a Sullivan county farmer, living near Carlisle, drives the team that draws the reaper in her father's harvest-fields, and Miss Driemond, a German girl, living near Freelandsville, Knox county, earns a man's wages by following the reaper as a binder.

WHILE shooting fish near New Haven, Cyrus B. Overmeyer was shot and fatally wounded by a revolver in the hands of a companion named Foster. Overmeyer was about 18 years old, the son of a widow. Foster was arrested and held for examinations though the shooting is supposed to have been accidental.

A FAMOUS frog-catcher lives at Fort Wayne. His name is John Martin. He first began the business at Logansport, but now lives at Fort Wayne. He used to catch from 2,000 to 5,000 frogs in one trip from Logansport to Defiance, Ohio. He would ship the frogs from there to Cincinnati, and receive from 25 to 75 cents per dozen.

CHARLES WORCH, a Pan-Handle train dispatcher from Richmond, went to Hilliard's station, Ohio, to see his sweetheart, and while sitting on the sofa beside her she discovered a revolver in his pocket. Taking it into her hands, she playfully pointed the muzzle with the usual result. The ball entered his head, producing a very dangerous wound.

THE seventh annual convention of the International Grand Branch of the Emerald Beneficial Association convened in Indianapolis last week. About twenty-five delegates were in attendance, each delegate representing 1,000 members. The following are the States represented: Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Canada and Missouri.

AT Sullivan, this State, recently, William Page was taken in to the amount of $400 by signing what was apparently a printed remonstrance against the building of the narrow-gauge railroad. It turned out to be a note. Also, T. Empson and John Manuel for smaller amounts. John Lillie also signed what was apparently a receipt for some washing machine left in his care, but which turned out to be a note for $180.

A FULLY-DEVELOPED case of leprosy exists near Salem. Her name is Chriseson, and she lives twelve miles north of that place. Her skull in places has actually decayed away, so that the brains have protruded and been removed. The bones of the leg have gradually decayed until they are only from one-quarter to one-third their natural size. She is, as it were, a walking pestilence. The physicians say that it is a real case of leprosy. The unfortunate person has been a resident of that county for nearly thirty years.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Senator Burnside on His Resolution—A Canal Across the Isthmus Under Foreign Control Hostile to American Interests.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Any talk with Senator Burnside on public affairs at this time naturally comes very soon to the subject of the resolution which he introduced in the Senate just before the adjournment, reaffirming the Monroe doctrine and applying it to the Isthmus canal project. Such was the case with a conversation between the Rhode Island Senator and a Tribune representative which took place at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Gen. Burnside said, in reply to a question as to his purpose in offering the resolution:

"When I presented it to the Senate there was a possibility of a further prolongation of the session, and I thought there would be an opportunity to debate the question. My idea was to give early notice to the European projectors of a canal across the isthmus that the American people regard their movement as an intrusion upon territory which should properly be under American influence, and will inevitably come under American control at some time in the future. Whether the canal be built by a foreign Government or by the individual subscriptions of foreigners, it would be antagonistic to the interests of the United States. Before any money is spent in the organization of a French company, the employment of engineers, and so forth, it is but fair that we should give notice of the views we entertain upon the subject. A passage between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, across territory which must of necessity look to us for its future good order and industrial progress, must not be in the hands of Europeans."

"Do you think the money could be raised in this country to construct the canal?" "When there is need of the canal to advance American interests the Government can loan its credit for its construction, just as it has in the past to facilitate other important national enterprises. Just now there is a strong prejudice against Government subsidies, but it will not last always. When important commercial and political interests of a strictly national character are at stake, this feeling will disappear. I am by no means certain, however, that a canal need be opened. Assuredly there is no imperative necessity for one at this time. We shall soon have two additional lines of railroad across the continent—making three in all—and the facilities for transportation between the Atlantic and Pacific will be ample. Why should we allow a large share of this transportation to be taken away from American railroads and given to English, French, and German vessel-owners?"

"What do you think of Capt. Eads' plan for a marine railway across the isthmus?" "I read his letter in the Tribune with great interest. I am not an admirer of Capt. Eads' course in connection with legislation at Washington, but I believe he is a great engineer. His project for a railway which could be built with American capital as a commercial enterprise should be carefully considered. The possibility of such a plan's succeeding is an additional reason why we should discourage the French canal scheme in its incipiency."

"You evidently think it the manifest destiny of this republic to acquire all the territory down to the isthmus." "I certainly do. Nothing is plainer than that the natural course of events will lead to the absorption of Mexico and the Central American States. American energy will seek an outlet in that direction, and the native populations, which cannot sustain orderly government themselves, will come under the control of the superior race. Nothing our Government can do on the border will secure peace and order in Mexico. You might as well try to manage a mule by taking hold of his hind leg. Mexico is an unruly animal, and we must take her by the head."

"How could we assimilate such a mass of turbulent, alien people with our system of government?" "That brings up the common objection to territorial expansion. I reply that I see nothing in our constitution which makes it essential that we should create new States immediately out of all the new territory we may acquire. There is no reason why we should not control by a protectorate large territories outside of the States. There is nothing in our system of government antagonistic to such an arrangement."

"Would it not be difficult to control these alien populations if we should take them under our protecting care?" "Not at all. The superior race would soon introduce its laws and institutions. Look at the case of New Mexico. It had as bad a population when we annexed it as any part of old Mexico. Do we hear of any revolutions there now? The people are orderly and law-abiding. I know something personally of their former character and their present condition. I accompanied, as Quartermaster, the expedition which surveyed the boundary line under the Gaudalupe Hidalgo treaty, and after the war I commanded the Military Department including New Mexico."

"To come back to the immediate topic of the canal. You have spoken of detriment to our commercial interests. What of the military and naval side of the question? In case the canal were opened, could not any strong naval power with which we might be at war send its ships from stations in the West Indies to seize the work, and then dispatch an expedition to ravage our Pacific coast, which we could only defend by sending vessels around Cape Horn?" "That is plain. But there are so many reasons why we should not allow foreigners to construct the canal that it is hardly necessary to specify them. It is enough to say that it would be highly detrimental to our interests as a nation for a canal under foreign control to be opened across the isthmus, and that we will not permit such an undertaking to be carried out. Our Government should give formal notice to this effect before the business goes any further."

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

It is said that a new democratic paper is soon to be started in Chicago, with Manton Marble as editor-in-chief.

Sleepy Tom, the celebrated pacer has recently been sold for $6,000. It is expected that Tom will pace in 2:12 before winter.

Has it occurred to our democratic friends over in Marshall county, that Hon. Dan. McDonald would make a strong candidate for Governor?

Wm. Chandler says the Grant boom is dead. "Billy" concludes that "old Zach" is a good subject for a boss boom and accordingly submits his name for presidential honors. Zachariah will never be president.

A new publication intended as an advertising medium for Gen. Grant, is now being published in monthly parts by the American News company. The work consists of the letters written by John Russell Young, who is accompanying Grant around the world.

It is rumored that ex-Senator Ramsey of Minnesota has been tendered the office of Secretary of war, by Hayes. The change will not occur until Mr. McCrary retires from his present position to fill the office made vacant by the resignation of Judge Dillon of the eighth United States Judicial Circuit.

A large number of prominent lawyers from all parts of the state met at Indianapolis on Tuesday last, and organized a state bar association. Judges Best and McClellan of DeKalb were among the number present. Judge Lowry of Fort Wayne, was elected president.

Thirty-two horses shipped from Richmond, Ind., some time ago, arrived at Havre, France, last Sunday. The horses were inspected for the French cavalry, and accepted at prices ranging from $230 to $270. It is thought that a small reduction in freights will soon assure large shipments of American horses for the French army, and will be the entering wedge of another element of export from the United States.

Senator Voorhees arrived at his home in Terre Haute, last Saturday, and was received at the depot by the Ringgold Band and Governor's Guard, by which organization he was escorted to the Terre Haute house. At halfpast one o'clock that afternoon Mr. Voorhees was serenaded at the hotel, and in response to a call, mounted a buggy in front of the hotel, and addressed the crowd for half an hour.

The radical party of Ohio is calling upon republicans everywhere to donate to the campaign fund. Charley Foster recently visited Pittsburgh, Penn. and the result was a levy by the heads of all the departments, as follows, United States Post-office Department, $5,000; Custom-house and United States Courts, $1,000; Internal Revenue Department, $1,000; Alleghany Courts and offices, $5,000; Pittsburg City Covernment, $1,000.

James H. Woodward, the Cincinnati Enquirer's "Jayhawker" recently sent in a communication from Peru, Ind., showing up certain delinquent county officials in Miami county. Last week's Peru Sentinel published by Sam. F. Winter, contained a denial, and undertook to show "Jayhawker" up in a style which only Sam. is capable of doing. "Jayhawker" proceeded to Peru on Saturday and caused Winter to be arrested under the Grubbs libel law, and will institute a $20,000 damage suit. Sam. has the grit to find out what the said libel law amounts to.

Advices from Memphis show an increase of the plague. New cases are reported every day, and deaths are frequent. The inhabitants are departing from the city as rapidly as possible, that being the only guarantee of safety. Business for this season is suspended, a great many of the merchants are removing their goods to other cities, some of them say, they will never return to Memphis. Other cities have quarantined for protection against the sweep of the terrible epidemic. Louisville and Nashville have each had a death, in both cases the persons were fugitives from Memphis. Concerning the cause of the reappearance of the plague this season, the Chicago News says, "As the truth is developed about the cause of the new outbreak of yellow fever at Memphis, the infernal carelessness of the city authorities is made manifest. It appears that sinks, vaults, drains, sewers, were left uncleansed of the filth contributed to them by the pestilence of last summer. The criminal laziness of the people would not permit them to act for themselves. As a result, there is a return of the yellow fever, and the health of the country is once more placed in jeopardy."

Perhaps Winfield S. Hancock for President and John Kelly for Vice President may constitute the democratic ticket. Who knows?

Still we do not think the chance of the nomination of these two distinguished democrats is sufficiently definite at present to require that the one should resign the rank of Major-General in the Army of the United States and the other the office of comptroller of the city of New York. It is too soon for that.

Meanwhile these two names are considerably in the speech of democrats.—New York Sun.

There is no disputing the fact that the two gentlemen named are above reproach, each standing high in the estimation of the people; yet, there are other men equally as popular, personally and politically, and who have the advantage of representing western sentiment and western interests, which we imagine will be of some weight in the next nominating convention. While the Sun and other eastern papers are suggesting eastern men for both the head and tail of the ticket western papers should be as zealously advocating western men for both places. If New York and Pensylvania, adjoining states, combine for the purpose of nominating an eastern ticket, then the west has the same right to demand that both places be filled by western men. Perhaps Hendricks and Ewing would make a strong combination.

It has been suspicioned for several months, that Agnes Jenks, John Sherman's female liar, has been drawing pay as a clerk in the Treasury Department, but as she never was seen doing any work, it was not certain that such was the case, until a republican department clerk published the following card in a Washington newspaper.

"It may be news to your numerous readers that Agnes Jenks, the female from Louisiana, whose capacity for perjury was so signally exhibited by the examination of Gen Butler during the Potter committee investigation of the presidential steal, holds a sinecure position under John Sherman in the Treasury Department building, which pays her $1,800 per annum. Any day she can be seen flaunting up and down the principal corridors of the Treasury building. Occasionally she visits Secretary Carl Schurz, by whom she is received with seeming delight and friendliness. Evidently John Sherman was afraid that Agnes Jenks would make an affidavit that she perjured herself when she testified that she dictated the letter that John Sherman undoubtedly wrote to Weber and Anderson. Hence the $1,800 per annum sinecure. Sherman has made the Treasury a refuge and place of reward for nearly all the scoundrels who assisted him to steal the presidency. Even the telegraphic operators who transmitted and received the criminal messages that passed between the republican managers and their agents in South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon during the period between November, 1876, and March, 1877–the dispatches subsequently stolen by Bullock, now United States Consul in Europe—are to be seen there in possession of places intended to padlock their mouths and paralyze their memories in the event of their being required to testify before an investigating committee of congress. But the presence of Agnes Jenks was necessary to make the disgusting spectacle complete. Yet this identical John Sherman expects to be the republican presidential candidate in 1880. A REPUBLICAN.

Conway Repudiated.

The extremely stalwart Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, which has all along advised the northern people to give Conway all the money he wants for his armed invasion of the lower Mississippi Valley, has followed the example of the Boston Stalwart organs, and repudiates the great American philanthropist thus:

"Gen. Thomas W. Conway's thoroughly ill-advised and mischievous scheme for bringing away colored emigrants from the southern states on steamers chartered for the purpose, never had much vitality anyway, but it is satisfactory to know that its total collapse is near at hand. The scheme was mischievous because it was controlled by men of dubious reputation whose latter conduct proves that they were seeking notoriety and self-interest rather than the welfare of the colored people, and because by the nature of the case it was bound to inflame the passions of the entire white population of the cotton states without doing the blacks any real service. It has collapsed simply for want of gas. The negroes have gone back to work. There are no parties camped on the banks awaiting Conway's armed transports to take them to the happy land of Canaan, and subscriptions to the 'fund' have dwindled down to almost nothing."

The Republicans who have been indorsing Conway knew perfectly well that he was lying about the "millions" of negroes "crowding, bleeding and fainting" along the banks of the Lower Mississippi, yet they encouraged the scoundrel, and gave currency to his stories for the purpose of stirring up the northern people. The attempt failed, because stalwart yarns about "slaughtered negroes" are coldly received in the north now, and are not credited. The reflecting people of the north see that the negroes could not acquire property as they do, and that south could not produce so largely, if the whole region is a scene of bloodshed. The republican editors are also confronted by the fact that Conway, their former idol, is a thief and a swindler. Ex-Senator Alcorn, of Mississippi, a prominent republican, said with reference to Conway and the negroes, recently:

"I think he will have no trouble in getting as many negroes as he wants. Why, I tell you that the negro is such a credulous creature, so emotional and so fond of moving about, that if they should bring a steam-boat down to Friar's Landing, which is near my plantation, and proclaim that transportation was free to Kansas, the promised land, and rations plenty, I verily believe that three-fourths of my people would run out and go. Why, they have come to me all excited and asked me if it was true that land was being given away in Kansas, and all the while I have had a standing offer of alternate sections of forty acres of as good land as I have on my plantations to any man, white or black, who will take it and settle on it. But, bless you, not one of them will take it. They will go wild over rumors of free lands in Kansas, and are absolutely too shiftless to take twenty times as good land in Mississippi, where they are used to the soil and the crops, and the climate suits them. Of course, the land is unimproved, as it is in Kansas, but you can not get the negro to improve it. He will not build himself a house, and he will not cut down trees. He is like a child. You have got to provide everything for him. Why, there are 2,000,000 of acres of government land in my state open to preemption under the homestead act, and 20,000,000 of state lands which have lapsed for nonpayment of taxes, and can be had on payment of the taxes, or for about twenty-five cents per acre, and they include some of our best lands, which will produce a bale and a half of cotton to the acre if improved and cultivated. I mean to say that for twenty-five cents an acre any quantity of land can be obtained in Mississippi which will grow 600 pounds of cotton to the acre, worth, at present prices, $60."

Alcorn is an old planter and knows what he is talking about. That the negroes are not hindered from doing as they please about emigrating is evident from the fact that several hundred of them, not long ago, left for Kansas on the New Orleans and Chicago railroad with bogus transportation tickets and little flags on which were printed the words, "Good for sixty acres in Kansas." Alcorn, to show the credulity of the negroes, said: "When Ames ran against me for governor his managers got out an order dated at Washington, printed on official-looking paper, with a great yellow seal attached, and purporting to be from U. S. Grant, ordering them to vote for Ames, and thousands of them voted for him on the strength of it. When Ames was elected the negroes on my place, just as good, kind, honest old fellows as ever was, went around staking off my place. They thought, you know, that my place was to be confiscated and divided among them. They were each to have their forty acres and a mule."

It is, of course, easy to entice these creatures with such misrepresentations as are put forth by Senator Windom, Conway and other stalwarts engaged in this disreputable business. That Senator Windom, who claims to be a gentleman, should get down to such dirty work, only proves the desperate condition of his party and the degrading nature of all its schemes to retain power.—Courier-Journal.

Consumption Cured

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and using, in German, French, or English. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y. 8 cow 6-m.

AN ORDINANCE

TO COMPEL THE OWNERS OF LOTS AND PARTS OF LOTS, IN THE TOWN OF AUBURN, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THEREIN NAMED, TO PLANK AND REPAIR CERTAIN SIDEWALKS.

WHEREAS, It is the opinion of the board of trustees, of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, that public convenience requires the sidewalks along the streets and adjoining the lots and parts of lots in said town, hereinafter mentioned, to be planked and repaired. Therefore

SEC. 1. Be it ordained by the board of trustees, of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, Indiana, that the owners and persons in possession and claiming to own, as hereinafter named, the hereinafter described lots and parts of lots in said town, shall within thirty days from the taking effect of this ordinance, build and construct along and adjoining the lots or parts of lots they may severally own, or are in possession of and claiming to own, where the said lots or parts of lots front upon and adjoin the streets named, a sidewalk of good and sound pine or oak plank, not less than one and one-half inches thick, and not more than eight inches wide, when of oak, and not more than twelve inches wide when of pine plank, to be placed upon sleepers of sound oak timber, not less than three by five inches in width and thickness, and not more than three feet apart. Said walks to be six feet in width, and to be built on the grade of the Datum Plane, as established by ordinance of said board, August 4, 1873, and the grades thereafter established under said ordinance, and where the grade is not so established, then the grade shall be on a level with the street and alley crossings next nearest to the lots or parts of lots where said sidewalks are herein required to be constructed and repaired. Said sidewalks to be built along the streets and in front of and adjoining the following named lots or or parts of lots, to-wit:

The east end of lot No. 74, o. p., on Main st., owned by John King.

The east end of lot No. 75, o. p., on Main st., owned by Edward J. Baker.

Portable Mulay Saw Mill,

With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.

It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no stubs, and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be readily taken from one locality to another and re-erected ready for work in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a large mill. Send for descriptive circular, price, etc., to CHANDLER & TAYLOR, Indianapolis, Ind.

H. A. MOYER, Sec'y.

—Our pleasant friend, J. J. Martin, of the B. & O., drank some extremely cold lemonade at the Pleasant Lake pic-nic, a few evenings since; at any rate, he remarked that he could "feel the icicles on the roof of his stomach."

—It is the greatest of mistakes, drugging the system with medicines to cure kidney trouble while the application of a Days Kidney Pad, to the small of the back will cure when nothing else can. For sale at Casebeer & Matheny's, the Physicians drug store.

—The Marshal is instructed to arrest all parties found drunk within the limits of Auburn. Parties arrested will be placed in the "lock-up" and fined. In this undertaking the Marshal will be sustained by the officers of the town, and all the law-abiding citizens.

—Mr. Samuel Williman, another old democratic subscriber, called in and paid his subscription last week. Mr. Williman is now 70 years old, and is still able to make a full hand in the harvest field, as he did this year. It does us good to have such old gentlemen call in and have a social chat.

—The B. & O. road will join in the excursion to Put-in-Bay, over the Wabash road, leaving Fort Wayne next Sunday, July 27. Fare from Auburn, via Defiance, $2.60 for the round trip, which includes the ride on the lake from Toledo. This is a rare chance for a good time, on a small amount of capital.

—List of letters remaining uncalled for in the postoffice at Auburn, for the week ending July 19: Mr. Burnill, E. C. Bewcese, Peter Dougherty, Mary Hall, Curt Luce, W. R. Tustison, Jas. L. Smith, Jennie Stewart, John Stine, Charles Sutton and James Wallace.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

—Joe. Beugnot has a good horse, buggy, harness, whip, halter, lap-robe, and all the paraphernalia belonging to a first-class turnout, which he will turn over to any man who can furnish ninety dollars cash or good security. This is a good chance for any person who needs a rig.

—Somewhat of a stir, a trifle out of the ordinary, was created here by some of the boys last Sunday, necessitating an impromtu meeting of the town board. It resulted in the banishment of several parties from the city limits and putting one in the apartments just south of Cook Ford's livery-stable, commonly called "the jug."

—Mr. L. M. Montgomery, who has had charge of the Eel River grain elevator at this place for the past year, now has charge of the elevator at Churubusco. We take pleasure in recommending Mr. Montgomery to the citizens of Churubusco and vicinity, as an honest, gentlemanly and wide-awake business man.

—MARRIED:—At the residence of Mr. Zimmerman, on Ninth street, Monday last, by the Rev. Mr. Norris, Mr. S. C. Snyder and Miss Celia Markle, both formerly of this city. The happy couple took their departure for Marion, this state, where they will remain for the present. The COURIER's best wishes go with them.

—It has been suggested that the drug store formerly owned by McIntyre & Son, more recently by C. H. Hoyt, and now owned by Drs. Casebeer & Matheny, be known as the Physicians drug store. Our readers will bear in mind, that any reference made to the Physicians drug-store, means the store owned by Drs. Casebeer & Matheny, the first door south of the First National Bank, Auburn, Ind.

—The following section of an act approved March 17th 1875, may be of interest to saloon-keepers and druggists in the town of Auburn.

SEC. 15. Any person who shall sell, barter, or give away any spiritous, vinous or malt liquors to any person at the time in a state of intoxication, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

—Albion sustained a heavy loss last Sunday morning, in the burning of J. A. Black's large dry-goods store and several frame buildings adjoining. Two kegs of powder were known to be in the burning building, and this fact kept many people away, but the explosion finally came with a terrific crash, making total destruction. Incendiarism is the cause assigned, and the loss is estimated at between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars, while three men were injured by the explosion.

—Last week's Lagrange Standard tells of the following accident which happened to a young lady, a short time since, near that place: On Friday last, Miss Estelle Parks, daughter of Taylor Parks, of Clearspring township, narrowly escaped a terrible death. As she was driving a reaper in the field, the horses were frightened and ran away. Her brother and another man upon the machine jumped off, and called on her to do so, but she clung on, and turned the team into the fence, which they struck with such vigor as to tear it down for some little distance. Here Miss Parks was thrown off, and received many bruises and a gash in the back some four inches long. At the latest accounts, she was rapidly recovering from the accident.

Newville.

—Isaac Gunsenger is suffering with a severe inflammation of one of his eyes, and he leaves to-day for Cleveland, Ohio, to have it treated by Professor Scott, of that city.

—We attended a grove meeting in the adjoining state of Ohio, held by the Christians or Desciples, under the pastorate of the Rev. O. Q. Oviatt, assisted in the afternoon by Rev. Dr. Ebert, of Ligonier, Ind. There was a large assembly of the citizens of both the states of Ohio and Indiana, where they listened attentively to an able discourse from the Rev. Mr. Oviatt, and after a luxerious repast they assembled again to hear an able discourse from Dr. Ebert.

The farmers are busy drawing in and threshing their wheat, and we learn from those that have finished that the yield is good—from 20 to 25 bushels to the acre.

—Our postmaster is having his residence painted and repaired, and likewise the post-office. We guess that office pays under the Hayes regime.

—H. W. Coburn has been building an addition to his dwelling.

—The hotel is undergoing a thorough repairing and will be opened this week by B. F. Blair, when it will be ready to accommodate the traveling public, a thing very much needed in Newville.

TUTT'S PILLS

INDORSED BY PHYSICIANS, CLERGYMEN, AND THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL TRIUMPH OF THE AGE.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE SICK HEADACHE.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE DYSPEPSIA.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE PILES.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE FEVER AND AGUE.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE BILIOUS COLIC.
TUTT'S PILLS Cure KIDNEY Complaint.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE TORPID LIVER.
TUTT'S PILLS IMPART APPETITE.

Dr. Tutt has succeeded in combining in these pills the heretofore antagonistic qualities of a STRENGTHENING PURGATIVE, and a PURIFYING TONIC.

Their first apparent effect is to increase the appetite by causing the food to properly assimilate. Thus the system is nourished, and by their tonic action on the digestive organs, regular and healthy evacuations are produced.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE ON FLESH while under the influence of these Pills, indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, melancholy, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. Office 35 Murray Street, NEW YORK.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

LOST LOVE.

BY CARRIE V. SHAW.

He asked me to walk in the twilight,
The stars were all shining so fair,
And the young moon still gleamed like a crescent
Through the balmy and soft evening air;
And we walked under the boughs of the birch tree
That the rude autumn winds had made bare.

I do not remember exactly
The way that the trouble begun,
But I know that he called me a flirt,
And I didn't like being called one;
And I think that I called him a brute,
Or something, before we were done.

He told me that I was deceitful.
And I wouldn't endure that, would you?
I told him that Harry was better than he,
And that black eyes were sweeter than blue;
But dear reader, that was a story—
Blue eyes were the dearest, I knew.

Then he said that if I went with Harry
Out riding next evening, that he
Would speak to me never again, and I laughed,
And remarked how dreadful 'twould be;
And I told him that I could live without him,
If he thought that he could without me.

So we parted there under the birch trees
When the stars were all shining so bright,
When the new moon was just disappearing
And gave but a glimmer of light.
We parted, and I went into the house
And cried through the rest of the night.

Oh, there's no use in talking about it;
It was all my own willfulness, though.
'Twas his love for me made him so jealous,
And I—ah, well—I only know
That I loved him better than all the world,
Even while I was teasing him so.

And now, as I sit in the twilight,
While the stars are all out in the sky
And the new moon is shining so softly,
I think of that eve long gone by;
And those dear blue eyes seem gazing at me,
Still waiting for my reply.

Once more we are standing together
Under the birch trees alone,
And his eyes are full of wonder and pain
At the flippancy of my tone;
But I cannot see them longer
For the tears that fill my own.
SCHELL CITY, Mo.

MINNEWAUCAN AND ITS LEGEND.

BY WALES.

Minnewaucan, or the Devil's lake, situated in the interior of Wisconsin, and one of the most beautiful water-views east of the Rocky mountains, can hardly be surpassed in its attractive wildness even by the most far-famed of those gems of nature's handiwork anywhere. And yet, one of these places which it might be supposed would have proved most attractive to the red man, the story is that he turned from its beautiful shores with a repugnance amounting to horror, the reason assigned for this being that it was indeed the "Devil's lake," and as such the theater of every supernatural and evil influence.

The antipathy on which this conduct of the red man was based is comprised in a legend bequeathed to the present generation by some of the old men of the Winnebagoes who have long passed away.

The locality of the incidents narrated is given specifically, and points to one particular place on the shore of the lake, a spot on the east cliff, where a gigantic pine still overhangs the rocks. The lake at that point witnessed a tragedy lang syne which caused his Satanic majesty to at once take possession of the whole surroundings as his particular province, conjuring up therewith such weird and manifold horrors that red humanity thenceforth shunned it as a place accursed and given over to everything uncanny and horrible. But I must not anticipate.

A more lovely spot, despite its name, can hardly be imagined. A richer opalescent gem, under changing skies, and in its rough granite setting, can hardly be found on the continent. Although the lake is but three miles long by one and three-quarters wide, the water is said to be more than 500 feet in depth, and blue as the deepest blue of the fair heavens, and crystal-like in its clearness; the shifting sunlight and the reflection of the fleecy, drifting clouds cause it to assume almost every tint that can be given from the sky or shore; the winds, the purple hues of evening, the magnificent deep green pines, and the graceful swaying elms casting their shadows upon it or reflected in its waters, varying so constantly the rich pictures presented that almost every hour of the day exhibits some new and brilliant aspect to charm the beholder.

Let the reader imagine the west cliff, immediately frowning over the lake, as a vast rocky wall towering up in places into castellated shapes, here and there taking the forms also of Druidical temples, as great square masses of rock appear to have been detached and piled up crossways upon each other by some convulsion of nature, leaving apertures beneath for the light to flash through, while all along the face of this rocky rampart of more than 600 feet in altitude appear avalanches of vast bowlders strewn downward toward the lake shore, some of these masses weighing hundreds of tons, and tossed about in all forms possible to mark confusion the most terrible. All this garnished with pines, hemlocks, elms, maples and other forest growths springing from the clefts of the rocks, as if to veil the wild ruin, the face of the cliff so scarred and broken.

This vast wall, more than a mile long, is depressed as it approaches the head of the valley; while, looking backward toward the south end, it seems almost a canon, which thus holds the lake, the southern end of the cliff descending so abruptly at one point as to give the rocky crest that castellated appearance to which we have already alluded.

Parallel with the west cliff almost, and a mile or thereabouts distant, is the east cliff, this second great wall descending at the upper end of the valley abruptly also, where the railway leaves it for the valley of the Baraboo; and here is located under the cliff, almost backed up against it, and in a remarkably cozy way, too, the excellent hostelry which gives an attractive home for visitors to this wonder of nature. Immediately in the rear—as already intimated—a huge, irregular wall, made of immense, and in many cases of distinct masses of rock lying upon each other in all possible rude combinations, seems so precariously held in place that a child's hand might apparently send them thundering to the shore below; these constituting a series of clefts or caverns fringed with pines and cedars, suggestive in the shadowy depths of their rocky retreats of hiding-places in the olden time, invaluable to warrior fugitive hard pressed by implacable foemen, or as fitting lairs for the bear or panther, to which the place was once a familiar haunt.

But it is on the top of this east cliff and at the south end thereof, that the work of the Titans, in tossing about vast blocks of stone and setting them up in all sorts of fantastic combinations, strikes the visitor most forcibly. Rough pillars indeed are there, with massive capitals and architecture designed in no school of Greek art, although by indefinite ages ante-dating antiquity in art in that nation and even in ancient Egypt itself. Indeed, the work here savors more of the colossal structures of Thebes, and the other cities of the Nile valley, than aught else, although piled on high, unchangeable in sunshine and storm and night, long before Thebes, or Palmyra, or even Babylon, the great, were known to history. It is hard to feel this standing here now, for we call it a "new" country. Massive work this of that Great Architect who builds for all time, for decay has hardly set any seal upon it, and, if this particular work is not known in the records of the world at large, its unpretentious solidity may more than challenge, a thousand-fold more, the enduring strength and grandeur of the pyramids themselves. Standing here in contemplative mood, and glancing backward mentally over man's most-boasted architectural achievements, how do these stupendous columns, these piles of rock away from the abodes of men, and so almost unheeded, dwarf man's proudest efforts, and how poor and puny appear his most imposing monuments to perpetuate human greatness, or so-called human achievements.

Time stays; alas! we go.

Across the southern part of this valley, and shutting the lake in as on the other three sides, is a great rampart of green hills, clothed to the very top and rounded gracefully by a garniture of dense forest growth, making the lake on three sides the vast and deep crystal basin it is; while in the southeast quarter a depression between the east cliff and the southern wall just noted is a beautiful, but irregular, valley opening from the rocky basin of Devil's lake, and out of which the Northwestern railroad finds its way, a portion of this valley being devoted to the purposes of a rich vineyard and its white mansion and other appurtenances, all this completing a picture in this direction, for which, in exquisite loveliness, it is hard to find a parallel.

The lake is 600 feet above Lake Michigan, and clear in its crystal purity and mysterious in its character, like that famous California wonder, Lake Tahoe; it too has no visible source of supply or outlets, although of such great depth; and it also abounds with fish, giving anglers the rarest sport, while the means at hand for other aquatic enjoyments, in numerous boats and a small steamer, complete the summer attractions of the place.

And what a region for him to explore who has an eye to the beautiful in the great picture gallery of nature; what lovely nooks in these clustered rocks; their rough surfaces carpeted with many-colored lichens, the delicate feathery ferns, almost tropical in their forms, bowing from behind the brown and decayed logs as the soft southern breezes come up the valley to make the tiny waves musical along the rocky shore, and lazily sway the branches of the trees overhead. My companion sitting here to sketch, and myself overcome with drowsiness in the summer air, what a tempting couch is presented by this vast smooth rock placed at just the right slope; the pine leaves already gathered by the winds in the depressions of the rocks around, to form a luxurious pillow to the o'er hard surface. Our little boat dances in its narrow berth between two great bowlders at the lake's edge, and we briefly enjoy a summer day's siesta undisturbed—we sleep and dream.

Aroused once more, we glance over the towering cliffs above, to see an eagle sailing in the far blue vault away, while the sudden whirr of a pheasant's wings near by, as he dashes through the foliage, shows that we have not the solitude to ourselves alone.

Floating on the almost still waters once more, careless of position, because no swift currents or tides, as on the sea or rivers, compel labor, this boating is the very dolce far niente of aquatic enjoyment; and, as approaching the shallows of a small harbor in the southern portion of the lake, how fairy-like seems the crystal vale below, with its white sand, its aquatic growths, and the tiny multitudes who make this little world of waters their fitting home. Our light craft runs softly upon the smooth shore, amidst a small grove of rushes and "cat's tails"—those prizes so often coveted by us, as boys, when quite beyond our reach; and, as we lave our hands in the cool flood over the sides of the boat, and linger there almost devoid for once of a motive for exertion, how dull and dusty seems a momentary glance at the retrospect of life far away—that life that must claim us once more when our brief holiday is over in a scene like this. Sitting quietly, we watch the glancing kingfisher, as he darts here and there in the sunshine, or seems sportively to dive for his dinner, while from shady vistas in the dim forest near by its feathered denizens watch us with furtive looks, as if not quite assured of the harmless nature of our visit. Is not life with such surroundings very near akin to rest, and in a world so full of turmoil is not rest as near happiness as man ever knows, only that in this case, as in every other, it is still shadowed by the dark possibilities of the unknown future.

But there is something more to do beside idling along the shores of the lake, if we would comprehend and enjoy all the grandeur and sublime beauty of the magnificent pictures which present so many phases on all sides. Although, as we glance upward through the soft haze of a summer's day, the very Castle of Indolence seemed outlined on the top of the west cliff, while the influences of Sleepy Hollow assert their dominance below, we must scale the rough and almost perpendicular face of the rocks, thrown together at all possible angles, if we would take in from the top some of the grandest views in the whole region around.

Almost with a sigh, then, albeit a tribute to the laziness of a midsummer's midday, I left our boat at the little landing at the foot of the cliff, to face alone the grim obstacles presented by a direct upward clamber, and was soon jumping from one vast bowlder to another on the lake shore or higher up, clinging to limbs and mountain shrubs to secure a precarious foothold as I slowly made my way aloft. For hundreds of feet then, where a misstep might have been fatal, now on hands and feet, anon bracing myself between gateways in the rocks, little by little I progressed toward the summit, the dry lichens underfoot, the covering of the rocks, nearly making me pay for my venture. Slipping on one of these carpeted rocks, at length, I fell forward headlong into a savage-looking recess, and although, like a certain King of England, who upon occasion, when he stumbled and fell down two or three steps, had the "presence of mind (?) to throw out his hands"—though, like him, I, too, tried to save myself, my sconce came into violent contact with the rocky, cavernous surface—head, hands, clothing and all getting more or less damaged by the tumble. Half stunned, I slowly extricated myself from the place, breathing an ejaculation of thankfulness that, alone as I was for the time being, I was not left there insensible, to be sought for, possibly, when too late, my companion meanwhile being far away upon another part of the cliff.

Next, as an aid with an "Alpenstock" in the shape of a big stick picked up near by, I proceeded more cautiously, until finally, stepping out on a projecting plateau of rock, I stood there with a great stone column at my left, draped with some wild growth, the rock serving to steady my position, and thence what a magnificent outlook was presented in the direction of the southeastern outlet to the basin! Glancing over and beyond the "Vineyard," I could see line upon line of blue hills, apparently twenty miles off in the distance; the rocks, the lake, the bright and sunny shore in the foreground. With the lake far below and so near straight down the pathway I had struck out that it seemed as if a biscuit might have been tossed into the rippling waters beneath, the solitude seemed also complete, only a hawk sailing in circles in front of the cliff fittingly disturbing it; a solitude which seemed as absolute as it might have been a century ago, ere the footstep of civilised man had trodden the wild heights on which I seemed intruding.

As we have endeavored to show, one of the noblest views to be had in the whole region is commanded from this portion of the west cliff, but unless the place is leisurely "flanked," ascended from the shoulder or rear of the cliff, it is no holiday task for the average tourist to essay the outlook. But I found an easier pathway in beating a retreat from the point I have described, and seeking the boat once more; it was a welcome rest to get to my accustomed seat in the trim little craft, and to find myself, moreover, indebted to oars instead of hands and feet for locomotion in searching for the grand and beautiful.

And the lake shore, although wearing an air of seclusion at most times, is not without its sights and sounds occasionally, to remind one that it is by no means quite given over to the demands and belongings of an advanced civilization, and, even with the railroad at its side, is still not without its wilder incidents, to remind us of the olden time. This was made evident one bright morning during the summer just past, when the lounging denizens about the porticos of the hotel were aroused by the baying of hounds and the shouts of boys and men, awaking the echoes of the hills around, as a noble buck came dashing into the little valley from the north side, to find himself confronted by a hostile crowd near the boat landing in front of the hotel. Hemmed in by the cliff on one side and the lake on the other, with the yelling pack behind, he had no alternative but an immediate plunge into the lake, and he chose the latter. After a few splendid leaps, dashing the crystal waters in showers on all sides as he left the shallow sands for the deep water, he soon began to breast the blue rippling surges for the further side. But he was not to escape so. Seizing a coil of rope to serve as a lasso, one of the hotel visitors was soon on his feet in the bows of a swift rowboat, which, propelled with rapid strokes after the fugitive, gained quickly on the latter. The noble antlers of the strong swimmer swayed about as he glanced backward at his foes, and at times he seemed to strive to leap from the water in his eagerness to escape. Swifter drove onward the boat along with two or three others that had joined the chase, amid the cheers of those on shore, until at last within reach, a dexterous throw of the lasso caught the poor fugitive and dragged him alongside, and we grieve to say that magnanimity to the defeated was no part of the policy of the captors, for a saddle of venison served up the next day suggested to all concerned that the red man had left behind him more than the rocks and ravines to remind his successors of his mode of living in the days long past.

I have spoken of fishing in the beautiful lake. Some of the noblest specimens of that "game fish," the pickerel, to compare in size with any, are caught here. To be sure, "trolling" is not to be compared to some of my past experiences, my "dreadful enjoyment" in wading and "whipping" a mountain brook, tired and hungry, or devoured by gnats and mosquitoes, a la Ottawa; but, for the very Sybaritic in the luxury of fishing, commend me to "trolling," when one is pulled swiftly across the calm or slightly-rippling blue waters, waiting for that savage pull at the "spoon"—a la "Ben"—which pull, as in the case of a "twenty-eight pounder" lately caught here, could almost jerk one out of the stern of the boat, ending with as deftly playing the monster as could be required with a St. John's salmon ere he was safely landed in the bottom of the little yawl. Making a rush off at a tangent, then diving toward the 500 feet depths of the rocky recesses he would fain have reached, rushing here and there as the reel spun to give him more play—the whole scope of the lake so far as he chose to use it—after a while brought him to terms, until he came alongside at last so gentle and subdued that his docile deportment elicited pity even, and made his submission under defeat almost belie his ferocious looks.

But in the ardor of a devotion to wild sports and their reminiscences I had almost forgotten the wild legend from which the lake takes its name. The story is that many moons long past, and about the time the white man made his first appearance here direct from the Canadas, the beautiful valley comprising the lake and the territory adjoining was under the sway of a famous chief and warrior of the Winnebagoes, Kannawana or, "Spotted Panther;" and as the very light of his life and the pride and delight of the tribe itself, a lovely maiden, the "Fawn," his only daughter, sported around its shores or drove her bark canoe across its sparkling waters. Lithe and fleet-footed, and timid almost as the pretty creature whence she derived her appellation, the young men of the tribe had one after another sought her favor, but in vain; until on an ill-omened day a tall young warrior of another tribe made his appearance and took up his residence with the tribe, one whose bronzed but handsome face and merry blue eyes carried her heart captive, ending in an appeal to the old chief for the hand of the maiden he had learned to love.

The legend is that, although the heart of the old warrior and chief secretly approved the choice of the daughter, yet the storm raised among the young men of the tribe caused him to hesitate, to debate between the white youth and a young chief who also had showed a devotion to the maiden, rare amongst the red men, too stoical in most cases to betray such weakness. And so, constrained to determine in favor of one or the other, he at length hit upon a novel test of devotion to the being he himself so loved,

Where the point of the east cliff makes a sudden turn and abrupt angle toward the little valley on the south, a gigantic pine towered from the top of the cliff immediately over the lake; and at almost the highest fork or cleft of this huge tree a pair of bald eagles had built their nest, a conspicuous object in the view of the valley below.

Perhaps, then, to postpone his decision as a final matter; perhaps to rebuff both suitors; possibly in the belief and hope that the eager white man would achieve the task, the old chief declared, after solemn deliberation, that only the young warrior who was active enough and daring enough to ascend the great pine and make spoil of the eagle's nest should have the Fawn; and wild as seemed the adventure, approaching to something like madness on the part of him who might essay it, the stern determination of the old chief was not to be shaken, and the young men both prepared to attempt the forlorn task.

The white youth, whose name has not come down to us, would at this stage of the adventure have dared death in almost any form rather than have lost his hoped-for prize, or withstood the contemptuous jeers of those among whom he had sought a home, allured thereto perhaps by the wondrous charms of the Indian maiden, while his rival prepared for the trial with the stoical courage of the young warriors of his tribe, seemingly measurably reckless of the manifest perils waiting upon it.

And so the day came, the white man to make the first essay, privileged thereto by some method of casting lots, his rival to follow if he failed. Below, on the shore of the lake, large numbers of the tribe had assembled to witness the exploit, while seated on a large rock, enthroned there as it might be, the chief watched the young men start on their way to the summit of the cliff, to reach the monarch of the forest whose proud crest was to be invaded by human presence for the first time.

Near by the father stood the pretty maiden, the cause of all this preparation, and trying in vain to hide the interest she felt in their endeavors and perils from those who had imposed upon them this method of showing their unbounded love and devotion to her, yet betraying at times a perturbation all unusual in an Indian girl, as she stood uneasily with tearful eyes giving furtive glances now upward and anon upon the deep and clear waters overhung by cliff and tree.

At length the ascent began. Upward, on the inner side of the huge pine trunk, the adventurer made his way, clasping its round sides with arms and knees; upward, upward, slowly, for only a vast rough knot or protuberance gave him a resting place now and then, ere he was to reach where the mighty limbs shot out from the crest, and where the prize he sought rested, 100 feet above the dizzy starting point on the cliff below. Outward, still outward leaned the fearful bridge on which he was clambering over the blue waters, almost 1,000 feet beneath; but still upward, and apparently with strong nerves and steady eye and purpose, until at last, with foot upon a lower projection, he stretched himself out to seize the prize on which he was putting the hazard of his life. Halting in his efforts—exhausted, dazed, outdone perhaps by what dire fate—he swayed, clinging desperately for a moment as his footing failed, then swinging for an instant only underneath the huge limb, suddenly his hold was lost, his form cutting the air swiftly to the deep waters below.

The crowd surged backward as the unfortunate youth disappeared beneath the fiercely-disturbed waters; but another instant, and the heaving surges parted again as the young girl sought a grave with her lover—the tragedy only completed when, from the cliffs above, another human form suddenly cleft the air, the surviving rival and lover seeking the same grave that had closed over the other unfortunates—the young warrior having, it appeared, determined not to survive the maiden he loved so well.

The three were seen no more, as the summer ripples resumed their placidity; but the old chief turned away brokenhearted from the scene. He forsook the place, along with his followers, and then it was affirmed that the place and its surroundings was taken possession of by the evil one and his familiars; that while great serpents had possession of the east cliff, gigantic and uncouth forms of wild beasts, bears and panthers, ranged up and down the rocks of the western side of the lake.

And so it became, to the aborigine, a place accursed; the spells of evil upon it only dissolved when the white man took formal possession, and the waning race finally retired from the country around; the latter leaving but the legend we have given to account for the appellation which has come to designate so wild yet so beautiful a locality as Minnewaucan.

CHICAGO, Ill.

Five Days Without Water.

Sixteen surveyors in the employ of the Government left Trinidad, Colorado, a few weeks ago, for a tour eastward to the Indian Territory line. Major Medary commanded the party, among whom were S. M. Winchester and his chum, William Johnson, both Baltimoreans. Stretching south from the Santa Fe track and east from the town of Trinidad are sterile plains. Water on these plains is very scarce, there being a few trickling streams that are far apart and made almost unfit for use by the strong impregnation of alkali. The corps worked eastward, locating townships on the way, until the 5th inst. Then a squad of five men, commanded by Mr. Sheets, were sent from a point on Willow creek with orders to run a transit eighteen miles due north. The task having been performed the five set out at nightfall for camp. In a few hours they realized that they were lost, with nothing but thirst and boundless sterility before them. On the morning of the 6th a consultation showed that Winchester and Johnson wanted to go one way and the other three another. Sheets, with two companions, then left the Baltimore boys with the idea of striking Cariso spring. After sixty hours of constant labor, during which they suffered the torments of the cursed, no water passing their lips, the three arrived at the spring. As soon as they could communicate with camp they did so, and men at once set out to find Winchester and Johnson. The search was conducted with an excitement bordering on frenzy. On Monday, the 9th inst. about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, poor Winchester was found lying on the open plain. He was still alive. A few drops of water were given him. He took them, and said in a weak voice: "Bless you, bless you, tell mother——" He died in five minutes. Near by was a rock which towered strangely above the plain. In a crevice of the rock was found a note from Winchester, dated the 7th, and telling of their aimless wandering. Six miles from the rock was found Johnson's canteen. The prairies were scoured for three days, and on the 12th inst. Johnson's body was found. All around the ground had been clawed and the brush torn in the delirium of his thirst. The Denver Republican says that the bodies were buried on a green hillside. The Trinidad News and the Denver Tribune state that within two months Winchester would have come into possession of $30,000 left him in Baltimore.

An Operator's Blunder.

It is by far the most painful episode in the history of the church at Maltese Cross Roads. The talented minister of that church was awarded the degree of Doctor of Divinity by one of our colleges a few days since, and as soon as the commencement exercises were over he telegraphed the news to one of his deacons. The telegram, as he sent it, read: "I've just been D. D.'d by my alma mater," but as the deacon received it it read: "I've just been d—d by my alma mater." The deacon had the most exalted opinion of his dominie, not only of his intellectual abilities but of his moral worth, and at once called an indignation meeting of the church, at which, in the most scathing terms, he denounced the college which had presumed to d—n a reverend gentleman who was of unimpeached soundness in doctrine, and whose practice was in strict conformity with his preaching. He carried all his hearers with him, and his motion that the salary of their dear, but shamefully-abused, pastor be increased $500, and that a committee be appointed to purchase a silver service to be presented to him on his return, was carried unanimously, and there wasn't a dry eye in the house. The newly-degreed minister, bearing his blushing honors with graceful humility, arrived home in the morning. * * * In the afternoon the deacon, we regret to say, dissolved his connection with the church and bought a shotgun. About the same time a genial and urbane telegraph operator began leaving for parts unknown as fast as the lightning express would carry him.—Albany Evening Journal.

The Hair.

A French scientist has called attention to the medico-legal value of the odor of the human hair, and has given some new facts. He asserts that from the simple smell of a lock of hair he can tell whether the lock has been cut from the living subject, or whether it has been composed of hair that has fallen out. Hair-dressers have acquired this art, which is said never to fail them. Hair which has fallen out has a dull appearance, attributable to disease, and is not easily made up; it has no peculiar smell.

THE MOWING.

BY S. G. W. BEEBE.

The clock has struck six
And the morning is fair,
While the east in red splendor is glowing;
There's a dew on the grass, and a song in the air—
Let us up and be off to the mowing.

Wouldst know why I wait
Ere the sunlight has crept
O'er the fields where the daisies are growing?
Why all night I've kept my own vigils, nor slept?
'Tis to-day is the day of the mowing.

This day and this hour
Maud has promised to tell
What the blush on her cheek was half showing.
If she waits at the lane, I'm to know all is well,
And there'll be a good time at the mowing.

Maud's mother has said,
And I'll never deny,
That a girl's heart there can be no knowing.
Oh, I care not to live, and I rather would die,
If Maud does not come to the mowing.

What is it I see?
'Tis a sheen of brown hair
In the lane where the poppies are blowing.
Thank God! it is Maud—she is waiting me there,
And there'll be a good time at the mowing.

Six years have passed by,
And I freely declare
That I scarcely have noticed their going;
Sweet Maud is my wife, with her sheen of brown hair,
And we had a good time at the mowing.

SABBATH READING.

Come, Ye Disconsolate.

Come, ye disconsolate, where'er you languish,
Come, at the shrine of God fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish—
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal.

Joy of the desolate, light of the straying,
Hope, when all others die, fadeless and pure,
Here speaks the Comforter, in God's name saying,
"Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot cure."

Go, ask the infidel what boon he brings us,
What charm for aching hearts he can reveal,
Sweet as that heavenly promise hope sings us—
"Earth has no sorrow that God cannot heal."

The Truth:

A SERMON BY REV. DAVID SWING, OF CHICAGO.

One of the most beautiful and impressive of all the chapters in the books of John Ruskin is that one on the "Lamp of Truth" in architecture. All the generalities and the details of a structure must possess truth. The foundation must be in harmony with the superstructure, the ornaments in harmony with the meaning of the building; there must be no contradiction of material or form. But all that Ruskin reminds us of in architecture is affirmed of life, for the human soul is built up into a palace by the lamp of truth. A pretentious Court House in our State fell down while the workmen were putting on the finishing ornaments. The decorations were handsome, but there was a falsehood in a column down in the cellar—there was a lie in the bricks. But these buildings crumble to illustrate our spiritual world for us, and teach us that a drunkard, or a gambler, or a defaulter is a spiritual temple with a lie in the foundations. What in the material world is called a ruin? A crushed bridge at Ashtabula is called "hell" in theology; they point alike to the destiny of that fabric or that soul which omits the element of truth.

You perhaps remember that, in the Apocrypha of the older Bibles, four orators contended before the King, each to show what was the most powerful thing in the world. The first orator declared the King to be the supreme influence; the second argued for the capabilities of wine; the third found woman to be the most powerful entity on earth, but the fourth orator bore away the prize by finding that truth ruled all things, from the humblest insect up to the Infinite God. Indeed, woman and the King had power only so far as they were children of the truth.

Our poets have all said these things for us, but more powerfully than the poets have all the old nations handed in their testimony; for in whatever manner these nations have perished, their truths have rebloomed over their dust. As after a most violent storm has raged for days we see to reappear again the sun and the placid stars, no tumult having reached their far-away azure, so after the storms which made a desert of the valley of the Nile and which overthrew the classic empires, all the great truths of those states came marching forth out of the dust cloud to join themselves with the civilization of the future. The mental power of Egypt and Greece, their achievements in art, their truthful sentiments in literature and morals, the true principles of Roman law, the divine parts of their religion—all these came on to us like the doves of Noah bearing olive leaves after the flood. The Greeks and Romans fell victims of errors, but there was no error in their verse, none in their columns and arches, none in their courage, none in their marble forms; the early church sank laden with mistakes and follies, but there was nothing perishable in its charity, its prayers, its faith and hope, and hence, out of the flames which consumed all these old times, there has flowed down toward us a stream of most pure gold. It matters little how a nation dies, whether by one vice or by many, the God of nations goes to it in its last hour and hands over to immortality its truthful principles. Just as when a poet like Robert Burns dies by command of intemperance, or as when a Byron passes away injured by many sins, their valuable and beautiful verses are detached at last from the marred or ruined soul, and live in their own intrinsic purity; so nations, though they may have died intoxicated, or amid carousal of crime and sin, are unable to involve their truths in their personal calamity; but from all their burning homes and palaces forms above life are seen carrying away all the household gods that embody a virtue to decorate with them the temples and homes of the subsequent eras.

It being true that the human soul ascends according to the quantity and quality of its truth, and sinks according to the quality and quantity of its falsehoods, it must also be true that man, when unable to find the absolute truth, must attach himself to the nearest possible approach to a verity. If to know the whole truth were a perfect bliss, then to know in part and see in part were a second condition of happiness. And this is the best rational defense of him who espouses the tenets of religion. Unable to learn the absolute facts from either the priest at the altar or from the atheist with his denial, man is justified, indeed made rational and happy, by asking the generations to tell him how near they ever came to finding the presence of a God and the confines of a second life. In this comparison of ideas atheism falls below its counter thought and competitive companion, for if nature, not to say God, loves and blesses a truth, and opposes a falsehood, then it would seem that religion, as held by man, must come very near being a verity, for nature has blessed it in all the long history of man. It is not alleged that the highest doctrines of natural religion took any part in the overthrow of Babylon, or Athens, or Palmyra; it is not avowed by any that Cæsar and Pompey were ruined by their faith in God, and by their conformity of life to such an ideal; it will not be affirmed that a studious following of Christ has ever brought sorrow to a nation or to an age; and hence we feel justified in affirming that, if error be destructive, then religion has not, in the long experience of man, brought sorrow enough to secure for it a place among falsehoods, but, on the opposite, it has so blessed man that it well merits the diadem of a truth. When nations have expressed a false principle in politics, the error has hastened to reveal itself. In one or two generations the false idea has been found by the havoc it has wrought. The leaf has turned yellow to disclose the worm at its root; but over religion, over Christianity, century after century has passed, and all nations will declare that the more they held of its principles the happier they were, and that upon its branches no yellow leaf has appeared. If false ideas bring injury, it would seem that Christianity must be true.

There are some words whose sweetness or bitterness we can learn only in the experience of mankind. If you ask me whether twice two makes four, I shall answer you without consulting the human race, but if you ask me the worth of "liberty," or "education," or "music," or "home," then you must permit me to go outside of intuition and summon witnesses. It will be necessary for me to wander about for a few thousands of years and in many lands. I must call upon Kings, and patriots, and peasants, and slaves. I must sit down amid the thinkers and hear them; the home-circle and see their life; and at last I shall return to you and declare liberty, and education, and art, and home to be sublime suns in the outspread heaven of man. Having seen these ideas, I declare them to have none of the qualities of a falsehood. So with the word Christianity. It cannot be weighed in the positive scales. One cannot say over it twice two is four, and apply that demonstrative or intuitive method, but we can go out in the wide world and examine it in action, and so doing we can return confessing that religion acts very much as though it were one of the holy principles of nature—a law of man and God. It contains the features of that kind of truth which sets men free and makes them free indeed. The deeds of a lie are utterly absent from its history.

You who are groping along in this world in great religious perplexity, wondering what is true and what false, remember this, that all moral ideas are easily veiled in doubt. A few years ago Henry D. Thoreau and Mr. Alcott and a group of lofty minds became in doubt as to the merit of civilization and became enamored of the thickets and hills and solitude. Over the mind of Rousseau and Chateaubriand a similar cloud was passing at the same time in France. Thus came doubt and hid for an hour so mighty a good as all the civilization of all time. It destroyed all the arts, it silenced music, it laughed at industry, it resolved life into a camp of bushes and a diet of roots and berries. Thus moral notions lie open to grave doubt, and among them every affirmation of religion. A retreat into atheism, into the wild bushes and wild berries, is always possible; but against this temptation place the whole career of mankind, and you will easily conclude that the religion of humanity contains the outlines of a truth. As the Thoreaus, and the Alcotts, and the Emersons were called back from their tents and vales by the mighty voice of the world they had abandoned, as the roar of all the combined thoughts and achievements of the past and the present came to them all day and all night, telling them that civilization was not a blunder, but a truth, so the heart bewildered in religion may become reassured if it will turn from the small to the great, and will ask the human soul everywhere to sum up for it the values of a faith in God. To you thus gazing, religion will come in the similitude of a fact, not a truth of which you cannot doubt, but as an idea standing near by the most absolute verity. It is indeed possible to question the authority of Christ, but to question the authority of atheism, that god of night and oblivion, is more possible and easy still; for it has never acted like a truth, carrying men to grandeur on proud wings. And hence the soul, filled with the solemn mystery of life and death, would better say, "I should prefer to fasten the sandal of a Jesus rather than receive from atheism a crown; would rather touch the hem of the garments of Christ than be myself arrayed in the richest drapery of unbelief."

Can This Be Our Senator?

A Forum reporter was detailed to interview Hon. John Jones. He proceeded at once to his residence, and running up the marble steps, rang the bell. A lady appeared at the summons of the servant, whom the reporter supposed to be Mrs. Jones, the wife of the distinguished gentleman. Bowing and removing his hat, the reporter said:

"Is Mr. Jones at home?"

"No," was the response.

"He is not in the house, then?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! In that case he must be out?"

"He is."

"Hum! When will he be in?"

"I don't know."

"Ah-h! No objections to publishing this interview in the Daily Forum, I suppose?"

"Not at all."

"Thank you;" and the reporter bowed and left. He returned again, however, about 11 o'clock at night, in hopes of finding the gentleman at home. At any rate, a man raised the upper window when the bell rang, and asked who was there. The reporter explained his business, and asked if it was the Hon. Mr. Jones who spoke. The man said it was, and if the reporter didn't leave he'd throw a pitcher of water out. The reporter hoisted his umbrella, and asked what Mr. Jones had to say on the subject of international finance and commercial reciprocity. Jones threw the water, but the umbrella would have protected the reporter had not Jones thoughtlessly dropped the pitcher. That ended the umbrella and interview, and nearly smashed the reporter, but he feels sweet revenge in the fact that Mr. Jones' water-pitcher is no more. It struck his cheek.

A COMPLICATED CASE.

The Troubles of an Obliging Conductor with an Obstinate Lady Passenger.

[From the Indianapolis Journal.]

The other day, as Conductor Minot, of the Pan-Handle, was leaving this city on his trip east, he found a female passenger who had a ticket to Dayton via the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton. He explained that she was on the wrong train, that her ticket was not good, and that she could leave the train at Irvington and wait for the train on the other road, or he would send her back to the Union Depot, where she could await the train on the other line over which she was ticketed. The woman seemed to understand the explanation, but, as soon as Minot had left her, an old lady occupying the seat in front of her said:

"These railroads are colleagued together, and their tickets are good on any road. That is just a trick of the conductor to get money out of you and steal it from the company. This road goes to Dayton, and, if I were you, I would sit right here."

When Minot returned, the woman could not be made to understand why her ticket was not good on any road running to Dayton, and, in spite of the patient and polite explanations of the conductor, she persisted in not understanding it. Finally a kind-hearted Hebrew, who was seated opposite, thinking to relieve the embarrassment of the woman, offered to take her ticket and pay her fare to Richmond, over half the distance to Dayton. She accepted, passed her ticket over to him, and he paid her fare to Richmond. Then she quieted down until Minot came through the car, when she asked:

"Isn't that ticket worth more than the fare to Richmond?"

"Certainly; worth a third more," was the reply.

"Well, I ain't going to be swindled in that way, and I want my money back."

"I have nothing to do with that," replied Minot, "you sold your ticket; your fare has been paid to Richmond, and I cannot aid you."

Then she went for the Hebrew, accused him of being a swindler, and he finally told her that all he wanted was his money, and she could have her ticket. Minot came back and she called him again and said:

"Give that man his money back so I can get my ticket, and I will leave this road, which is run by swindlers."

"Upon your agreement to leave the train I will do it," said he, "and send you back to Indianapolis."

He then gave the money back, and the ticket was returned. Presently the train stopped at Cumberland, and the conductor asked her to get off.

"I have changed my mind," was her answer.

"Then you must pay your fare."

"Pay my fare, you swindler! Why, I can prove by every one in the car that you said my fare was paid."

"Of course I did, but I gave the money back."

"Yes, you gave it to the Jew. You don't pretend that you gave it to me. You want to rob me, but I won't allow it. I am on this train to go to Richmond, and I intend to do it," and she did. Minot is consulting a lawyer on the case.

What Things May Come in Dreams.

The man who wants to "sleep upon" a project before deciding may be wiser than he knows, for in that sleep his mind, unknown to him, may traverse the ground again, unhampered by his will, uninfluenced by his prejudices, and give him a clearer and better judgment. Who has not awakened to see light where all seemed dark the night before? Causeur remembers an instance in his own experience, back in his high-school days. Good Mr. Sherwin had given the class a tough problem, which involved both geometry and algebra in its solution. Causeur took it home, and worked and worried over it all the evening. He made diagrams without end, and wrote down equations without number, but the equation which was to give in known terms the value of the unknown x he could not evolve from them. Time and again a fresh start was made, but with no better result—there was still a link missing. Tired and disheartened he went to bed, and was soon fast asleep. In the early hours of the morning, when it was barely light, he awoke, and the first thing of which he was conscious was that he had solved the problem—it was as clear as day. Rising at once, he sought a pencil, but, finding none, used a half-burned match, and with this, on the marble of the mantel, noted down two short equations. Then he returned to bed and slept. Later in the morning he worked out the equations, and carried the result in triumph to the school house on Bedford street.—Boston Transcript.

A Newspaper for All the World.

The newspaper of the future is at hand, and it comes—out of the Vatican. For some time there have been rumors afloat that the papal power was about to avail itself specially of the modern instrumentality of the press, and on a grand scale, viz.: A great paper, to be published in all the known tongues of the world. The thing has now taken definite shape enough to create great commotion. Among the compositors men will be needed who can set type in Russian, Danish, Arabian, Japanese, Irish, etc., etc., as well as in the easy French, English, German, Italian and Spanish. The title fixed on for the new journal is to be the World—its function to publish the voice of truth to all the earth. As the machinery for such a paper is all at hand in the Propaganda, the organization is simple enough and need not take much time.

With the Roman love, however, for visible display, there is to be an immense amount of material construction. The new paper is to have a special establishment—a "palace" having a ground-floor area of 13,050 square meters. The first floor is to be assigned to the composition-rooms, the second to the editorial. The printing presses will be built into the ground in an interior court. The cost of the building is estimated at $400,000. The design of the palace embraces a fine church for the use of the institution. Cardinals Newman, Hergenrother and others are mentioned as writers for the new journal.—Rome letter.

The Rothschilds.

Since the death of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, the head of the London house, many of the European newspapers have been speculating on the amount of capital, profits, and general business relations of the great financial family. Nobody outside of its members and their confidential employes has, we suppose, any actual knowledge of their affairs, although many persons claim to be informed as to their resources and operations. A writer in a Paris journal claims to be in a position to know that the present capital of the different Rothschild houses is at least $500,000,000, and that they can control as much more; which may be considered a pretty penny. Stories of the Rothschilds will always be told, as they will be about any and every body thought to be enormously rich. After the interest a man has in his own money, he seems to be most interested in some other man's money. More idle tales are told of the celebrated Jewish bankers (they by-the-by call themselves merchants, which they really are) than of any other bankers, probably because they are the wealthiest of their class. One of these tales is, that the Rothschilds almost never lose anything; which is absurd on its face, considering the prodigious extent of their operations. They lose a good deal, of necessity, because they make a great deal; but their profits are doubtless always in advance of their losses. There seems to be authority for the statement, often made, that their losses from depreciation in the funds and securities which followed the disturbances brought about in various European capitals by the French revolution of 1848 reached some $40,000,000. They afterward made up the loss, it is asserted, which they would be very likely to do. The interests of the Rothschilds are well-nigh universal, and their secrecy, save in open transactions, is invariably profound. Nathan Rothschild is reputed to have said: "One great reason of our success is that we know how to hold our tongues." They are as reticent as the grave touching their business. After Baron Lionel had been dead a week a London wag remarked: "The old Baron is just as communicative as ever." The time has passed, if it ever was, when Kings had to consult the Rothschilds before they could go to war, but they are still a stupendous power, and likely to be for generations. The recollection that the founder of the house, Meyer Anselm (he took the name Rothschild from the sign of a red shield placed over his small shop in Frankfort), entered Hanover in 1763 barefoot with a bundle of rags on his back is enough to prevent any poor devil from despair. But it is not every man who has the brain of Meyer Anselm.—Exchange.

Arrears of Pensions.

The Commissioner of Pensions has prepared for publication a statement showing that, up to June 30, 13,890 claims for arrears of pensions, representing $7,220,572.44, had been settled and paid, or were ready for payment distributed among the several agencies as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners upon the respective agency rolls, as follows:

Boston	800	Louisville	381
Canandaigua	946	Milwaukee	668
Chicago	1,297	New York	1,080
Columbus	1,296	Philadelphia	1,096
Concord	842	Pittsburgh	613
Des Moines	709	St. Louis	861
Detroit	695	Washington	963
Indianapolis	1,671	San Francisco	82
Knoxville	468

Upward of 9,000 cases were settled in June. The Commissioner of Pensions expects to be able to settle and pay an equal, if not greater, number monthly, until all are settled. Sixty-three thousand three hundred and seventy-two persons have made claims for arrears, but, including the 13,890 already settled, no more than 45,000 or 48,000 persons who are already pensioners have arrears due them. Many, therefore, who apply are not entitled to receive arrears. The Commissioner expects that nearly all who are entitled will be paid off by the end of October.

Answering a question as to the order of settlement, he states that the act of Jan. 25 established every pensioner's right at the same moment. The pensioner was required to make application for his arrears mainly for the purpose of enabling the pension office easily to identify the papers relating to the cases in which arrears were supposed to be due. The date of filing such application is not therefore taken into account in fixing the order of settlement. He further states that, if the cases had been taken up for settlement in order of filing applications, pensioners living in large cities near Washington would have been first paid, to the exclusion of those residing at a distance, and that such an order of settlement would be an unjustifiable discrimination in favor of pensioners residing in large towns and cities throughout the country, at the expense of residents of the smaller towns and of the agricultural districts. It is not practicable to observe any order of settlement, except simply to secure an equitable distribution of the settled cases throughout the entire country.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

Paper Bricks.

A California correspondent writes: Paper bricks, now being made in Wisconsin, strike us as exactly what we want here. One of our paper-mills made a few, which need but a touch to bring conviction. It is papier-mache compressed. San Francisco shanties will soon tumble to pieces. Yet brick is objectionable in this damp atmosphere. No country on earth has more or better fibrous material. Aquatic rushes cover all our still waters, and one of our mills uses that material for its pulp. Then we have the paper cactus in vast forests, in our southeastern deserts, which excels all others for bricks. Such houses would need no plaster, and they would be easily moved on wheels. The soles of all Chinese shoes are made of paper after this fashion. Their shoes have more sense than ours. They are made without elevated heels, and so shaped otherwise that neither corns nor bunions can be generated.

FARM NOTES.

THE cow which can manufacture the most food into the best milk is the best cow.

THE Holstein cow is neither nervous nor excitable, and is esteemed for her easy keeping qualities.

THOSE who would enjoy beets in their perfection should keep up a succession of the Egyptian, to use while they are still young. Thinnings of these and of the late crop make an excellent substitute for spinach.

ALL plants are benefited by having the ground stirred around them—there is no exception to the rule. The use of the hoe, or some similar implement, is generally the easiest mode of keeping the ground free from weeds or grass.—Rennie.

ASPARAGUS must be allowed time to grow its foliage, and prepare the nourishment for next year's crop. From not understanding this, many exhaust their beds by cutting too late. The old rule to stop when green peas come is a good one. When cutting ceases, let the tops grow; their shade will keep down the small weeds, and the few large ones that may appear are to be pulled by hand.

IN curing clover-hay our own plan is to start the machines in the afternoon and keep cutting until dark. Dew or rain will not hurt grass while it is green. The next morning, after the dew is off, rake the partially-dried grass into small windrows after dinner, and toward night rake into large windrows and put into cock. Turn or spread out the cocks the next morning, and draw in the hay in the afternoon.—Des Moines Register.

TO KILL the peach-tree borer, use fish brine diluted with an equal quantity of water—a pint around each tree in spring and fall. For very small trees use less. Excessive watering is bad for geraniums, and will cause the leaves to turn yellow and fall off. Water well, but not too often. If the pots stand in saucers the water must not be allowed to stand in them, for plants, like persons, cannot be healthy with wet feet.—Rennie.

MILK is undoubtedly improved by aeration. If applied the surrounding atmosphere should be sweet and free from offensive odors. Milk aerated in the atmosphere loaded with the emanations of putrid matter—vegetable or animal—would be likely to absorb odors, and hence caution should be taken that the aeration be not made in the stable or other places where the air is tainted with disagreeable odors. There have been a number of devices for aerating the milk, but perhaps the simplest and most easily applied is Bussey's deodorizing strainer and cooler. It is simply a strainer pail raised two feet above the can, and so arranged that the milk falls into a spray into the can.—Willard's Butter Book.

HAVE a distinct understanding with the hired help—both those on the farm and those in the house—as to term of service, amount of wages, time of payment, hours of labor, and the usual duties to be performed, so far as they can be outlined. Leave nothing unsaid or undone at the beginning of the season that may lead to misunderstandings, hard feelings, or the breaking of contracts when in the midst of hard work. In bargaining with them, do not ask of help to promise things that you know to be over-exacting. Demand a full day's work every time, and pay for that work promptly at the time specified in your agreement. Give help good tools, and exact good usage and care of them. Instruct men who handle teams, or who have charge in any way of the domestic animals of the farm, to treat them with kindness, feed them properly, and care for them as if their own property; and discharge those who disobey such instructions, for they are costing you money they do not earn. Cruelty to animals is an expensive indulgence. Impress upon hired men, and upon your own sons, the importance of thoroughness in their work. It is not alone how much they accomplish, but how perfectly it is done as well. Slighted crops give slight returns. Set a good table for farm hands. It is not cake, pies, and sauces, but good bread, a variety of meats, and plenty of vegetables and fruit that they crave, and they constitute the most healthful and strengthening diet.

Steamboat Accidents.

The following is a comparative statement of the number of accidents and fires, and the number of lives lost from various causes on steamboats during the years ending June 30, 1879 and 1878:

1879.	No. of Cases.	No. of Lives Lost.
Fires	1	1
Collisions	3	12
Explosions	8	25
Snags, wrecks and sinking	8	51
Accidental drowning	6	8
Miscellaneous	5	8
Total	31	105
1878.
Fires	3	22
Collisions	16	31
Explosions	10	33
Snags, wrecks and sinking	5	104
Accidental drowning	9	18
Miscellaneous	4	4
Total	47	212

The above comparison shows a reduction of nearly 51 per cent. in the number of lives lost, and about 34 per cent. reduction in the number of accidents causing loss of life. The increased efficiency of the Steamboat Inspection service is better shown by the following comparative statement: In 1875, the number of lives lost on steamboats was 607; in 1876, 394; in 1877, 224; in 1878, 212; and in 1879, 105.

How to Swim.

The editor of the London Truth, after observing that probably not one in twenty of the persons who indulge in boating on a holiday can swim, proceeds to tell his readers how to acquire this accomplishment. "Nothing," he says, "is more easy. When the air is out of a body its owner sinks; when the air is in the body its owner floats. Let any one slowly draw in his breath as he draws back his legs and push forward his arms, retain it while he is preparing for the stroke which is to propel him, and slowly allow it to go through his lips as his arms are passed back from before his head to his sides and his legs are stretched out. The action of the stroke should not be quite horizontal, but should be made on a slight incline downward. The real reason why people take weeks to learn how to swim is because swimming professors either do not know, or do not choose to teach, the philosophy of breathing so as to render the body buoyant. I would engage to make any one a tolerable swimmer in an hour, unless he be a congenital idiot."

ALL SORTS.

AN East Bridgeport (Ct.) woman, who is insane over the loss of her child, dressed up a cat and carried it about as though it were a baby.

THE King of Siam keeps his Ministers in a proper state of discipline by flogging them. In a recent effort he flogged a mandarin connected by marriage with an English resident, and was much surprised when the English represented that the proceeding was not proper.

THE heir to the Italian throne was playing with the daughter of one of his mother's ladies of honor, the Marchioness of Montreno, when, in a moment of royal wrath, he exclaimed: "If I were a King, I would have your head cut off." The King condemned the youth to eight days' confinement in his room, with degradation from his military rank for the same period, docking his rations, also, of one dish at each meal.

THE Florida Agriculturist describes, as the biggest orange tree in that State, one at Fort Harley, near Waldo. Its height is 37 feet, circumference at top 81 feet, circumference of trunk just above ground 8 feet 5 inches. At a foot from the ground it branches into four trunks, measuring respectively 37½, 39½, 40½ and 43 inches in circumference. Each of these fork from three to five feet above ground, and again higher up. All are bare of small limbs and foliage for many feet up, except on the outer sides, so that the interior of the tree presents the appearance of a large umbrella.

IT is Ralph Waldo Emerson who says of the practice of pairing off in Congress that it is unjustifiable because a vote for the right side can never be weighed fairly and paired with a vote for the wrong. This habit, which was known to English Parliamentary whips in the last century, was not introduced at Washington till 1840, where it drew an earnest protest from John Quincy Adams, then a member of the House, and, upon its introduction in the Senate, Benton met it with sharp condemnation. Ordinarily from five to twenty members are paired in Congress, but on a roll-call Saturday nearly sixty members were announced as paired.

IT is thought that before long the cotton-mills of New England will be built with one story, instead of with five or six, as at present. The advantages claimed are increased safety and convenience and a higher speed for machinery. The report of a New England gingham factory on last winter's use of a one-story building was that it covered about an acre, was built of brick, with corner towers, at a cost of $23,000, and saved in gas alone a sum equal to the interest on the cost of the building. The looms were driven at 12 per cent. higher speed than on the second floor of the old mill, the repairs were fewer and less imperfect work was turned out.

IT is a noticeable fact that with civilization, either as respects the improvement of the condition of either the human or the brute creation, or even of the varied flora of the earth, comes diseases not before known. A great impulse has of late been given, both in this country and Europe, to the hatching of fish by artificial means. To such an extent has this been carried that in some portions of the British isles the fish-breeders have gone too far. Thus, at present, salmon in the Scottish rivers are suffering from a pestilence. It begins as a skin disease, and soon a white mold eats into the head of the fish, which rubs itself to pieces, in its anygo, against gravel and rocks. Mr. Frank Buckland, the naturalist and connoisseur in salmon, thinks that the plague is the result of overstocking, just as in old times overcrowding caused typhus in jails and work-shops. Here is a hint for our pisciculturists.

THE British authorities in South Africa have begun to realize what all the rest of the world saw when the first accounts were received, that the desertion of Prince Louis Bonaparte by the officer and troopers accompanying him upon the reconnoissance in which he lost his life was an exhibition of infamous cowardice. The troopers testify that they and Lieut. Carey galloped two or three miles, after discovering the Zulus, without halting to see if the Prince was following them. Previous dispatches have intimated very clearly that a moment's assistance in mounting would have enabled young Bonaparte to escape. It appears, furthermore, that express orders from the commander-in-chief were disobeyed in sending the Prince upon a hazardous expedition without sufficient escort; and a correspondent candidly admits that "in the whole affair there is not one redeeming feature."

SIR WILLIAM FOTHERGILL COOKE, constructor of the first telegraph line in England, is dead, aged 73. He was born at Ealing, Middlesex, completed his education at Edinburgh University, and from 1826 to 1831 held a staff appointment in the East India army. Returning hence he studied anatomy at Paris and Heidelburg, and modeled dissections for his father's lectures. In 1836 Cooke turned his attention to electricity, and made it for years the subject of close study. While in partnership with Prof. Wheatstone he assisted in organizing, and became a director of, the first telegraph company in England, which constructed a line, in 1838-'39, from Paddington to West Drayton, on the Great Western railway. Other lines were built in the four years immediately following, one being of Government use. In 1867 the Royal Albert gold medal was given him for the introduction of practical telegraphy, and in 1869 he was knighted for his great services in the same field. Later (1871), a civil-list pension of £100 was granted him.

With a Serpent.

One hot, sultry day, while residing in British Guinea, feeling tired with unsuccessful sport, I threw my fishing-lines, and drew the canoe to the river's edge for the purpose of refreshing myself in the water. Having done this, I stretched myself half-dressed upon the benches of the boat, placing my loaded gun at my head ready for a shot if a chance should occur. In this position I fell asleep.

How long I slept I know not, but I was aroused by a curious sensation, as if some animal were licking my foot. In that state of half-stupor felt immediately after waking from sleep, I cast my eyes downward, and never till my dying day shall I forget the horror that passed through my frame on perceiving the head and neck of a monstrous serpent covering my foot with saliva, preparatory, as it immediately flashed upon my mind, to commencing the process of swallowing.

I had faced death in many shapes on the ocean, on the battle-field, but never till that moment had I conceived he could approach me in a guise so terrible. For a moment, and but a moment, I was fascinated; but recollection of my danger soon came to my aid, and I quickly withdrew my foot from the monster, which was all the while glaring upon me with basilisk eyes, and at the same moment grasped my gun which was lying loaded beside me. The reptile, apparently disturbed by my movement (I conceived it had previously taken me for a dead carcass,) drew its head below the level of the canoe. I had just sufficient time to raise myself up, pointing the muzzle of my gun in the direction of the serpent, when its head and neck again appeared moving backward and forward as if in search of the object it had lost. The muzzle of my gun was within a yard of it; my finger was on the trigger. I fired, and it received the shot in its head.

Rearing up part of its body in the air with a horrible hiss, which made my blood run cold, and by its contortions displaying to my sight a great part of its enormous bulk which had hitherto escaped my notice, it seemed ready to throw itself upon me and embrace me in its monstrous coils. Dropping my gun, by a single stroke of the paddles I made the canoe shoot up the stream out of his reach. Just as I was escaping I could perceive that the shot had taken effect, and that the blood was beginning to drop from the serpent's head But the wound appeared rather to have enraged than subdued him. Unfortunately all my shot was expended, or I would at a safer distance have given him a second salutation of the same kind. All that I have described took place in a much shorter time than I have taken up in recounting it.

As I went up the stream with all the velocity I could impart to the canoe, I heard the reeds among which the animal was taking refuge, crashing under its weight. I never once thought of the lines I had left, but hurrying the canoe as fast as it would go through the water, was not long in reaching the landing-place below my friend's house.

Hastily mooring the boat, I jumped ashore and hurried up to the house, and you may be certain lost no time in recounting my almost miraculous escape, and the wound I had inflicted on the animal.

"In that case," said Mr. H., "it cannot escape, and we must immediatly go in search of it."

Instantly summoning Cæsar, a black servant, he told him to get the guns ready and bring two of his fellows with him.

"If you choose to assist us in finishing the adventure you have begun," said he, "and to have a second encounter with your novel antagonist, we can show you some of the best and most dangerous sport our country affords. In general it is very dangerous to attack these snakes at close quarters after being wounded, as they become extremely infuriated; and there are not wanting instances in which life has been sacrificed by so doing. But we now take such precaution in approaching them, that it is next to impossible that any accident can happen."

I protested that nothing was further from my intention than staying behind, adding that had not my shot been expended, we should not have parted on such easy terms.

Just as we had finished speaking, Cæsar reappeared, himself armed with a club, one of those who followed him carrying a similar weapon, while the other was armed with a weapon similar to a bill-hook. This, Mr. H., told me, was to clear a road through the reeds, if the animal should have retreated among them; the club being reckoned the best instrument for a close encounter.

We were soon seated in the canoe, and gliding down the stream as fast as a couple of pairs of brawny arms could us. In a short time we reached the spot where my adventure had happened. The small part of the bank not covered with reeds, bore, from its sanguine hue, evident proof that the wound the animal had received could not have been slight. Exactly opposite this the reeds were crushed and broken, a sort of passage being formed among them, so wide that a man could with little difficulty enter. My friend commanded a halt, to see that the arms were in proper order. All being right, we listened attentively to hear if there was any noise which might direct us to our enemy. No sound, however, was heard.

One of the negroes entered first clearing with his bill-hook whatever obstructed our way. He was followed by Mr. H. and myself, with our guns, while Cæsar and his fellow servant brung up the rear. The reeds were, in general, nearly double our height, and, at the same time, pretty close. However, we easily made our way through them, partly assisted by the track which the serpent had evidently made.

We had penetrated, I suppose, about thirty yards, when the follow who was in advance gave the alarm that we were close upon the animal. Mr. H. ordered him behind and advancing along with me, we saw through the reeds part of the body of the monster, coiled up, and part of it stretched out; but its head was invisible. Disturbed and apparently irritated by our movements, it turned and appeared as though about to assault us.

We had our guns ready, and, just as we had caught a glimpse of his head, fired—both at the same moment. From the obstruction of the reeds, all our shot did not take affect; but what did seemed sufficient, for the animal fell hissing, and rolled itself into a variety of contortions, so that it became very dangerous to approach.

But Cæsar, who seemed to possess a great deal of coolness and audacity, motioning to his master and myself not to fire again in the direction of the serpent, forced a way through the reeds at one side, and making a circuit, came in before it, and succeeding in hitting it a violent blow; which stunned it; and a few repititions of this gave us the victory. We could now examine the creature in safety.

On measuring the snake we found it to be nearly forty feet in length, and of proportionate thickness. Mr. H. informed me that it was the largest he had seen killed, though he had often seen others under circumstances which convinced him that they must have been of far greater size.

A Model Confession.

Several years ago, in a western town, a lawyer, a member of a large church, got drunk. The brethren said he must confess; he demurred. He knew the members to be good people, but they had their little faults, such as driving sharp bargains, screwing the laborer down to low wages, loaning money at illegal rates, misrepresenting articles they had for sale, etc. But they were good people, and pressed the lawyer to come before the church meeting and own up to his sin of taking a glass too much, for they were temperance people and abhorred intemperance. The sinner finally went to the confession, found a large gathering of brethren and sisters, whose bowed heads rose and whose eyes glistened with pure delight as the lawyer began his confession. "I confess," he said, "that I never took 10 per cent, for money." On that confession down went a brother's head with a groan. "I never turned a poor man from my door who needed food and shelter." Down went another head. "I confess I never sold skim-milk cheese for a new one." Whereupon a woman shrieked for mercy. "I confess that I have not been Pharisaical and self-righteous, and have not sought to injure or persecute those who have not happened to agree with me," when down dropped numerous heads. "I confess that I never played the hypocrite, and I do not lie, and that I have not used religion as a cloak," when down went several other heads of the very ones who were so anxious that he should confess. "But," concluded the sinner, "I have been drunk and am very sorry for it." Whereupon the meeting quietly dispersed.

A White Race in Africa.

Maj. Serpa Pinto, the Portuguese traveler in Africa, who recently turned up at Durban, has been lecturing on his travels at Lisbon. In his address, which is translated in the Standard, he testifies distinctly to the existence of a white race in Central Africa, living in territory between the Cuchi and the Cubango. He himself spoke to men of this race, whom he describes as "whiter than Caucasians," who call themselves Cassequers, and are not bad people, though totally uncivilived. The have tufts of hair on their heads, like short wool. They have eyes like the Chinese, are powerful, and live a nomadic life. It is, of course, possible that an Albino family should have multiplied, but it is more probable that a small party of Vandals or Goths were forced southward, or tried to explore southward, were compelled by circumstances to remain, and being separated from all around them by their color, have survived as a distinct tribe. An almost perfectly white tribe exists in the Atlas, the decendants it is supposed, of Romans who fled to the mountains for protection against the barbarians, and, as far as is yet known, climate has little influence on color. The Copts remain white, and the Tasmanians were quite black, though they had always lived in a climate nearly identical with that of Britain.—London Spectator.

The Rights of Passengers in Sleeping Cars.

(New York Tribune.)

In a Massachusetts case, decided last summer, a San Francisco passenger over the Lake Shore road bought a sleeping car ticket at Cleveland for a berth in the car "China." At Toledo he left the car for dinner, but first asked an employe in the car if he should leave his baggage, and would it be safe. The employe answered yes. But when the traveler returned, the China had been switched off, and the hand baggage of the passengers carried into another car, which had been substituted for it. In this transfer the passenger's valise was lost; he could never get any account of it, and he sued, not the Wagner Car company, who owned the "China," but the Lake Shore company. They were for referring him to the owners of the China; but the court decided against the defense. The traveler's contract for transportation being with the Lake Shore company the fact that they had private arrangements with another corporation as to the terms for drawing a particular car, in which the traveler was not interested or concerned, made no difference in his right to sue them for negligent loss of his baggage. In a very recent case in Ohio the same question arose as to personal injury. The traveler in a sleeping car had his head bruised by the porter letting the upper berte fall upon it as he was arranging the car for the night. The blow affected the spine, and partial paralysis resulted. The injured person sued the carrying company, which sought to throw the responsibility on the sleeping car owners. And this case seems stronger than the other, for the negligence was in the manipulation of the berths, and had no direct relation to the transportation which the railroad company had undertaken. But the the court held that the case could not be shifted upon the other corporation. The railroad company was responsible to travelers for its whole train, for all cars alike.

A Chicken With Its Head Cut Off, Alive and Well.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Isaac Hileman, a young man of McLean county, Illinois, arrived in this city yesterday morning, having in his possession a chicken with its head cut off, the fowl being alive and apparently in good health. Hileman is stopping at the Crawford house. He carried his chicken in a large bird cage, such as is used for mocking-birds, and a number of persons in the office having been attracted by the wonderful spectacle of a chicken alive with its head cut off, it was not long until scores of people called to see it. Among the physicians who called were Dr. W. T. Taylor, of Louisville; Dr. Russell, of Springfield, Ohio, and Drs. E. O. Davis and Buckner, of this city. Of those who saw the rooster yesterday none had ever before heard of anything like it. On the 20th of this month the chicken will have been living without its head for four months. Hileman, who has the rooster in his care, relates the following history of it: It is a black brahma, about a year and a half old. It was raised by Bart Houston, near Joplin, Henry Co., Mo. On the 20th of March last he went out into the yard to catch a chicken to kill for dinner. This rooster was selected. It was caught by Mr. Houston, who laid its neck on a block, cut off its head with a hatchet, and threw the body on the ground to bleed. The chicken fluttered around for an instant and then getting upon its feet, ran under the barn. It could not be reached, and supposing it would lie there and be eaten by the rats, another chicken was captured and killed in place of it. Nothing further was thought of the chicken under the barn until two days later, when Mr. Houston and his family were startled to see the headless rooster wandering around the yard. The neck where the head had been severed from it by the stroke of the hatchet was still bloody. The chicken was of course blind. It was picked up and found to be strong and lively. The aperture of the throat was visible after the blood and feathers had been removed, and some soft food was inserted. By introducing the food about half an inch into the throat, the chicken was enabled to swallow it He was given about as much food and drink each day as full grown chickens usually require, and would have taken more. After that he was fed regularly and tended with great care. Five days later it was purchased by Nathan Moore, a gentleman living in the northern part of Henry county, who recently sold it to Isaac Hileman, or to persons whom he represents, who brought it to this city. Hileman says that when the chicken made its appearance from under the barn, minus its head, that member was hunted up and preserved in spirits. This is exhibited with the chicken.

HOW WE TALK.

The Dialects of the Various Sections of the Union.

[Appleton's Journal.]

Let a man go to "Congress," as we say, and he will soon find that he isamid a variety of dialects. The House of representatives assembles its members from every portion of the Union, and, although many of the members are sufficiently educated and traveled to have shed many of their peculiarities of speech, there will still be found abundant opportunity to study our dialects. Many will betray their "native," as Kentuckians term it, at the first opening of their lips. It may only be a cry of "Order!" or it may only be an address to the chair, "Mr. Speaker," or it may only be an allusion to "the gentleman from New York;" or "the gentleman from Virginia"—it is enough. In a casual looking in on the Senate, I have heard as characteristic New Englandisms as are to be found in "Sam Slick," and as choice specimens of Tennessee eloquence as are to be found reported in the pages of "Davy Crocket." Some years ago it was said that Mr. Chambers, of Pennsylvania, was so vexed at the pronunciation given his name by the clerk of the house that he at length refused to answer it. The clerk was a Virginian, and persisted in calling "Jeems Chawmbers! Jeems Chawmbers!"

A more important variety of our speech is that which is of Scotch Irish origin. The dialect of Pennsylvania is mainly Scotch-Irish. This is the more remarkable when we remember that the settlers of Pennsylvania were largely of the class of English Quakers, and that subsequently the Germans have come in almost overwhelming force. From Eastern Pennsylvania the Scotch-Irish spread abroad, going up the Cumberland Valley into Virginia, and crossing the Alleghenies both in Pennsylvania and Virginia. Their dialect is broadly defined, both against the people of New York on the north, and the people of Old Virginia on the south and west. No one at all acquainted with the Scotch-Irish dialect would be at a loss to identify the main peculiarities of speech exhibited in all the region indicated. The Pennsylvanian says "strenth" and "lenth" for strength and length. He says cannle and hannle and bunnle for candle and handle and bundle. He says I want out and "I want down" for "I want to get out" and "I want to get down." He says he will wait on you when he says he will wait "for you." If a person has had a slight sickness, and has speedily gotten over it, the Pennsylvanian will say that "he took sick," but it was only a "brash," and he soon got "quite better." The Pennsylvanian often uses "nor" for than after a comparative adjective. One thing is "more nor another," or better nor another." So "till" is often substituted for "to," in the Pennsylvania dialect. The horse comes till the stable, or a boy till the school-house. The word "into" is much used for "in" in Pennsylvania. A horse will be said to have a white spot into its forehead, or a field to have a fine spring of water into it. The Pennsylvanians use the word "whenever" to signify as soon as. Thus it will be said, "whenever the carriage came, the lady got in." In Pennsylvania they "lift a collection," and "take up a church," and ride to town "in a machine," with a horse beast drawing the machine. Moreover, if the horse is a lively animal, what some call "skittish," he will be called in Pennsylvania a wild beast. Now all these peculiarities are evidently of Scotch-Irish origin, and by means of them, and others like them, we can trace in our country the movements of the influence of this element of population. * * * In all the south conversation is more cultivated among educated people than at the north. It is a noteworthy fact that conversation, considered as an accomplishment, scarcely exists at all in our northern states. Scarcely one educated person in a hundred is a skillful and practical talker in general society. This is all the more remarkable when we remember that the whole nation is given to public talking. Let almost any man who in a parlor is wholly quiet, or who speaks only in an awkward or embarrased way, once mount a stump, and he will harrangue a crowd by the hour. But at the south almost every educated person of either sex will converse in a mixed company with freedom, tact and intelligence. Conversation is cultivated. There is an ambition to excel in it. From this, no doubt, in part, it has come to pass that pronunciation at the south is more old-fashioned than at the north. Conversation at the south has given the law to pronunciation, while at the north we have followed books and have changed the pronunciation to suit the spelling. Thus at the south it is common, if not universal, to hear clerk pronounced clark, and James Jeemes, and keer for car, and skeer for scare, rigiment and siminary for regiment and seminary. And not only do old-fashioned pronunciations prevail at the south, but also old-fashioned phrases and expressions.

A young man attaining his majority becomes "one-and-twenty" instead of "twenty-one." Instead of dining with a friend, or taking tea, they "eat a meal's victuals" with him.

Perhaps a sufficient number of illustrations has been given of the connection of our modes of speech, yet it would hardly answer to dismiss the subject without some reference to westernism of life and speech. Such words as "clearings" and "diggings" and "opening" point out sufficiently the character of the western country.

There is that, however, in western language which is yet more significant of peculiarity in western life. Western people are much in the habit of using words in odd and unexpected ways, and of instituting grotesque comparisons, and of indulging in picturesque expressions. They indulge in a sort of wild freedom of speech which seems very truly to harmonize with the freedom of life belonging to a new country. For example, they prefer to call whisky "corn juice," because therein is the conception of the "make" of the article. And when they go further and call it "chain lightning," they very vividly set forth the style of its working. They say of a man whose pretensions have been exposed or who has egregiously failed in carrying out his plans, that he has "flatted out." Then a man of stanch character is not only "there," but further, and especially, he is so safe that "he will do to tie to."

A western man, when traveling, when he happens to see a church, and desires to know who is its pastor, will ask the question. "Who runs the concern?" It is common everywhere to hear the word "badly" used for "much" or "greatly." Thus, a man caught in a shower will say he wants an umbrella very "badly." But see the emphasis which the western man obtains by a little twisting of the expression. He says, "I want an umbrella the worst kind."

Yet, if at the same time we study the dialects of other countries, we shall find the people of this whole land are one in language, in a higher and more perfect sense than is true of any other nation—one also in race, history, literature, religion, geography—and that nowhere under the sun are seen so many unities among a people, of such high and controlling sort, as exist in reference to American people.

An Amateur Pedestrian's 34-Days Walk from Chicago to New York.

[New York Sun.]

The walk was from Chicago to this city, a distance of about twelve hundred miles, and was accomplished by William Johnson, of the former city, in thirty-four days. He started from Chicago at 4 o'clock on the 11th of June, and arrived at 8:45 o'clock Wednesday morning in Jersey City, where he was met by about 150 persons who knew of his coming. Johnson performed the tramp under a contract, but says that he could not be induced to do it again for a good deal of money. He was accompanied 100 miles out of Chicago by J. H. Webb, a sporting man of that city, on horse-back, and subsequently W. McVeagh of Bristol, Ind., rode behind him as far as Cleveland. From there he was watched by Henry Anderson of Berea, Ohio, until he reached Dunkirk, in this state. The rest of the way he had to jog along unattended. His papers bear the signatures of scores of journalists, telegraph operators, railroad agents, hotel men, and others in the places through which he passed, certifying to his walking. When he arrived in Ashtabula, Ohio, he found the citizens greatly worked up on the tramp question. They had organized a military company, and driven a band of tramps out of the country. The tramps had been robbing and committing all kinds of depredations with impunity. He was privately informed that he was looked on as a common tramp and vagabond, and that if he remained in the state until the first of July he would be arrested and sent to the workhouse for two years under a new law. He got away as fast as his feet could carry him. He was followed from Dunkirk to Hornellsville by two tramps, who thought he had money, and wanted a chance to rob him at night. In crossing a lonely road in the mountains he was brought to a standstill by a rattle-snake which obstructed the way. His walk was undertaken under a contract with Charles E. Davies, of Chicago, who promised him $500 if he won.

Do It Now.

Don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through, it from beginning to end. Work, play, study, whatever it is—take hold at once, and finish it up squarely and cleanly; then do the next thing without letting any moments drop between. It is wonderful to see how many hours those prompt people contrive so make of a day; it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost. And if ever you find yourself where you have so many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret; take hold of the first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file, and follow after, like a company of well-drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line. You may have often seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he had accomplished so much in his life. 'My father taught me,' was the reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word, now.

Influence of Newspapers.

A school teacher, who had been engaged a long time in the profession, and witnessed the influence of a newspaper upon the minds of families and children, writes as follows: I have found it to be a universal fact, without exception, that scholars of both sexes and of all ages who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are:

1. Better readers, excellent in pronunciation, and consequently read more understandingly.

2. They are better spellers, and define words with ease and accuracy.

3. They obtain practical knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires of others, as the newspapers have made them acquainted with the location of the important places, of nations, their government and doings on the globe.

4. They are better grammarians, for having become so familiar with every variety of style in the newspaper, from the commonplace of advertisements to the finished and classical oration of the statesman. They more readily comprehend the meaning of the text, and constantly analyze its construction with accuracy.

5. They write better compositions, using better language, containing more thought, more clearly and more correctly expressed.

6. Those young men who have for years been readers of newspapers always take the lead in debating societies, exhibiting a more extensive knowledge upon a greater variety of subjects, and expressing their views with greater fluency, clearness and correctness.

Ancient Fancies Regarding the Beard

(London News.)

Mr. Darwin, in his "Descent of man,' inclines to the belief that the beard was originally ornamental. Ladies liked a bearded man; he was popular in primitive society, could select the fairest fair, his off-spring resembled him, and so on, according to the popular statements of this theory of selection. If this view be true, it must be admitted that women soon changed their minds. 'There is no wife for a bearded man,' says the Maori proverb. The northmen who settled in Iceland were entirely of the opposite may of thinking, and the only reproach that his foes brought against Njal was his lack of a beard. The Egyptians, as a rule, were clean shaven, especially the priests, "and for this they gave a certain sacred reason," which, imitating Herodotus, we "do not think it lawful to divulge." The neighboring Libyans, on the other hand were bearded, and the northern maritime enemies of the Egyptians, probably the early Greeks, wore rather thin, yellow beards. Yet out of shaven Egypt the Israelites carried beards which they highly respected. To cut an envoy's beard was a gross insult, and he was obliged to tarry somewhere till his beard was grown. Friends might generally touch the beard in a reverential sort of way, and thus Joab took hold of that of Amasa and ran him through the body with his sword. The Assyrian kings wore enormous beards, in many curdled tiers or stories, and we have an impression that some Orientals carried their beards in a box. Dr. Doran, in writing on the beard, gravely maintains that the early Greeks were shaven, and that they called all bearded and alien races "barbarous,' connecting the word with barba, a beard. But Homers Greeks, we know, wore their beards, and the races recognized as Greeks on the Egyptian monuments are sometimes bearded.

Mr. Whittier's Poetry.

It is not given to many poets to know what they do best, and the few who possess that knowledge are seldom content to be guided by it. The weakness of modern poets,—or one of their weaknesses,—is the desire to write long poems, as if poetry were measured by quantity and not quality. Another weakness is a studied avoidance of simple every-day themes. Mr. Whittier has mistaken his powers as little as any American poet, but he has not always cultivated them wisely, or he would have written ten narrative poems where he has written one. I use the word narrative in a large sense as covering a class of poems of which story-telling is the chief motive, and which directly appeal to the human sympathies of their readers. Such a poem (to draw an illustration from Mr. Whittier) is the touching ballad of "Cassandra Southwick." Another is "Barclay of Try." Mr. Whittier is the first American poet, I believe, who was deeply impressed by the inspiration of subjects like these, and they have amply rewarded the poetic pains he has bestowed upon them. I am not sure, indeed, that his fame will not ultimately rest upon some three or four of them. Say upon "Maud Muller," "Skipper Ireson's Ride," and "Telling the Bees." They had no prototypes in American poetry, and if they have had successors, these successors have come from the pen of Mr. Whittier, who is never so much himself as when writing narrative and legendary stories.

Mr. Whittier is one of the few American poets who have succeeded in obtaining the suffrages of the reading public and of the litterary class. Men of letters respect his work for its sincerity, simplicity, and downright manliness, and average readers of poetry respect it because they can understand it. There is not a grown man and woman in the land who does not readily enter into the aspiration and discontent of "Maud Muller." and into the glowing patriotism of "Barbara Fritchie." Whether the incident which is the inspiration of the latter ever occurred, is more than doubtful; nevertheless, the poem is one that the world willingly let die. The reputation of such poems is immediate and permanent, and beyond criticism, favorable or otherwise; the touch of nature in them is beyond all art. I should never think of comparing "Barbara Fritchie" with Bryant's "O Mother of a Mighty Race," but I am sure that it has a thousand readers where Bryant's poem has one. Bryant seldom reached the hearts of his countrymen, but his best poems appealed to what was loftiest in their intellects.—Richard Henry Stoddard, in the Midsummer Holiday Scribner.

A Mixed Family.

[Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.]

Mr. J. L. Holcomb, a gentleman of Kentucky, but who has been in Crittenden county, this state, for several months, tells us of a rather remarkable, though hardly unprecedented, matrimonial affair which occurred in that county recently. Out from the line of the railroad and aside from almost any other very well defined marks of civilization—marks so ill-delineated, in fact, that they are as a half-worn date on an ancient coin—there lived old man Rosebury and two sons, twins. The age of the old man is rather doubtful, but it is believed by his near neighbors the nearest of whom are within a stone's throw—that is, if the stone be thrown a mile and a half—that he is about fifty. The sons being twins, are about the same age, twenty-seven. The nearest human habitation was a house occupied by a Mrs. Glenn and two daughters, though, pity to say, the daughters were not twins at the time of their birth, and have not yet succeeded in attaining that point. Mr. Rosebury fell deeply in love with Mrs. Glenn, and the two twins, Robert and John, fell equally as much so with the two daughters, Mary and Rachel. The most imaginable wholesale love making ensued. The old man and widow seemed devoted to each other, and the younger people were sufficiently so to marry, which they all did on the same day. After the ceremonies the six happy souls and the six happy bodies repaired to the residence of the huibands. Everything worked smoothly. The old man was very kind to his newly made daughters, particularly so to Rachel, the wife of his son John. The kindness increased, and the other matrimonialists marveled one to the other. The old man even disregarded the wishes of his wife, and Rachel snuffed her Grecian-nose at her Roman-nosed husband. One morning, about two weeks after the marriage, the family of several division discovered that the old man and Rachel had gone. Searching, and not being able to find them but learning from a ferryman that they had crossed the river into Tennessee, the family returned. Pretty soon an intimacy sprang up between Robert, Mary's husband, and the old lady. The old lady was so wise, and had had such broad experience, that Robert never grew tired of profiting by her counsel. Another disaster, Robert and the old lady ran way, leaving John and Mary, who, seeing, as they were not blind, that they were left alone, clasped themselves in loving embraces, for it seems that they had loved each other from the first. Did they stay on the farm? No, sir. There is a mortgage on it. They packed up and, according to the ferryman, went over to Tennessee.

Attacking Southern Women.

[State Sentinel.]

The organs of the republican conspirators—the papers that from the first indorsed and applauded every act of republican despotism and scoundrelism, every theft and piracy, every fraud and perjury committed in the south in the interest of the republican party, have at last turned upon the women of the south, and are attacking them with the envenomed malignity of hooded cobras. By the triumph of the democratic party, the southern states were permitted to take their rightful place in the Union. By the triumph of the democratic party, the troops were removed, and bayonets no longer guarded the doors of the vilest dens of political villains that ever disgraced civilization. By the triumph of the democratic party much of the criminal machinery of the republican party has been destroyed. The detestable test-oath has been abolished, the courts, in some degree, purified. The right to employ bayonets to control the ballots has been abrogated, and deputy marshals, whose chief duty was to arrest those who dared to vote against the republican party, if they are employed at all, must work for nothing or trust for their pay to the corruption fund of the republican party, whose dirty work they will be required to perform. The fangs of republicanism having been extracted, and its scandalous record exposed, the organs of the party, in the excess of their malignity, have commenced their attacks upon southern women. The Chicago Inter-Ocean is making itself conspicuously detestable in the business. A paper that could court for its state the unutterable disgrace of placing Logan in the United States senate has reached a level sufficiently infamous to insult women, and in a recent issue devotes a large portion of its editorial space to the vile work. But these organs of republican conspirators, defenders of fraud and apologists of perjury, mistake the temper of the northern people. Bloodshirtism has had its day. The north is too chivalric, too honorable to indorse such a pusillanimous course—so utterly beneath the dignity of a gentleman and characteristic only of that black depravity which when opportunity offers, commits the crime against women of nameless atrociousness.

Suggestions for August.

As August is a charming month in the country, if you are blessed with any "city relations," a visit from them should be insisted on. Show them all the beautiful growing things in meadow vale and wood, and every pretty view from mountain top; teach them to milk the cows and note the ripening crops, and encourage in them a greater respect for the calling which feeds and maintains the nation. Farrow cows, intended to be fattened in the fall, should be dried off at once, and to do this, milk only enough to relieve a painful distention of their udders.

Spring colts and calves should be gradually weaned this month. Confine them in clean, dry enclosures, and let them suck twice a day; then once a day; then once in three days, etc. See that none of the young stock suffer from the lack of a bountiful supply of clean water, with good grass or fine hay, and salt.

Eggs may be collected daily, changing nest eggs frequently, and packing the gathered eggs in oats in a cool, but not damp room. Go into a dark room, and pass the eggs, two or three in each hand, before a lamp; if the shells are clean, bad ones will easily be discovered.

Harrows.—Clean the points of the teeth, and if they must be left out of doors, let them stand on strips of board as rust often corrodes them nearly as much as usage wears them out.

Grapes.—If the vines have been properly trained, but little now needs to be done, except to pinch off the laterals and the new growth from the ends of the fruiting canes, as often as needed. Use the hoe freely. Young vines, not yet fruiting, need the same care to secure the best possible growth of wood. Keep all securely tied to the stakes.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

CHASTINE COX, the murderer of Mrs. Hull (says a New York telegram), has made the discovery that he is one of the worst persecuted and ill-used men on earth, as well as the most exemplary Christian. "I am conscience-clear," said he to-day, "of the murder of Mrs. Hull. I did not go into that house with a thought against her life, and I came out of it clearer in conscience than Dist. Atty. Phelps will be. The witnesses all lied when they testified to things. They knew themselves they lied, and when they testified to what I told them they lied worse. They say I've got to die. When they die, if any of them get to heaven they'll find me there to receive them. But I don't think they will. They say I laughed and was heartless during my trial. They did not understand why I smiled. It was the smile of faith. I knew God was with me, and that He would protect me against the malice of my enemies. If I've got to be hung I'll go to the gallows with that same smile on my face."....John Hope, one of the burglars who managed the Manhattan (N.Y.) Savings Bank robbery with its $3,000,000 of swag, has been sentenced to the State prison for twenty years....Gen. William F. Barry, Colonel of the Second Artillery, in command at Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, died at that post a few days ago.

A NEW YORK dispatch says that Judge Noah Davis granted a writ of error in the case of the people against Chastine Cox, which was then taken before Judge Potter, who thereupon granted a stay of proceedings. The case will come before the Supreme Court on the 1st of October....B. S. Ford, of Chestertown, Md., member of the Maryland Senate, was drowned the other day at Ocean City while bathing.

BY the premature explosion of a blast in the quarry near Huntingdon, Pa., three men—Michael Ryan, a sub-contractor, of Philadelphia, John Roncornoni, and a Mr. Keith—were instantly killed. Their bodies were terribly mutilated. James Davis escaped with the loss of his hearing.

A HORRIBLE murder was committed at Ellington, Chautauqua county, N. Y., a few days ago. During the temporary absence from home of Mr. Charles Crosly, a wealthy farmer, some unknown parties, supposed to be vagrant tramps, entered the house, choked Mrs. Crosly to death and robbed her of $80. Mr. Crosby, returning home before the villains had gotten away, was assailed, shot and almost beaten to death. Two tramps were arrested on suspicion of being the authors of the crime.

NEW YORK has a large number of cases of yellow fever at her quarantine, and one death from the disease has taken place in Brooklyn and one in Hoboken.

THE WEST.

IT is currently reported in Milwaukee that Alexander Mitchell, President of the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, has gone to Europe to negotiate for the control of the Northern Pacific road.

CINCINNATI is thoroughly alarmed on the subject of yellow fever, and has ordered a strict quarantine against Memphis and other infected localities....A Bismarck dispatch says that a steamer cleared Old Fort Peck, Gen. Miles' new base of supplies for the movement to establish a military patrol of the northern border of Dakota and Montana, the cargo being a collection of ordnance stores that looks as though there was to be no lack of fighting conveniences. The dispatch adds that there is a feeling in army circles that Gen. Miles is placing his command in a position of grave danger, and that by leading a force of 600 soldiers into a region infested by 3,000 Indians with the most relentless hatred of men in uniform he is extremely liable to encounter a repetition of the Custer affair.

LOUIS ZAGODI, Paul Bischoffsky and —— Fisher, first name unknown, were drowned in the bay at San Francisco by the swamping of a boat....A St. Louis dispatch reports that, instead of falling off, the negro exodus from the Southern States continues as strong as ever, and there is no prospect of its stopping. An effort is to be made to inform the negroes in the South who may be contemplating emigration that they must not expect any help in St. Louis.

ONE of the most deplorable and tragic cases of self-slaughter that has occurred in many days is recorded by the Chicago papers. Elizabeth, Hannah and Nona Trowbridge, three maiden sisters, aged respectively 43, 40 and 30 years, lived alone in an elegant mansion in Hyde Park, a suburb of Chicago. Through much brooding over exaggerated or imaginary wrongs and misfortunes, they became so despondent in spirits that the three spinsters resolved to end their troubles in death. The two eldest hanged themselves, Nona assisting in the execution of the job. The latter, however, failed to carry out the final act of the terrible tragedy, which involved the taking of her own life. Instead of this, she set up a pitiful moaning and crying, which attracted the attention of some neighbors, who, upon entering the premises, discovered the two sisters hanging to ropes attached to large ten-penny nails that had been driven into the walls for the purpose.

A DISPATCH from Fort Keogh reports an engagement near the mouth of Beaver creek, between two companies of troops and Lieut. Clark's Indian scouts, of Miles' command, and 300 hostile Sioux. The troops lost four Indian scouts killed and two soldiers wounded. When Miles' main column, which was twelve miles behind, came up, the Indians were pursued a distance of fifteen miles, but made their escape to Sitting Bull's camp....A dispatch from Fort Peck says that Joseph Lambert, a well-known interpreter, scout, and guide, was, with his wife and four children, killed by the Sioux. They had been out to Yankton camp, and were within six miles of Wolf point, on their return, when attacked. Nine persons in the party were killed. One child, a girl, carried away to captivity. A little boy, a son of Lambert, who was ahead of the party, and ran back to look for them, was lanced through the body, but may recover.

GEN. DONALD MCLEAD died at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, after a short illness. He was just 100 years old. Born in Aberdeen, Scotland, he became a soldier at an early age, saw service in the Peninsular war, and claimed to have been one of the pall-bearers at the burial of Sir John Moore.

IN the case of the suicide of the two Trowbridge sisters, at Chicago, the Coroner's jury have rendered a verdict to the effect that the two women were insane when they planned and executed the double taking-off, and that the surviving sister, being also of unsound mind, is not accountable for her knowledge of and participation in the suicidal preparations.

THE SOUTH.

FIVE new cases of yellow fever and one death were reported at Memphis on the 18th inst. There was great excitement in the city, and everybody was leaving that could get away....The relatives of the late Mrs. Dorsey, who bequeathed $250,000 worth of property to Jeff Davis, will contest the will. Davis was the guest of the lady before her death, and the contest will doubtless be made on the ground of undue influence or the insanity of the testatrix.

THERE were five new cases of yellow fever, and one death, in Memphis on the 19th of July, and on the 20th seven new cases and four deaths were reported to the Board of Health. A Memphis dispatch of the 21st says: "Business is dead. The wholesale merchants have nearly all made their arrangements to continue business at other points. Many retailers have closed their stores and left the city. The city authorities recommend the immediate evacuation of the city, and a number of prominent citizens have paid the passage of all their employes to other points. The officers of the Hebrew Hospital Association to-day distributed about $3,000 to 100 poor Jewish families, thus furnishing them the means to leave the ill-fated city. The city authorities are sending the poor people out of the city, having made arrangements to get half-fare rates over the Louisville and Nashville railroad. Dr. Dudley D. Saunders, acting President of the Board of Health, states the fever is not so malignant as last year, and yields more rapidly to treatment. Citizens continue to leave in large numbers. The Memphis and Paducah railroad has ceased running trains. The Avalanche, Appeal and Ledger will, from date, issue only half-sheets."

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE (colored) was hanged at Sardis, Miss., July 18, for the murder of Tom Butler (colored), committed on the 6th of last August. The execution was witnessed by a crowd of 3,000, principally negroes.

THIRTY-SIX new cases of yellow fever and four deaths were reported at Memphis on July 21. The panic-stricken citizens were taking their departure as fast as they could obtain means of conveyance. It was estimated that up to date over 15,000 people had left the city. The Secretary of War had ordered 1,500 tents to Memphis, and the issue of rations for 10,000 persons for twenty days. St. Louis and other cities and towns along the Mississippi river were thoroughly alarmed, and were taking steps to prevent the introduction of the contagion.

FIVE new cases of fever and seven deaths at Memphis on the 22d of July. The exodus of citizens was going on at a rapid rate. The two colored military companies volunteered their services to protect the property of the city.

COL. THOMAS BUFORD, who killed Judge John Elliott in the street, in Frankfort, Ky., in March last, has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, the jury fixing his punishment at imprisonment for life in the penitentiary.

AT Memphis nineteen new cases of yellow fever were reported to the Board of Health on the 23d of July. City very quiet, and people leaving as fast as they could get away. It was estimated that there were less than 5,000 people in the city liable to the fever, and this number would be vastly reduced only for the brutal conduct of the railroads in demanding full fare from all refugees. The entire South is now quarantined against the ill-starred city.

MEMPHIS had eighteen new cases of fever and five deaths on July 24.

BY the fall of a scaffolding at Petersburg, Va., James Charles, painter, was immediately killed, Alec Nugent fatally injured, and Robert, son of James Charles, seriously injured....Two men named Reed, father and son, at Opelika, Ala., attacked one Garsty, the younger Reed using a knife. Grasty, finding himself getting the worst of the fight, drew a pistol and fired with fatal aim, killing the elder Reed instantly and mortally wounding the son. All the parties were highly connected.

POLITICAL.

THE New York Greenbackers will hold their convention for the nomination of a State ticket at Utica on the 28th of August.

THE Wisconsin Republican State Convention met at Madison on the 23d of July. John B. Cassidy was chosen to preside. Gov. W. C. Smith was nominated for re-election on the first ballot. The other State officers were renominated by acclamation, as follows: Lieutenant Governor, James M. Bingham; Secretary of State, Hans B. Warner; Treasurer, Richard Guenther; Attorney General, Alexander Wilson; Superintendent of Public Instruction, William C. Whitford. After the adjournment of the convention, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the party in Wisconsin took place, the meeting being held in the open air. John Walworth presided, and speeches were made by Messrs. Garfield, of Ohio; Chandler, of Michigan, and some of the local orators....The Pennsylvania Republicans, in convention at Harrisburg last week, nominated Samuel Butler, of Chester county, for State Treasurer....At Jackson, the 23d of July, the State Convention of the National Greenback Labor party of Mississippi assembled. A platform was adopted and an Executive Committee appointed, after which the convention adjourned sine die.

THE Republican State Committee of New York met last week, and fixed upon Saratoga as the place for the State Convention. Sept. 3 was chosen as the time.

GENERAL.

A MELANCHOLY accident occurred, a few evenings ago, at Point au Trembles, twenty-one miles from Quebec, Canada, whereby eight people met a watery grave. A party of fifteen set out for a sail on the St. Lawrence, in a pleasure yacht. When about the middle of the river a sudden squall overtook them, the yacht was upset, and eight of the fifteen were drowned....A Montreal dispatch announces the total loss of the English screw steamer Burgos, in St. Mary's bay, during a dense fog, while going from Montreal to Liverpool, England. A small portion of the cargo was saved. No mention was made of the crew; therefore it is supposed that all were saved.

GRADUATES of the Canadian Military School are to be allowed hereafter to compete with natives of the British islands for commissions in the army.

VISIBLE supply of grain in the States and Canada: Wheat, 11,702,000 bushels; corn, 11,757,000 bushels; oats, 1,489,000 bushels; rye, 330,000 bushels; barley, 380,000 bushels....Gen. Grant writes to a friend at Washington that he expects to land at San Francisco Oct. 1.

RECENT deaths: Gustavus A. Somerby, a distinguished criminal lawyer of Boston; Maj. Sheridan Waite, late a prominent citizen of Illinois, at Leadville, Col.; D. A. January, an old and wealthy merchant of St. Louis, Mo.; William Phelps, a leading wholesale grocer of Detroit, Mich....Burned: Three flouring mills and one elevator at Oswego, N. Y., loss $150,000, insurance $83,000; Jackson's planing mill and lumber yard at Salisbury, Md., loss $50,000.

WASHINGTON.

THE creation of a sinking fund for the payment of the Pacific railroad bonds, has been fairly begun. Government bonds are purchased monthly, according to the terms of the Thurman act, with funds due the roads for transportation, and withheld by the treasury. It is reported that something more than $300,000 worth of bonds have been in this way placed to the credit of the sinking fund.

ON the 21st of July interest ceased on the final call of 10-40 United States bonds, and the refunding operations of the treasury were ended until 1881, when the new 5-20s and 6s of 1881 fall due....The demand for the standard-silver dollars for circulation continues at the rate of about $550,000 per month. At the present rate of coinage and sales, it is estimated there will be about 31,000,000 of the standard-silver dollars in the treasury when the winter session of Congress begins....A Washington correspondent says the Superintendent of the Census expects to make the enumeration of next year more thorough than ever before and more valuable in statistical information, and that he is confident it will show an increase of 10,000,000 people since 1870, making the total population 48,000,000 in 1880.

THE computations made at the Bureau of Statistics, but not yet published, for the eleven months ending May 30, 1879, disclose the fact that for the first time in the history of the country the exportation of breadstuffs has exceeded in value that of cotton and tobacco, the two staples of the South, combined. The following are the figures:

Breadstuffs	$196,000,000
Cotton	159,000,000
Provisions	107,000,000
Tobacco	21,000,000

THE receipts of the Postoffice Department, as shown by the returns of the various postoffices throughout the country, during the quarter ending March 31, reached the unprecedented amount of $7,940,000....A Washington dispatch says that positive instructions have been sent by the War Department to prevent Gen. Miles from bringing on an Indian war, and telling him that the only purpose of sending him into the field was to protect the navigation of the Missouri river.

FOREIGN.

THE attempt of the English Liberals to abolish corporal punishment in the army met with a decisive rebuff in Parliament. A resolution declaring that any bill contemplating the retention of such punishment would be unsatisfactory was defeated by 289 to 183, the majority being the largest that the Conservatives have been able to muster for some time.

THE new Moscow journal, the Russian Courier, has been suspended for two months for urging complete liberty of the press....Lieut. Landsberg, of the Russian Guards, a cadet of one of the oldest families in Courland, has been sentenced to fifteen years' exile in Siberia. He is a Lieutenant in the Imperial Guard, and accused of both Nihilism and murder.

PRINCE CHARLES of Roumania, it is reported, has threatened to abdicate unless the Jews are emancipated....Serious anti-rent troubles are reported in some parts of England....The leaders of the Bonapartists of France had a meeting at Paris the other day, and formally designated Prince Jerome Bonaparte as the head of their party and the heir to the imperial crown. He accepted the trust....South African advices report some lively skirmishing between the British and Zulus, but nothing like a decisive battle....A Calcutta dispatch says the disturbances in the Rumpa district of the Madras Presidency against the tax of palm trees has assumed the form of an open rebellion....A great fire lately occurred at Nijni-Novgorod, in Russia. While the fire was raging an explosion occurred in one of the shops, killing twenty-one persons....There was a fall of snow in Dauphiny, in Southeastern France, on the 20th of July.

RINDERPEST is playing havoc with the cattle in Russia....A cable dispatch reports the harvest in Hungary almost an entire failure.

A BATTLE was fought between the British and Zulus, in South Africa, on the 4th of July. The savages, under the immediate command of King Cetywayo, numbered anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 men, according to the reports, while the British had 1,000 natives and 4,000 regulars. The battle was not of long duration. A cavalry reconnoissance drew out the enemy, and the attack began at half-past 8 in the morning, and by half-past 9 the blacks were in retreat. A general rout followed, the Zulus losing about a thousand men, besides large numbers who surrendered after the fight. The English loss was only ten killed and fifty-three wounded. Ulundi, the Zulu capital, and all its military kraals, were destroyed....De Lesseps has issued a prospectus of the Darien Canal Company. The capital is fixed at 400,000,000 francs. Only 125 francs per share will be called up in the first instance. Interest at the rate of 5 per cent. will be paid on actual money received during the course of construction. De Lesseps estimates an income of 90,000,000 francs from the canal and reckons the shareholders will receive 11¼ per cent. per annum.

A CABLE dispatch gives some particulars of the battle fought between the British and Zulus at Ulundi: "The fighting was commenced by an attack of the Zulus upon Butler's cavalry, which had been sent out for a reconnoissance in force from Lord Chelmsford's advanced position. The chief object of the cavalry was to provoke the general attack which followed, but Butler and his men nearly paid for their success with their lives. They were surrounded by immense numbers of Zulus, and only effected their return to the main body by literally cutting their way through, fortunately, with but few casualties. Some 20,000 Zulu warriors, believing the British to be completely defeated, then rushed on. The English formed a hollow square, and rained destruction upon the enemy from Gatling guns and other artillery, the rifles of the infantry also doing great execution. After a combat of about half an hour the Zulus broke, when the cavalry, led by a body of the Lancers and Butler's horse, rushed out and completed the rout. The havoc among the enemy, who fought with the bravery displayed in the whole campaign, was immense, and there were a number of hand-to-hand conflicts."....King Cetywayo has very considerately sent the sword of the Prince Imperial to the British commander. It will be cherished by the Bonapartists as a precious relic.

Dime Novels Again.

A week or two ago, four lads in New York, from 14 to sixteen years old, resolved to start to the far West to seek their fortunes. After a long saving, they managed to provide their outfit, which consisted of one gun, two parlor-pistols, one dagger, four horse-blankets—for their fiery mustangs which they meant to bestride—and 20 cents in cash.

They met at midnight at one of the ferries for a start, when the leader of the expedition discovered that he had left the photograph of his lady-love at home, and, declaring that he could not travel without it, went back for it.

His mother heard him climbing in at the bath-room window, and gave the alarm; a policeman arrested him as a burglar, and he was marched off to a police-station, where his father recognized him the next morning.

The story came out, and the boys were taken home, we are told, "to be taught better sense." We doubt, however, if the teaching be successful. A lad who can reach the age of 16 with no other qualification for facing and conquering the world than a pistol, a dagger, and the ideas gained from dime novels, is not likely ever to make a useful man in it. His parents are too late in beginning their training.

We have often before called attention to the growing ill effects of this lower class of sensational novels and story-papers upon our young people. An incident which occurred the other day enforces this fact as no words of ours can do.

A young woman was sentenced to imprisonment for life for the murder of her husband, a good honest man, who had been faithful and kind to her. "In her cell," states the newspaper of the town, "after the trial was over, was found the unopened Bible, furnished to all prisoners, and heaps of the cheap novels which she has delighted to read for years."

If her reading had been different, so we venture to say, would have been her actions and her fate. "Figs do not bring forth thorns, nor grapes thistles."

Harry's Dress.

Little Harry S., of 5 summers, who had been exalted from girl's to boy's habiliments, recently appeared at school arrayed in the former, when his teacher kindly remarked: "Children, I hope that none of you will tease Harry, nor speak of his dress, as his mother has sent him in it to punish him for being naughty, and he feels mortified and sorry." Thereupon Master Harry mounted his seat, and, repudiating the teacher's kind protection, extended his clenched fist and harangued his class thus: "If any girl says anything about it, I'll say nothing; but if a boy does, I'll knock his head off;" and the fire of his eyes bespoke his self-reliance.

PERSONALS.

GEORGE BANCROFT is again ill at Newport.

GEORGE ELIOT expects to come to America next year.

SENATOR GARLAND, of Arkansas, has also been LL.D'd.

COL. BOB INGERSOLL has sold his $25,000 residence at Peoria.

GEN. LONGSTREET is said to be making money in the hotel business.

GEN. RICHARD TAYLOR left all his property to his three daughters.

BOTH Moody and Sankey will tug at the sins of St. Louis next winter.

MR. T. S. ARTHUR, the author, is visiting his son, a physician, in Scranton, Pa.

THE adopted daughter of the late Secretary Seward is said to be writing a book.

THERE were 7,639 marriages in New York city during the year ending with June 30.

THE business of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild will be carried on by the three sons.

THE poet Longfellow is small, thin and straight. His poems are great, broad and gracefully curved.

SENATOR THURMAN travels in a linen duster that completely envelopes him, there being on his head a large silk cap.

MRS. SEARS sued the Texas Central railroad for $2,500 damages for killing her son. The jury returned a verdict in her favor and awarded her $5,300.

VETERANS of the war of 1812 are dying off rapidly. Roll-call at Paris (Ky.) reunion in June of last year showed 52 present; the same roll this year showed 17 present, the other 35 having died.

MR. ALVAN CLARK, the famous maker of telescopes in Cambridge, Mass., is 76 years of age, hale, and energetic, and skillful. For forty years he was a successful portrait painter, before he took to telescopes.

A LADY correspondent at Washington, writing of Senator Hill, of Georgia, says: "He has been a Methodist class-leader or preacher, and a certain aroma of sanctimoniousness seems to emanate from his sandy face, or to hover over it like an aura. His hair is sandy, touched with gray, with a slight fringe of the same below his chin. His mouth is clean-cut and resolute, his eyes light blue, with a certain meditative, introverted light in them which shows that he does considerable thinking after a fashion of his own."

If the Sahara is Flooded, What?

The only important objection which has thus far been urged against the undertaking has arisen in the apprehensions expressed by a few scientists that the evaporation produced by so large and so shallow a body of water, exposed to the tropical sun, would be sufficient to deluge Northern Europe with incessant rains, and to reduce materially the temperature in all the countries north of the Alps. It has been feared that winds freighted with moisture on crossing the cold summits of the Alps would precipitate vast volumes of water and produce a degree of cold which would give Denmark and Northern Germany a semi-Arctic climate and produce a glacial epoch farther north. Is it not probable that all such apprehensions arise out of a misunderstanding as to the topography of the Sahara and North Africa? The entire region to be flooded is practically shut in by mountain-chains on all sides. The Atlas mountains on the north, lifting their snow-clad peaks in some instances 12,000 feet, afford a sufficient bulwark for the protection of Europe from increased humidity. The only possible northern outlet for air currents from El Juf would be across Tunis in a northeasterly direction over the widest part of the Mediterranean. Currents moving in that direction, if they reached Europe at all, would touch the shores of Greece after they had lost most of their humidity. M. de Lesseps, after a careful examination of the question, is convinced that it would result in the general improvement of the climate of Europe rather than to its detriment. The advantage of the increased evaporation to North Africa cannot be overestimated. The snow-clad cliffs of Aban, lying to the east of the proposed sea, and the Kong mountains to the south, would bring down upon the parched desert grateful rains, which, with the assistance of cultivation, would in time no doubt redeem thousands of square miles from the desolation of the sands.—Scribner.

A Child's Presence of Mind.

Victor Hugo, the French poet and novelist, has a little granddaughter 8 years old. Jeanne is his pet, and has been immortalized in two of the poet's works. She is a bright girl, fond of stories, and remembers what she hears. Not long ago a remembered story saved her life.

Mounting the library steps to wind up a clock on the mantelpiece, her pinafore caught fire. In a moment her dress was in a blaze.

She had heard the story of a lady who, when her dress caught fire, did not run, but rolled on the carpet. The story flashed in her mind, and little Jeanne, instead of running out of the room, lay down and rolled over and over on the floor.

Though severely burned, she saved her life through a retentive memory and a cool head. Jeanne is likely to be known, if she lives to grow up to womanhood, outside her grandfather's books.

SNOW fell at Portland, Me., on the Fourth of July, and the thermometer fell twelve degrees in twenty minutes.

ALL SORTS.

A RUSSIAN paper is authority for the statement that the Sheik of Derejah, in Arabia, has organized a formidable religious crusade against the domination of Turkey. The object is to restore the fundamental idea of Islam and liberate Arabia from Turkish rule, and make that country again the seat of pure Mohammedanism.

THE Imperial Museum at Vienna has lately become possessed of some of the instruments used by Australian savages to induce their gods to give them rain. These are small lancet-shaped pieces of wood smeared with red ochre and rudely engraved. They are used in mystical ceremonies, attended with incantations.

IT is said there are fifty men in New York who make a living as finders of lost money and other valuables dropped about the ferries and railroad ticket offices, near the theaters, where people are buying tickets from curbstone speculators, and in front of up-town resorts, where young men, with more money than sense, drink wine. The New York finders operate in the early dawn. In the cities of Continental Europe they go about with lanterns, near midnight, peering into gutters and all other possible places.

REPORTS received at the Land Office in Washington show a larger movement of population this season into districts containing Government lands than has been known for many years. The entries of land for homestead settlement and tree-planting are most numerous in Kansas and Dakota, while Minnesota and Nebraska are also receiving heavy additions to their population. The returns at the General Land Office show that in one recent period of six days there were 1,200 entries, covering nearly 200,000 acres.

A RUSSIAN cruiser takes nearly 1,000 convicts from Odessa to found a penal colony in the great island of Saghalien, lying north of the Japanese empire. A shipload of female convicts is to follow. If the Nihilists are shipped to the new colony as fast as arrested, it will soon become the most populous part of the Russian dominions. Four hundred persons, suspected of entertaining Nihilistic opinions, were captured at Kieff a few days ago, and the great prisons in and near St. Petersburg and Moscow have been swarming with captives of the same class for months.

FEW know that an unnaturalized British subject once served two years in our National House of Representatives. The Natchez (Miss.) Democrat contains a letter written by Lawyer E. Safford, at Magnolia, to Col. J. F. H. Claiborne, at Natchez, naming W. H. Hammett as the foreign Congressman. Mr. Hammett was elected to Congress by Mississippi Democrats in 1843, and served out his full term, no one appearing to discover his ineligibility. For proof Mr. Safford calls attention to an act of the Mississippi Legislature, passed Aug. 5, 1861, for the relief of the Widow Hammett. As Mr. Hammett was an alien at the time of his death, the act was passed to transfer his property, that had escheated to the State, to Mrs. Hammett.

LIFE among the Fall River mill operatives is pictured by the Boston Herald as a round of drudgery. They live in crowded and often cheerless tenements, although the common laws of health are not generally disregarded and some of the homes are beautified with pictures, carpets and flowers. Men, women, and children work together in the mills, and the home is little more than a lodging in most cases. The wives and mothers are bound to a perpetual slavery. They work as hard as anybody in the mill, and, when the mill day is over, their duties become terribly onerous. Upon reaching home supper is to be swallowed, and then, while the rest of the family find rest or recreation, all there is of housekeeping is performed by the wife, occasionally assisted by her children, if they are old enough. There will be no time the next morning for cooking breakfast, and it must be looked out for over night. Dinner is to be taken to the mill, and its substantial materials must be cooked during the evening. While the kettle is bubbling, or the fryingpan sizzling or the oven baking, or all together are sending out their heats, the washing of the bed and personal clothing for the household may be performed, the old man's trousers mended, or the children's clothes made or repaired. If one of the brood is sick it may also receive attention at the same time. The wife and mother toils thus for her family living a life the like of which no Southern slave ever dreamed about. Intemperance too commonly adds its sorrow to the rest.

THE Russians are engaged upon an engineering work of vast importance in Central Asia, it being nothing less than the restoration of the long-disused channel of the Oxus river—the stream which figures in recent accounts of Russian conquests by its native name of Amoo-Daria. The ancient geographers concur in representing that this great river—which rises near the frontier of Afghanistan, and, flowing westward some 600 miles, turns to the north and empties into the Sea of Aral—once delivered its waters into the Caspian, and formed the thoroughfare of a large commerce with the western portions of the then known world. This old channel has been traced and surveyed, and the former mouths of the river in the Balkan gulf or bay of the Caspian have been found. A St. Petersburg dispatch says that thousands of men are now employed upon works which are designed to turn the course of the Oxus, and once more give it an outlet into the Caspian. The length of the abandoned channel of the river is between 300 and 400 miles. The nature of the work now in progress is not described, but it has probably been found that the old channel is not filled up, and that a comparatively small amount of labor in embankment and cutting would be necessary to turn the stream into it. The task of cutting a river through 400 miles of sandy desert would be something to stagger even the most audacious of modern engineers. The restored channel, giving the Russians water transportation for military supplies from the Caspian to the frontier of Afghanistan and India is certain to be of immense advantage to them in their future wars.

Bitter Almonds.

The way children are sometimes poisoned is shown by the Materia Medica Journal. It says:

We read in a daily paper of a child suddenly attacked by severe vomiting, which the usual remedies failing to check, ends in death, and the cause is laid anywhere but at the confectioner's counter, where the boy bought his candies and cakes flavored with bitter almond.

"The bitter almond is a powerful poison." A single drop of the essential oil on a cat's tongue made a dead pussy of a living one in just five minutes, by experiment.

Some delicate organizations, especially among children, can bear but little of this essence, the smallest quantity producing an eruption like nettle-rash, if nothing worse, and yet macaroons are eaten with impunity, while confectioners are often now-a-days using, not the bitter almond, but the essential oil, for their flavoring.

There is a "family connection" between the bitter and sweet almond, how close is not easily defined, but sufficient to show that on some persons the sweet nut on our tables, if eaten, produces an effect similar to that caused by the bitter almond.

Recalled to Life by a Shriek.

The recall of a country girl to life by a sister's shriek is one of the local topics of the Journal, of Evansville, Ind. The young lady had been quite ill for weeks, and was thought to be dying of consumption. She had grown so weak and emaciated that her strength was no more than a child's. One afternoon, while lying upon her couch, her sister came in from a walk and sat by the bedside. A conversation began, and the invalid began to speak. As she uttered the first word, she felt a bewildering weakness, and a sinking flutter of her breath. Her eyes became fixed, the lower jaw dropped as in death, and the body became motionless, while consciousness disappeared. The sister leaped from her seat and ran to the door shrieking to her mother that her sister was dead. The sound of the shriek penetrated through the veil of death, and roused the sinking faculties. The blood, which had congested the lungs, was sent back by the nervous shock, and, gathering her strength by a strong effort of will, the invalid opened her eyes and awoke to life again, breathless and amazed at the thrilling peril she had escaped.

The Middy and the Lady.

A well-merited repartee was dealt by a smart Midshipman to the daughter of a K. C. B. at a ball given by the latter to the naval officers on the North Pacific station. The middy was bold enough to ask the young lady to accept him for her partner. "Oh dear, no," said the supercilious beauty. "Ma never allows me to dance with a Midshipman!" Somebody let her know the middy was a Lord, and she repented, and by-and-by reminded him he was engaged to her for the next dance. The youngster, however, was not so easily to be mollified, and, remembering the lady had native blood in her veins, smilingly replied: "Oh dear, no! Ma never allows me to dance with squaws."—Chambers' Journal.

A Trained Rat.

Samuel Childers has a rat in his boot and shoe shop which he has trained to wonderful perfection. The rat comes to him at his call, no matter how many are present. It has been trained to jump up on Mr. Childers' hand, where it eats its regular meals. It will run about Mr. Childers while at work, jumping on his shoulders and head—diving into his pockets as familiarly as a pet kitten. When told it will sit up in the middle of the floor and squeal and perform many more tricks.—La Crosse (Wis.) Democrat.

THE total number of paupers in London on the last day of the second week in June was 78,997, of whom 41,222 were in workhouses and 37,775 received outdoor relief.

THE prospect of a fine crop of corn was never better in Alabama.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY | Editors.

CAPT. JAMES C. LUCE, who died lately in New York, was commander of the steamship Arctic, lost with nearly all the passengers Sept. 27, 1854. He is reported to have said that he never went to sleep afterward without a vision of the terrible catastrophe before his mind.

A BAD state of affairs is said to exist in the Northern or Bradford oil district of Pennsylvania; the tankage is already exhausted; not less than 7,000 barrels of crude petroleum are daily going to waste for want of storage; the production is so greatly in excess of the consumption that there is no call for the product. The Standard Oil Company has commenced buying at 5 cents per barrel below the prices current in the Oil Exchange. The outlook for the oil country generally is thus gloomy.

A CASE of phenomenal hard luck is recited by a correspondent at Acton, Ont., where a farmer, returning home after dark, was thrown out of his wagon by a runaway team and had his spine and shoulder-blade badly injured. As he lay insensible in the road a farmer's dog discovered him and set up a loud barking, whereupon the farmer and his son came out with a shot-gun, and, in the belief that the unfortunate man was some wild animal, let him have a charge of shot in the ne.k, which will probably finish him.

AN international convention under the auspices of the King of Belgium and the honorary Presidency of the Court of Flanders is to assemble in Brussels this year to discuss the latest advances in the knowledge of American ethnology, philology, history, geology, and in fact of everything appertaining to America that is of interest to mankind. New light is expected to be thrown upon the discovery of the North American continent and upon its primitive inhabitants. There are in Europe many students of American history and science, and this will be their third congress.

MANY tea plants were set in North and South Carolina and Georgia years ago, but it was not profitable to gather the leaves and prepare them in the elaborate Chinese style, and the plants were left to grow wild. The Agricultural Bureau in Washington received a barrel of leaves from South Carolina. They were placed in wire sieves and steamed, and then run through a clothes-wringer to extract the tannic acid. The structure of the leaf was destroyed in the process, and the mass was placed in an ordinary pan and dried by a fire. A decoction was made, and the aroma was delightful.

NEW ORLEANS is rejoicing over the anticipation of a speedy completion of its first railroad to Texas. St. Louis has forestalled the metropolis of the South in pushing the locomotive into that fertile State, leaving New Orleans to slower water communication on the gulf. Before the year is out, however, trains will be running through to Houston, and New Orleans will have the railroad outlet to the West which she already has to the North and East. Besides the greater commercial advantages the city will gain, it is hoped that the cheap lands which the railroad will open up will invite immigrants to the southwestern part of the State.

ROBERT G. PILLOW, a son of the late Gen. Pillow, lives on an Arkansas plantation. A few days ago he and one of the colored men were out hunting a wild hog. Pillow had a gun, and the negro had armed himself with a pint bottle of whisky. The hog was shot, and just as Pillow went up to the writhing animal an immense "cotton-mouth" snake, whose bite is as fatal as that of a rattlesnake, fastened its fangs on the calf of his leg. Pillow turned to his companion and remarked: "I think I'll try a little of that whisky now," whisky being considered a remedy. He poured every drop down his throat. Then he rapidly walked to the house, half a mile distant, where he drank three tumblers more of whisky. He was soon in what he calls a "Niagara falls of a perspiration," which rapidly expelled the poison and saved his life.

FATHER GENIN gives the following account of the battle of the Rosebud, at which Gen. Custer fell, as it was given to him by Sitting Bull: Sitting Bull imagined that the force, of which the Custer command was part, had been sent out to exterminate his people. He retreated from the advancing white men for eight days, and then, being wearied, he set up a mock village, left his fires lighted, and arranged a number of effigy figures so as to deceive the whites. He then gathered his braves, and, under cover of the hills to the south of the Rosebud, marched to intercept Custer's advance. He did not wish to fight, and so sent out a messenger with a flag of truce, who was shot down. After seeing this man fall from his horse, he called God to witness that he was not responsible for the blood that was to be shed. Custer galloped on toward the empty village, and Sitting Bull closed in behind him and to the right and left. Father Genin possesses the tomahawk with which Custer was dispatched.

NELSON BOGARD bargained to buy the farm on which he and his mother lived, at Dark Bend, Ind. The owner was seen going to the place to deliver the deed and get the money, but he was never known to return, and his horse remained among Bogard's stock. The missing man was a stranger, and nobody was particularly interested in his fate, or in disproving Bogard's assertion that he had departed afoot, after selling his horse and the farm. That was seven years ago. Afterward, a boy who had been reared on the Bogard farm was found hanging in a barn. Old Mrs. Bogard fell ill recently at the age of 77, and, believing that she was about to die, confessed that she and her son murdered the stranger for his money, and killed the boy because he knew something about the crime. But she recovered, and is now in jail, together with her guilty son.

THERE is a marked decrease in the valuation of personal property in New York city. It is said to be caused by reductions in the capital of banks as well as insurance companies, and the transfer of investments from taxable securities to Government bonds, which are not taxable. The decrease in personal valuations amounts to $21,500,000. On the other hand, the valuation of real estate has been increased $17,000,000. This is partly owing to the assessment of elevated and surface railways as real estate, and partly to the stimulating of building operations by the opening of the new rapid-transit routes. The net decrease in the city valuation is $4,500,000. The tax rate last year was $2.50 on $100 valuation; this year it is likely to be $2.60.

THE will of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild is said to be sworn under $13,500,000. He leaves his wife $500,000 and a life interest of $250,000 arising from the houses at Frankfort and in London. Also, the estate at Gunnersburg and the residence in Piccadilly. A request is made that "my good wife" shall give $50,000 to Jewish charities and $25,000 to others. Annuities in which discretionary power is given to the mother are made to the sons and daughters, and the hope is expressed that they will be good to the mother, who has been kind to them and to him. He thanks God for the success and prosperity that had attended him, and hopes the same guiding hand would direct his sons. He advises his sons of the happy unity that existed between him and his two brothers, to which he attributes the success of the firm, and hopes that the same kind feeling will continue to maintain the position of the house.

The Cross-Eyed Children.

Nobody can tell who has not watched it what an effect a physical deformity has upon the mind and character of a growing child, especially one which detracts in so marked a manner from its personal appearance. It exposes the child to the taunts and cruel appellations of its comrades, which in sensitive children often drive them into solitude, and make them shy and suspicious of strangers, in whom, on the other hand, they excite suspicion. The turn in the eye gives either a wandering, doubting air to the face, or, if the gaze is fixed, a too intense expression, which is disturbing and perplexing, if not downright painful to the beholder.

I have known young boys of 8 and 10 years of age beg their parents to let them undergo the pain of an operation to rid themselves of a deformity which subjects them so often to the unfeeling remarks of their elders, usually friends of the family, as well as the uneuphonious but expressive titles bestowed upon them by their own contemporaries, of goggle-eye and cock-eye. Nor does this end with childhood. The deformity is a disadvantage to him through life. It pursues him in his business and in his profession. Cheated of feature by dissembling nature, he is often thought to be dissembling himself when nothing is further from his thoughts. How often do we hear people say of another, whom we know to be perfectly upright and trustworthy, that they do not like him because he never looks them squarely in the face. And it is a little curious that precisely here it is that the lesser degrees of the trouble produce the most effect. That peculiar expression which people complain so much of is generally due to a deviation in the axes of the eyes—a slight convergence which is never very conspicuous, and at times only to be detected by a trained eye, but which, nevertheless, produces in all a very disagreeable impression, although not marked enough to betray its cause.—Harper's Magazine.

A Maine Blacksmith's Freak.

An intelligent Lewiston blacksmith took a contract to repair a wagon the other day. Lewiston is considered a temperance city, and no one ever supposed that the man was cross-eyed, but he returned the wagon with both hind wheels on one side and the fore wheels on the other side.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

FARM NOTES.

DURING the heat of summer commence work early and continue it late—but take a good, wholesome rest in the middle of the day.

"AND so," says the New England Farmer, "the 'farmers' fairs' have, in too many instances, been given over into the hands of those who have very little interest in the welfare of the farming community."

In plowing it is never a good plan to turn up a mass of crude earth of several inches in depth, never before exposed to the sunlight and air. It will, unless heavy manuring is given as a top dressing, result in loss. In deepening a soil it is better to plow up an additional inch each year.

IT is reported that boulders may be broken up by drilling a deep hole in the rock at the proper point, and then fit into the lower portion of the hole a cylindrical ingot of lead of corresponding diameter. Then drive a mandrel, or rod, down upon the lead. By repeated blows of a hammer, the lead will be expanded laterally, and, being inelastic, the pressure will accumulate, and at length rupture the rock.

FRESH manure produces but little effect when applied to crops, but when it is well rotted it then contains much valuable soluble matter, absorbable by plants. In fresh manure the most important constituent of its soluble portion is potash, and it contains but small proportions of ammonia and phosphoric acid. Rotten manure, on the contrary, yields to the solvent action of water large amounts of nitrogen and phosphoric acid.

THE health and comfort of horses have of late years been greatly improved by the better construction of stables. They are made more roomy and lofty, and provided with means of thorough ventilation. In many new stables lofts are done away with, or the floor of the loft is kept well above horses' heads, and ample shafts are introduced to convey away foul air. By perforated bricks and gratings under the mangers, and elsewhere around the walls, and only by windows and ventilators, abundance of pure air is secured for the horses; while being introduced in moderate amount, and from various directions, it comes in without draught. Too much draught is almost an unknown stable luxury. To secure a constant supply of pure air, horses require more cubic space than they generally enjoy. Even when animals are stabled only at night, a minimum of 1,200 cubic feet should be allowed. In England the newer cavalry barracks give a minimum of 1,500 cubic feet, with a ground area of fully ninety square feet per horse; and the best hunting and carriage horse-stables have more room.—Journal of Chemistry.

SMALL groups of trees and shrubs may be rendered very effective if due care is taken in planting them. Have a care that the general effect will be a good one, and to this end let the trees forming a group be of one general character. Thus, if conical trees be distributed equally or injudiciously over the grounds along with round-headed trees they will produce great sameness; but if conical trees prevail in one place, drooping or weeping trees in another, round-headed trees in a third, and low-spreading varieties occupy another side, many distinct characters will be produced, and this will be much more interesting to the beholder than one continuous group of mixed trees of various habits. The same general rules apply with equal force to ornamental shrubs. In planting single trees care should be had to proper soil; they should always be planted in prepared soil raised in heaps a foot or more above the general surface, so that after a year or two, when the earth settles, as it will to a certain degree, the tree may stand on a little hillock. The trees, before planting, should be ten or twelve feet in height, with trunks three or four inches in diameter at the surface of the ground.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

POTATO SALAD.

Chop cold boiled potatoes very fine; add enough minced raw onion to season, and pour over a good salad dressing.

CATCHING MOSQUITOES.

Nail a small cup, like the cover of a blacking-box, on the end of a broom-stick and fill it with a small quantity of kerosene; then hold it under the mosquito on the ceiling, or press it up quickly so as to cover him, and the fumes of the kerosene will cause him almost at once to drop into the oil dead. This plan will save the disfigurement caused by killing the insects on the ceiling, as it is generally done.

TO DESTROY LICE ON FOWLS.

Grease the top of the head and under each wing with an ointment of mercurial ointment, two parts; lard three parts; crude petroleum, one part. Apply in half-melted state.

BEAN SALAD.

String young beans, cut into small pieces, wash and cook tender in salted water, drain well and add so much finely chopped onion as liked, with pepper, salt and vinegar. Serve when cold, and add a little olive oil or melted butter.

ESSENCE BOUQUET TOILET WATER.

Attar of roses, 3 drams; attar of bergamot (fresh), 8 drams; attar of lemon (fresh), 2 drams; extract of musk (simple), 2 ounces; extract of orris root, 8 ounces; cologne spirits, 8 pints; rose-water, 1 pint. Mix the oils and extracts with the spirits; then add the rose-water; shake well, and, after standing a few days, filter through paper. This is a very fine toilet water, but it is rather expensive. It can be diluted with a mixture of three parts cologne spirits to one of water, and still have the true odor.

RASPBERRY VINEGAR.

Put two quarts of fresh red raspberries into a jar and pour over them a quart of good vinegar; let them stand twenty-four hours; strain through a flannel bag; pour this liquid over two quarts of fresh berries and again let it stand twenty-four hours, and strain again; allow a pound of sugar to every pint of juice; put into a stone jar and cover closely, and set it to stand in a kettle of boiling water, to be kept boiling for an hour; strain and bottle ready for use; a teaspoonful to a tumbler of ice-water is the manner of using.

SMILAX.

With very little care, smilax can be grown successfully as a house plant. The seed should be sown in a box, or in pots in the house; should be kept moist till the young plant appears. The seed being rather slow to germinate, you must not think it bad if it does not make appearance in two weeks. The young plants should be potted off into three-inch pots as soon as they are three or four inches high. Once a year the bulbs should be allowed to dry off and rest; they will start into growth again in about six weeks.

ROSE LEAF PILLOW.

For the few who have the opportunity and desire to possess the latter, the following directions are given: Gather the leaves when they are about to fall, and save those from faded bouquets. Spread them on a frame covered with mosquito netting and lay another piece over the top, or, place them on paper in an occupied room where there is no dampness. Stir frequently and be sure they are thoroughly dry before putting them away, as any damp ones would cause the whole to mold. When sufficient are gathered—it will require a great many—put them into a thin muslin case, five-eighths of a yard square; over this put an ornamental cover, the same as any sofa pillow; place it on your lounge, and when mid-day finds you tired and worn out, and nervous, rest your head on it, if for no longer than fifteen minutes, and dream of the perfumes of Araby and rise refreshed and strengthened, if not by virtue of the rose leaves, at least by that of the "forty winks." The neighbors may criticise as sharply as though you had taken forty drinks, but that is no matter, so long as conscience bears no reproach for neglected duty and squandered time.

The Counterfeit Bill.

A sharp man, who hews so close to the line which separates honesty from dishonesty as not infrequently to cross it, is likely to have his own chips hit him in the face. Such a one met his match when he encountered a shrewd man. It was during the War of 1812, but the story has a moral for these days.

In those times the currency of New England was made up of bills of suspended banks; of bank notes authorized by the Connecticut Legislature, and redeemable three years after the war. These were called "facilities." There were also specie bank-bills, which were the notes of the New England banks that continued to pay specie, said notes being rare. Besides these there were counterfeits in circulation. The specie bills were at a premium, and the "facilities" at 20 per cent. discount.

A traveler offered a $5 note at a turnpike gate, and received in change a roll of greasy bills. Glancing at it, he remarked:

"Why, half of these are counterfeit!"

"I know it," replied the keeper, "but they'll pass just as well as any other money."

It was under these circumstances that, in the city of Hartford, a shrewd man called one day on a greedy neighbor, with whom he had some dealings. The following dialogue took place:

Shrewd man—Do you recollect giving me a $10 bill in change yesterday?

Greedy Man—No, I don't. Why do you ask?

S. M.—Well, I found a specie bill of $10 in my pocket-book, and I thought I might have received it from you. You remember I was only entitled to a "facility," and not a specie bill?

G. M.—Well, I dare say you had it of me. Let me see it.

S. M.—There it is.

G. M.—Oh, yes; I recollect it perfectly. I'll take it, and give you a "facility."

S. M.—Are you sure you gave me that bill?

G. M.—Certainly, certainly; I recollect it distinctly.

S. M.—Well, I'm glad you are sure, for they tell me the specie bill is counterfeit.

Prices of Wild Animals in England.

Lions or tigers, £80 each; pumas, £30; leopards, £20; cheetahs, £40; black panthers, $150; clouded tigers, £300; jaguars, £30 to £40; ocelots, £3 to £10; Vivierre cats, £10; servals, £4; lynx, £5 to £15; hyenas, £12 to £30; Aard wolf, £40 to £100; civet cats, £2 to £10; paradoxines, £2 to £5; ichneumons, £25; wolf, £5 to £10; silver fox, £10; coatimundis or raccoons, £2; Polar bears, £25; brown bears, £10; Syrian or black bears, £12; Japanese or Himalayan bears, £15; sloths, £10; beavers, £40 the pair; porcupines, £6 each; agoutti, £2. A rhinoceros costs from £400 to £1,000; the one now in stock is a young one, and worth about £500; it feeds, the attendant told us, on "sloppy food," which Mr. Jamrach interpreted to mean pig-wash, and passes a serene existence in confinement, dividing its time between consuming as much as it can hold and going to sleep. Elephants are cheaper in this country than in India, an African elephant being now only worth about £60, and an Indian elephant from £150 to £300. Indian tapirs cost about £150, and the South American specimens from £30 to £40; a llama or nylgherie will fetch £30 to £40, and a zebra is worth from £100 to £150, while kangaroos are sold at from £10 to £600 the pair. Monkeys vary much in price, ranging from the tiny marmoset at £1, to the chimpanzee or orang-outang at £100. Most of the animals enumerated above might be found somewhat inconvenient in a private menage, but birds are more manageable pets. Those who fancy them may purchase Australian finches, wimbles, Tasmanian devils, etc., at from 8s. to £2 a pair; while parrots, paroquets, lores, etc., range from 8s. to £50 the pair.—Saturday Review.

An Octogenarian Father.

Not long since, at Providence church, in Mecklenburg county, Green Ray presented his two infant children for baptism. Mr. Ray is 80 years of age, and the children are the offspring of his second wife. His eldest son, a young gentleman of 50 summers, was present at the baptism.—Concord (N. C.) Register.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

It Has Been Too Long in Power—A Change Needed for the Good of the Country.

During the closing hours of the recent extra session of Congress Mr. Charles Nordhoff sent the following significant dispatch to the New York Herald:

> The course of the Republican leaders in the Senate this week has been atrocious. They have fought the army bill as though they were the rump of the Grant movement fighting for the last chance to secure an election; or as though, as is commonly conjectured, there were some secret motive in their opposition. The importance of what they have said was by no means justified their intensity and desperation of purpose. They have transcended all regular and legitimate opposition, and they have not shown any reasons that the bill ought not to pass. Their conduct has afforded a curious spectacle of men who have been too long in power for their own or their country's good—who have become intolerant of opposition from any source, either outside of, or within, their party, and who have forgotten how to submit to defeat, and are capable of seizing on power by any means, however violent. The display which they have made is of a spirit entirely and dangerously evil, and no thoughtful man can read the Senate debates of the last week and consider the tone, the temper, the spirit and the wide disparity between the subject and the Republican treatment of it without perceiving that it would be well for the country if these gentlemen could be for awhile retired from power, and that it would be an extremely hazardous thing to lease of it, which they seem determined at all hazards and by any means to seize. It is the Grant movement which has displayed itself in the Senate in these days, and has, with extraordinary arrogance and intolerance, insisted on troops at the polls. If nothing else justified the Democrats in insisting on their extremely mild prohibition of the use of troops for election purposes, the language and spirit of the Republican leaders in the Senate this week would give them abundant justification, and it is not too much to say that rather than trust these Republicans—Senators Conkling, Blane and others—with troops at the polls, it would be far better and safer to the country to disband the army. In this aspect the Senate debate of this week may and ought to serve a useful and important purpose. The Grant movement has its center in that Senatorial coterie which has aimed to control the House, has tried and is now trying to intimidate the President, whom it hates, and which, with unerring instinct makes its desperate stand for troops at the polls as the true ground for the Grant movement to maintain. The Democratic determination to keep troops away from the polls has seemed hitherto to be inspired by foolish and ridiculous fears, but the apparition of the Grant movement in the Senate justifies them and ought to secure for their aims the support of all judicious voters. The spirit of the Republican leaders in the Senate shows that it is high time for the security and peace of the country to have a change of parties. Like the Democratic party in 1860, these men have been too long in power. They are drunk with an unpatriotic ambition. They show plainly that they do not mean to let go of the Government; that they regard the country as their possession, and a political defeat as a personal wrong and robbery of themselves.
> The impression which this debate has made upon many thoughtful attendants upon it is that no party can be so dangerous to the country as a party led, inspired and controlled by these men, and that if the Republican party appears in the Presidential canvass under their leadership, it will be the duty of every man who values the country's safety and peace to oppose it and them, no matter who is on the other side. The Republicans uttered a foolish cry of revolution early in the session, but your correspondent, whose duty it has been to watch all the tedious debates of the extra session, and who has not failed to expose to you the folly and weakness of the Democrats, has seen nothing on the Democratic side, when among the worst elements of that party, which at all compares for wickedness of purpose, for desperation and evil spirit, with the course and temper of the leading Republican Senators during this debate.

Assess the Army for Foster's Benefit.

Under the protection of Mr. Hayes and his fraudulent Cabinet, the Republican strikers are levying a tax upon the department clerks at Washington for money to be used in Foster's campaign in Ohio.

We are informed on credible authority that already more than $20,000 has been raised in the departments for this purpose. But $20,000 is not enough. At least five times that sum is needed and expected from Washington by Mr. Foster. The tax on the assistant auditors, clerks, doorkeepers, messengers, janitors, copyists and floor-scrubbers, has, therefore, been apportioned on a basis of something like $100,000.

Very few of the officeholders who are approached and requested to contribute to the Foster fund feel a lively interest in the political fortunes of the beneficiary. The majority of them, it is safe to assume, do not care a copper how Ohio goes provided they are allowed to remain in their little offices and draw their salaries in peace. Even the clerks who hail from Ohio would prefer to keep their money for their family expenses, or to provide innocent summer amusement for themselves and their wives and children. But they dare not send away the collector empty-handed. They know that the request for "voluntary contributions" is a demand which they cannot afford to refuse. They have plainly been given to understand that the demand is backed by all the power of the fraudulent administration, and that that power will be pitilessly employed. They submit to the blackmail because they know this.

The remarkable thing about the assessment is that no attempt is made by Mr. Hayes and his Secretaries to conceal, excuse, or palliate the outrage. The robbery of the clerks proceeds openly, in the face and eyes of the whole country. Yet it is only two years since the following letter announced Mr. Hayes' determination to reform the civil service:

> EXECUTIVE MANSION,
> WASHINGTON, June 22, 1877.
>
> SIR—I desire to call your attention to the following paragraph in a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Treasury on the conduct to be observed by officers of the General Government in relation to the elections:
>
> No officer shall be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns. Their right to vote and express their views on public questions, either orally or through the press, is not denied, provided it does not interfere with their official duties. No assessment for political purposes on officers or subordinates should be allowed.
>
> This rule is applicable to every department of the civil service. It should be understood by every officer of the General Government that he is expected to conform his conduct to its requirements. Very respectfully,
>
> R. B. HAYES.

The sham, the cowardly hypocrisy of that order, and of all the snuffling professions that accompanied it, were long ago exposed. It is too late in the day to waste words over it.

In the interest of the civil service clerks who are to be forced to supply campaign-funds for Mr. Charles Foster, we desire to make a suggestion to the managers of that candidate's cause. The issue made in the platform on which Foster stands is the old issue of the bloody shirt. Mr. Foster's campaign is to be an aggressive war upon the late Confederate States of America. Of course Foster was deeply concerned in the fate of the Union, during the period between 1861 and 1865, although the exacting requirements of trade kept him away from the scene of actual hostilities. Now that he is about to fight that war over again, and is in need of funds, instead of putting his hand at the throats of the department clerks at Washington, whose functions and sympathies are not at all military, and demanding their money, let him appeal to the patriotism of the officers and privates of the army, and to the volunteer veterans who were at the front when he was behind the counter of his shop in Fostoria. Let him assess the various encampments of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Foster has become a soldier, in spirit if not in record; he ought to look to his military brethren, and not to the civilian clerks and copyists, for the sinews of war.

What a wild wave of enthusiasm would sweep over the veterans who served in the Union army, if Mr. Charles Foster should turn to them and eloquently request contributions for the purpose of defeating Maj. Gen. Thomas A. Ewing and Brig. Gen. Americus L. Rice!—New York Sun.

INDIANA ITEMS.

PNEUMONIA has broken out among the horses in Harrison county.

THE Johnson county Agricultural Fair will be held Sept. 10.

ALONZO BLAIR, a prominent lawyer of Shelbyville, died recently.

THERE are now about 700 convicts in the Northern prison, mostly working on contracts.

THE Tipton county Fair will be held on the 23d, 24th, 25th, and 26th of September.

THE Commissioners of Johnson county have decided on building a new Court House.

HUBBARD GRAY, aged 90 years, and Mrs. Fiddler, aged 104, died at Vienna on the morning of the 9th inst.

J. B. BARNES, general foreman of the Wabash shops at Fort Wayne, has received a patent on a new-style locomotive whistle.

ABEL SHIELDS, aged 65, an old and respected farmer of Washington county, was found dead in his pasture, resting on his hands and knees, on his farm near Salem.

J. D. SWAN, for a long time a railroad conductor, residing at Indianapolis, has bought a mine at Tucson, in Arizona, and has gone there and is now working it.

DR. FISHER, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Madison, has been chosen to succeed Dr. Heckman in the Presidency of Hanover College, and Harvey Young was elected Professor of Natural Sciences.

AT New Albany the cholera-morbus epidemic continues; over 100 severe cases and several deaths have occurred in the past week. Among the seriously sick reported were Dr. E. Newland, formerly Treasurer of State, and Capt. M. M. Hurley, Postmaster.

A NEW ALBANY paper says: Ten families of skilled mechanics from England arrived here, last night, to work at the DePauw American Plate Glass Works. In all, about 150 English and French families have been brought here from Europe to be employed at these works.

Statistics of Taxation.

W. O. Foley, Deputy State Treasurer, has recently been at considerable trouble in compiling a statistical statement as to the value of the taxable property—lots, improvements, personal property and railroad and telegraph property—in the principal cities and towns of this State. The figures are from official returns made by the several County Auditors in December of 1878; but hitherto, although the taxable value of the several counties was easily ascertained, it has been difficult to arrive at a correct conclusion as to the amount of the various kind of property taxable in the cities and towns. The full statement in regard to the cities whose taxables are valued at more than $3,000,000 is as follows:

Fort Wayne—Lots, $4,739,820; improvements, $3,862,035; personal property, $2,524,315; railroads and telegraphs, $668,970; total taxables, $11,795,140.

Logansport—Lots, $2,358,615; improvements, $1,580,940; personal property, $1,382,335; railroads and telegraphs, $317,925; total taxables, $5,617,885.

New Albany—Lots, $2,961,505; improvements, $2,172,475; personal property, $2,338,010; total taxables, $7,271,790.

Vincennes—Lots, $1,017,775; improvements, $1,307,680; personal property, $1,072,345; total taxables, $3,397,750.

Indianapolis—Lots, $36,410,435; improvements, $20,043,715; personal property, $10,916,545; total taxables, $67,370,695.

South Bend—Lots, $1,638,710; improvements, $1,462,125; personal property, $1,740,270; total taxables, $4,850,105.

Lafayette—Lots, $3,535,045; improvements, $2,379,375; personal property, $3,255,860; railroads and telegraphs, $107,410; total taxables $9,277,691.

Evansville—Lots, $7,004,415; improvements, $1,684,385; personal property, $5,598,210; railroads and telegraphs, $175,005; total taxables, $17,461,075.

Terre Haute—Lots, $5,453,095; improvements, $3,310,800; personal property, $3,518,165; railroads and telegraphs, $408,005; total taxables, $13,190,215.

Richmond—Lots, $1,535,910; improvements, $2,500,980; personal property, $3,328,955; railroads and telegraphs, $40,502; total taxables, $7,411,357.

Madison—Lots, $662,040; improvements, $1,252,145; personal property, $2,114,560; total taxables, $4,028,745.

The cities and towns whose taxable property is valued at between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 are as follows:

Jeffersonville, $2,523,442; Muncie, $2,009,984; Elkhart, $2,025,630; Laporte, $2,256,000; Crawfordsville, $2,175,065.

The towns having a valuation between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 are:

Columbus, Frankfort, Washington, Lawrenceburg, Aurora, Greensburg, Goshen, Princeton, Marion, Knightstown, Kokomo, Huntington, Seymour, Franklin, Warsaw, Michigan City, Anderson, Peru, Bloomington, Martinsville, Valparaiso, Mount Vernon, Greencastle, Union City, Rushville, Wabash.

Out of ninety-five cities and towns sixty-nine have a valuation of personal property considerably in excess of the value of lots.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

The Lagrange Register was slightly democratic last week. The editor was away from home.

The estimated cost of water works in Fort Wayne, is $270,000. That would not be much for Auburn to invest, but the foolish people of Fort Wayne, think it extravagant.

Cholera is raging in Linn county, Iowa 20 persons have died from its effects, and an equal number are prostrated by it. A Dubuque undertaker made an order for 40 coffins, on Tuesday.

The name of the democratic nominee in '80 must begin with an H. If we can't have Hendricks let us have Hancock.—Wabash Courier.

If one H is good, two would be better. Make it Hendricks and Hancock.

Yellow fever is still gaining ground in the south. Total number of cases in Memphis, from July 9th, up to last Sunday, was 147. Number of deaths 48. Other cities have suffered but little.

Sleepy Tom won the pacing race at Chicago last Friday. Time 2:12¼. Mattie Hunter second in the last heat in 2:18. The time of Tom is two seconds faster than ever before made by a pacer.

Old granny Zach Chandler, of red-nose fame, will rip-roar in Ohio, during the present campaign. If there is a man in America that is qualified to fill Ohio with treasonable utterances and disunion oratory, it is old corn-juice Zach.

A streak of luck struck Lee Linn, senior editor of the Wabash Courier. He has been appointed oil inspector for the counties of Wabash, Huntington and Whitley. Linn evidently knows more about oil, than he does about prisons.

* * *

Western Pennsylvania was visited by a terrible rain-storm last Saturday. The oil regions suffered great loss. Petrolia, Millerstown, Karns City and other towns were greatly damaged; houses were demolished, railroad tracks washed away, and much other property destroyed, amounting in all to over half a million dollars.

* * *

With its usual enterprise, the Fort Wayne Sentinel firm, presented the readers of that paper with a plat of the city, in Saturday's issue, showing the location of pipes, wells, reservoir, etc., for the new water works. The map is well executed, and it must have required considerable time and expense to prepare it for publication.

* * *

A. C. Hardenbrook of Ligonier, has been appointed oil inspector for the counties of Marshall, Kosciusko, Noble, DeKalb, Steuben and Lagrange. He will be assisted by David Hough of the same place. It strikes us that our Ligonier friends have taken a little too much land, besides, we are not certain that the law authorizes ASSISTANT inspectors.

* * *

The Decatur Democrat has changed hands; Mr. J. McGonagle the veteran editor retiring, and Messrs. Hardy & Williams, of Ohio, assuming control as editors and publishers. Mr. McGonagle has always been a faithful advocate of democratic principles, and we regret that his age compels him to retire from the editorial chair which he has so long filled with honor to himself and credit to his party. May he live long to enjoy the fruits of his years of toil. The new proprietors are men of experience in the newspaper business, and promise a red-hot democratic publication. Here's our hand.

Grasshoppers have commenced operations in the east. Advices from Cayuga county, New York, say that $3,000 worth of hay has been destroyed on one farm, and the insects have attacked all grains and field crops and gardens. There is a prospect that the grasshopper plague will afflict that county as badly as it has the west.

The Okolona States, names Jeff Davis for president, and a number of republican newspapers of the north are seconding the motion. Old Jeff would make a first-class republican, and would have no trouble in getting the nomination in the republican convention, if he would agree to vote the republican ticket. Jeff has a weakness for $250,000 gifts, which makes him a shining diamond in the republican tar-barrel.

* * *

Judge Charles P. James, formerly of Ohio, was Saturday commissioned as Judge of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. There will be considerable pressure brought to bear by democrats there to prevent his confirmation next winter. One of the reasons given for opposing him is that he is already well advanced in years, and that he would, of necessity in a very short time, be placed upon the retired list.

The Wabash Courier of last week, contains a letter from W. F. George of Laporte, Ind., showing up the "wrong" side of T. P. Keator, the new editor of the Wabash Plain Dealer. Mr. George says:

"I know Keator to be a swindler, a dead beat, a thief, a liar and a "snide" confidence man and can PROVE every word I have said."

Keator is the fellow that created such a favorable impression at the Syracuse editorial convention. Reuben Williams, will please stand up.

That the fairs of Koscinsko county have not been as successful as others, is not the fault of Reub Williams of the Indianian. Reub has for several years furnished the premium list printed in pamphlet form, without expense to the Agricultural society; besides, he has given much space in his newspaper for local notices without charge. The only consolation Reub has is in the complimentary notices of the press, concerning the execution and taste displayed in the printing of the premium list. All of which he richly deserves.

Gen. Chalmers, member of congress from Mississippi, in a recent address to the colored people gave them the following good advice: "You are now freemen. Nobody has a right to restrain you, against your will, from going where you choose. But, as regards this migration to Kansas, let me advise you not to be rash and precipitate a movement of such importance to your future. You should send forward a few good, intelligent men to ascertain what advantages and disadvantages present themselves to the colored emigrant. But of one thing I assure you—you will have the white man to contend with wherever you go. The sun is the colored man's friend. In the land where his rays drive the white man to shelter the colored man has the advantage, but in the cold climate of the north he can not compete with his white neighbor. Stay where your friend, the sun, aids you in the contest.

Republicans everywhere concede that their candidate for president in 1880 will not receive a single electoral vote in the southern states. Now, suppose that the democrats carry Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana and Ohio, what makes it necessary for the democrats to carry New York? Is not Ohio of as much importance? There is a possibility that Connecticut and New Jersey may go republican, but, on the other hand there is a possibility that Oregon, California and Nevada will give a majority to the democrats, which would still elect without the vote of New York. While every effort should be made to carry New York for the democratic candidate, we do not believe that it is necessary to give New York the candidate in order to secure an election of the next president to the democrats. There is not a probable candidate in the state of New York, that would receive a larger vote in that state, than Mr. Hendricks or any other good western man would.

About ten days ago an employe of the Courier office addressed a letter to the editor of the infamous "Okolona Southern State" in which he enclosed two postage stamps and requested that a sample copy of the "States" be sent to his address. On last Tuesday he received the following reply:

OKOLONA, MISS., July 18th, 1879.
DEAR SIR:—We can not send sample copy of the "States" as desired.
Very respectfully, A. Y. HARPER,
Sen. Editor Southern States.

The truth is the States is being published in the interest of the republican party, and the editors are bound by agreement not to send copies of their paper to parties not properly vouched for. Had the application of the Courier's employe been endorsed by the chairman of the republican central committee, then would the sample copy have been sent. As it is, however, no person not vouched for by republican leaders, great or small, need apply for a sample copy of the Okolona Southern States.—Wabash Courier.

—Emanuel Koch, of the "one price boot and shoe store," has gone east. Look out for a large stock soon.

It is very evident that Myers, of the Kendallville Standard, was away from home last week, and while absent some fellow took advantage of him and made the following frank acknowledgement, in the editorial columns of that paper. The editor pro-tem, says:

"The leaders of the democratic party are officer makers. The leaders of the republican party are office seekers. The difference is not very much, but what there is, is in favor of the power and perpetuation of the former party, for men will naturally work harder for those who offer them something, than for those who propose to take whatever there is unto themselves. But if the republican leaders seek the offices themselves, they are necessarilly put upon their good behavior, and we may, therefore, expect better things of them than if they should put their scape goats forward and hold their hats in the rear for the plunder. It is one thing to take money and another thing to get it. The former take money and spoils from those they help into office, while the latter get all they can directly from the fountain head."

If there is any one thing that the republican leaders are proficient in, it is in knowing how to "take money" as well as "how to get it." Myers' experience as postmaster will enable him to explain the manner in which republican party leaders "take money and spoils from those they help into office," besides getting "all they can directly from the fountain head."

"We do not wish the patronage of the Jews," was the proclamation issued by Mr. Austin Corbin, manager of Manhattan Beach, on Coney Island. This delightful and popular resort for New York people, is being invaded by swarms of Jews, who, Mr. Corbin claims are proving offensive to the "higher social element," and accordingly the managers of the property have issued a pronunciamento against the race. The indignity is the second one that in a year has been placed upon the Jewish people, and both have cut deep. There is a large class of pleasure-loving Israelites in New York who on Sunday used to fill the parks. Now that new pleasure grounds have been opened near the city, they flock to the place where they can get the most for their money. This seems a race instinct. The Jew does not find the pleasure in being cheated which a Gentile does. "He wants the best seat in the piazza for himself and a half dozen other seats about him for his family and parcels," says the hotel-keeper. "He brings his lunch, and, by an order for a bottle of beer or a cup of coffee, he thinks he has pre-empted a right to occupy a table for three hours and hear the concert. If he orders a meal he complains that there is not enough put on his plate, and he haggles about the charges for extra bread and butter. We can't afford to entertain them. There are a few high bred Jews, gentlemen and scholars, who are modest, unobtrusive and considerate of the rights of others, and these we welcome." The hotel-keepers seem to dread too much popularity among the Jews, for they claim that theirs is a patronage which kills. Bath, a beautiful resort half way between New York and Coney Island, where the late Barney Williams had a lovely home, was selected by the Jews several years ago as a resort. The Christians fled at their approach; the place deteriorated, and finally was utterly neglected except by Jewish patrons, and the hotel-keepers succumbed to their custom. Mr. Corbin fears the same results at the Beach, and prefers to insult the Jews, rather than have their patronage.

The citizens of northern Georgia are greatly excited concerning conversions made to the Mormon faith in that vicinity. Within the past two years large numbers of citizens have been converted through the influence of Mormon apostles, and sent to Salt Lake City. A communication from the vicinity of Lookout mountain gives the following particulars of the recent murder of a Mormon elder:

"Of late the greatest indignation has come to be felt by the country people at the work of these men. An idea of the feeling which they have excited may be gathered from the expression of a sturdy farmer who is supposed to have been with the party who shot Elder Standing. "I would," said he "shoot a man just as quick for talking polygamy to my wife or daughter, as I would if he tried to ruin her!" The elders who come here are daring and plausible. They do not set forth pictures of sensuality, but dwell upon the fertility of the Utah valley, the rich crops and the abundant fruits, and the magnificent city of Salt Lake, in which every true believer is part owner. They draw charming pictures of a pastoral life filled with contentment, and these pictures touch the fancy of many a poor farmer who for years has found it hard work to keep soul and body together digging in the scanty soil of these hills.

When Elder Standing, accompanied by a brother of the faith, Elder Clawson, arrived here last Saturday, the indignation of the people at once got hot. Some two months ago it was whispered one Sunday in a church here that two Mormons were passing through the settlement, when instantly some 20 men in the congregation quitted the church and went in pursuit; but the report of the presence of Mormons on that occasion proved false. Elders Standing and Clawson put up at the house of Mr. Holston, and this becoming known, on Monday a party numbering 10 men went in search of them. The party patrolled the road for some time, and at length met the two elders returning from a neighboring village. The Mormons were at once taken into custody and carried off into the woods to a point about three-quarters of a mile distant from where they were found. The party stopped at a spring and drank of the water, and while the stop was making one of the party, apparently the leader, informed the Mormons that, this being their first offense, they were to be let off with a "good whipping," but that the next time they ventured to show themselves in the neighborhood they would be "hanged to a tree." At this moment a party of three mounted men appeared and beckoned to the main party to follow them. This was about to be done, when in an instant Elder Standing caught up a pistol, and, levelling it at the men on horseback, commanded them to "surrender!" The Mormon had either snatched the pistol from the hand of one of his captors, or picked it up from the ground where some one had carelessly left it. The answer to his demand to "surrender" was instant. There was a shot, and the elder fell with a ball in his brain."

Portable Mulay Saw Mill,
With improvements recently made is unequaled as a neighborhood mill. It can be run by either steam or water power, and is especially adapted to the engines used for threshing.
It may be operated by either two or three men, and will cut as much lumber in proportion to the power and number of hands employed as mills of larger capacity.

It makes smooth and even lumber, leaves no stub-shot and will cut any sized log up to four feet in diameter. It may be transported from one locality to another and re-erected ready for sawing in from two to three days, and can be made profitable in localities where there is not sufficient timber to justify the erection of a large mill. Send for descriptive circular, price, etc., to CHANDLER & TAYLOR, Indianapolis, Ind.

—The board of health is requested to take a stroll in the rear of the business houses of Lanning, Craft, Kiblinger, etal.

—Charles Pommert returned home from Edgerton, O., last Friday, where he says he has been "monkeying" around for a week.

—When a man commences economizing, the first thing to cut off should be his home paper. You can never prosper without it.

—Last Friday the Junction boys got it—our juniors gave it to 'em—that is, beat them in a game of base ball by a score of 25 to 18.

—We know a young lady in this city who is ahead one calico dress, by not taking in the excursion to Detroit, and he is $2.50 on-ct.

—Disputes among the boys are quite frequent of late. Remember how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to to dwell in unity.

—Mr. J. M. Foellinger, land agent for the central branch of the Union Pacific railroad, called at the COURIER office on Tuesday.

—Mrs. Rechtenwalt, who resided a few miles west of town, and who was about 81 years of age, was buried at this place Saturday.

—A junior base ball nine was organized in the city Monday night, and will soon be ready to compete for the championship of the county.

—Byron Rainier no longer draws the reins over the "boss team of the city." Charles Groscop purchased it and will driver it himself.

—Mr. Carmer who was so severely injured as reported in the COURIER two weeks ago, is improving rapidly, and will soon be able to be out.

—If you want to see a genuine, unabridged curiosity, steal a peep at George Washington Weamer's nose. He has a stone-bruise on it.

—Miss Jennie McClellan, of Waterloo, and a Miss Hoffman, of Ft. Wayne, were in attendance at the social at Dr. J. H. Ford's, Friday evening.

—An exchange says: "Never loaf about nor knock down type in a printing office, or the boys will love you as they do a shade tree—when you leave.

—Tuesday afternoon, of this week, the Knights of Honor, of Waterloo, dedicated their new hall. A large number from surrounding towns were in attendance.

—W. J. Austin knows more about the weight of plump spring chickens than any man in Auburn. His experience in that line enables him to judge correctly.

—As we go to press we notice one farmer in town. Time would not permit us to learn the cause of his coming, but we positively know it wasn't to pay his subscription.

—There will be an excursion to Indianapolis, over the Ft. W., J. & S. road, from August 11th to 14th, under the auspices of the Men's Reform club. Round trip $5.70.

—The old man that pranced up and down the railroad track, waiting for his sweetness who was to accompany him to Detroit, has our sympathies. Misplaced confidence.

—Billy Little is offering big figures for an old hair trunk. He wants to cut out some pieces to patch up one of his steeds, he says he looks too much like a calico horse.

—We want to increase the circulation of the COURIER. Will each of our friends assist in swelling the list to 2,000? Now is the time to ask your friends to subscribe.

—A match game of base ball will be played on the new grounds, in Rainier and Headley's addition, next Friday, by the juniors and a picked nine from this city. Everybody turn out.

—Mr. Charles Emanuel is rusticating at Antwerp, Ohio, this week. Being compelled to surrender his trotter, Charlie declared all bets off and skipped out, to wear away the blues

—Mr. I. N. Cool will have another car-load of fine top buggies on hand the first of next week. Buy one while you have a large number to select from. 60 sold since June 15. Mr. Cool will also sell fine, light single harness, very low. The harness are all new, and made in the latest fashion. Examine his buggies and harness before you buy.

—We are requested to announce that Mason Long, the converted gambler of Fort Wayne, will speak on the subject of temperance at Sedan, on Saturday evening, August 2, 1879.

—If Noah had foreseen the future, and killed the two mosquitoes which took refuge in the ark, he would have rendered some of the strongest words in the English language unnecessary.

—The first case of "black vomit" we have to chronicle, according to the Steuben Republican, of this week, was that of Bro. Keil, of the Fort Wayne Gazette, while returning with the excursionists for Mackinaw to Petoskey.

—Mr. H. G. Garmire, formerly of Albion, is opening a harness shop, and putting in a full stock of harness, saddles, collars, &c., in the Fluke building, formerly occupied by Mr. Shilling.

—On last Thursday about noon, a 10-year-old son of Mr. Geo. Hoodlemeyer met with an accident by being kicked in the abdomen with a horse. His injuries are serious and may prove fatal.

—Fort Wayne News: "The board of health of Leo, this county, announces through the county press that they have had a genuine case of Asiatic cholera, which resulted in the death of one Gerardot.

—The Garrett base ball nine, according to previous arrangements, met the Waterloo nine on the grounds of the latter, last Friday, and were beaten eight scores, the game closing with the fifth inning.

—For good goods at bottom prices, go to Schaab, Beugnot & Co's, for they can and will sell you goods 15 per cent, cheaper than any other house in northern Indiana.

—Mr. S. J. Wood, an attorney from Mt. Vernon, Ohio, is in the city, and we learn will make Auburn his future home. Mr. W. comes well recommended, both in his profession and as an enterprising citizen.

—The Waterloo fair will commence Monday, Oct. 6th, and close on Friday. The fair this year promises to be the largest and most interesting ever held in the county. Get your live stock ready for exhibition.

—We have several young gents (?) in this city who practice singing indecent songs on the streets at night, which ought not to be participated in. The best refrain for a rowdy song is to refrain from joining in the chorus.

—Rattlesnakes are more common this year than for a long time. Nearly every farmer has killed a good number of them in harvesting. A theory is that the heavy rains, by flooding the marshes, have driven them to higher ground.

—Surgery performed upon old boots and shoes, by adding feet, making good the legs, binding the broken, healing the wounded, mending the constitution and supporting the body with a new sole. Consultation free.

W. J. AUSTIN & Co.
At the boot up-side down.

—Mr. Elias Zimmerman met with a serious accident Tuesday while at work at the plaining mill near the Saginaw railroad. He was feeding the planing machine, when the knives struck a knot in the board, throwing it back with great force into his face, cutting an ugly gash.

—It is all the rage now for northern Indiana towns to claim to be "popular resorts." There's Rome City, which has succeeded, and Syracuse, Laporte, and Warsaw, making heroic efforts to succeed in becoming watering places. If we only had a pond nearer Auburn, how happy we would be.

—This town is certainly becoming numerous with imbibers. One night this week a young lady (?) made her appearance before a certain saloonist, and ordered a bottle filled with the "destructive stuff." After getting the desired beverage she thanked the saloonist very politely and made her exit. He mourns the loss of a half pint.

—"Cleanliness is next to godliness." Just remember this friends, and keep your premises free from filth of all kinds, and great shall be your reward. If our advice is followed you and your families will live long and prosper, but it you do not we can't tell what the consequences will be.

—Marriage licenses issued since June 28th to the following parties.

Robert T. Duncan and Sarah A. Freed, John McClellan and Ellen Armstrong, Adelbert Corbin and Mary Eliza Coburn, Andrew T. Dunfee and Catharine O. Olinger, J. M. Noragon and Jennie Crooks, Simon C. Snyder and Celia Markle, John Darling and Laura Case.

—Extensive preparations are being made by the several committee's appointed to make arrangements for the coming soldiers reunion. Organizations are being formed at different points in this and neighboring counties, with a view of taking part in the exercises. From present indications the reunion will be the largest gathering of the kind ever known in this part of the country.

—Last Friday evening as some of our boys were returning from the ball-game at Waterloo, shot off their mouths a trifle too much to suit one of our old farmers, and the consequence was a "foot-race," in which the farmer got left about seven laps. The race continued about half an hour, and had the old man caught the boys he would have scored a few to their sorrow—with a buggy whip.

—Here is an old and excellent prescription for cholera, which is also a remedy for ordinary summer complaints, colic, diarrhea and dysentery: Take equal parts of tincture of cayenne pepper, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose, fifteen to thirty drops in a little cold water, according to age and violence of symtoms, repeated every fifteen or twenty minutes until relief is obtained.

—The muskete is born ov poor but industrious parents—but has in hiz veins sum ov the best blood in the country. Yures for 90 days.—Josh Billings.

It is our private opinion that Josh wrote the above just after returning from a fishing excursion.—Steuben Republican.

It may be that he wrote it after returning from a fishing excursion, but he couldn't have been in the same condition of a party we know of, or he would have said "sum ov the best korn juice."

—An amusing incident occurred at Sam. Pommert's barber shop last Friday evening, in which Theodore Kessler and Ed. Lee were the principal actors. Ed. attempted to take a "tooth-pick" from Theo's. right shin, when Theo. at once proceeded to give him the collar etc. out of the door, in which effort the seat of Ed's. pants gave way, which left him in a bad condition to be seen on the streets; so he "bottomed" one of Sam's. chairs until dark, and with the assistance of a long-cut coat was enabled to reach home in safety. He still lives.

—Last Saturday evening two suspicious looking tramps were perambulating the streets, and after a short time separated, one going into Beugnot's saloon and the other in another direction. Constable Hopkins seing their manouvers was a little suspicious, and at once proceeded to investigate the case. He proceeded to the saloon, took Mr. Tramp by the arm and waltzed him over to the court-house, where he left him in the charge of Prosecutor Moody and contined his search for the other. While in Moody's charge the tramp showed fight, when he was informed that he was not under arrest, and the best thing for him to do would be to "skip." The tramp looked at Moody, then at the back door of the court-house, bid him good evening and disappeared like a flash.

—An accident occurred about ten o'clock last Saturday night on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, at Havana, four miles north of Chicago Junction. The locomotive of the passenger train jumped the track, falling down an embankment and turning a complete somersault in the air. James Bogue, engineer, and Al. Reed, fireman, were both caught between the engine and tender and instantly killed, their bodies being horribly mangled. The passengers miraculously escaped. The train was four hours late, and was being pushed to its best speed to make up as much lost time as possible. The accident is attributed to two causes, one that the rapid motion of the train caused the rails to spread and the other that a hot box on the forward truck of the engine caused a wheel to melt off. The former is perhaps the true cause, as where the accident occurred there is a sharp curve.

It is well known.

Many grocers sell Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder at the same price of the cheaper kinds, and as they pay more for it; make less money; hence, they never sell it unless the purchaser demands it. Pure articles can not be made as cheap as those that are adulterated.

St. Joe.

—Cucumbers and green corn; string beans and new cabbage; sweet scented butter and still sweeter scented fresh beef.

—We notice that Jim May has a job on Pete's slow train.

—During the six days ending Saturday evening last, the St. Joe elevators handled 4,500 bushels of new wheat at 98c and a $1 per bushel.

—It is a fact worth knowing that St. Joe buys grain from farmers living within three miles of the town of Auburn. Auburn buyers should begin to prick up their ears.

—The farm of Wm. Tustason, deceased, which was advertised to be sold on the 26th, was not sold, no purchasers putting in an appearance.

—Boys who go to Spencerville to buy dry-goods by the pound, should not imbibe too much fire-water, as it makes them too prominent.

—James Sechler, of Orangeville, reports having raised from one acre of ground 48 bushels of wheat, machine count.

—Orangevillians, it is said, are getting excited over something that they are afraid Hank may do, but then, some people are easily excited at trifles.

—We understand that parties from Newville are making arrangements to locate here, for the purpose of engaging in the drug business.

—Frank Herrick, who is doing a little corner store "biz" at Concord, would like to come to St. Joe, but can't find no business room. If some man of capital could be induced to build several business blocks, we think it would be profitable, at least to the working-men who might build them.

SCRIBE.

A "God and morality" republican exchange asserts, that "the democratic party at the north draws its strength from the least intelligent and least progressive states." Let us see. Take New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois; there is no discount on those states. They contain more miles of railroads than all the rest of the north together.

They pay more internal revenue by double than all the remainder of the north.

They have more capital invested in manufactures, and pay more wages, than all the rest of the north put together.

They pay annually by many millions more for school purposes than all the other northern states combined.

How did they vote at the late presidential election?

	TILDEN.	HAYES.
New York	521,949	489,207
New Jersey	115,956	103,517
Pennsylvania	366,204	384,148
Ohio	323,182	330,698
Indiana	213,526	207,971
Illinois	258,602	277,226
Total	1,799,419	1,792,767

In those six controlling states the democratic party polled an actual majority over the republican party at the last presidential election.

There is no more room for darkies in Kansas. So says Governor St. John in the following letter to the Kansas Sanitary commission: "We have already received and cared for between 4,000 and 5,000 of these people (colored refugees) here in Kansas. The labor market has been, I will say, overstocked with them. It is utterly impossible to obtain employment for them now. The funds of the association are about exhausted, and to send more of them here in addition to the number that are already here and must be provided for, would be a cruel outrage upon the black man, and will necessarily result in much suffering on their part for the want of food or the opportunity to earn it. So far as I am personally concerned I shall never officially or otherwise forbid any human being, who is willing to obey the laws and make an honest effort to better his condition and become a good citizen, from entering the state of Kansas. I only say it would be an outrage upon the destitute blacks to send them here now, in view of the facts that I have already stated—we have now on hand, including 100 sick and disabled, all it is possible for our committee to provide for."

Commissioners' Sale of Land.

Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the DeKalb circuit court, in the case of Mariah Dixon and others, against Sebastian Tustison, I, as the Commissioner in said cause, will on the premises herein described, on Saturday, July 26th, 1879,

at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale the following real estate to-wit:

The east fraction of the south west quarter in section fourteen, (14), in township thirty-three, (33), north of range fourteen, (14), east, (except the right of way of the Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Chicago railroad company,) also the south fraction of the north west quarter of the same section, containing one hundred and thirty and 75-100 acres more or less. For any sum not less than two-thirds of the appraised value, on the following terms, to wit: One third of the purchase in hand, and the balance in three equal annual payments, with six per cent. interest, waiving valuation laws.

J. D. LEIGHTY, Com'r.

The above sale is postponed until Saturday, the 23rd day of August, 1879, at the same hour and place.

TUTT'S PILLS

INDORSED BY PHYSICIANS, CLERGYMEN, AND THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL TRIUMPH OF THE AGE.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE SICK HEADACHE.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE DYSPEPSIA.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE PILES.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE FEVER AND AGUE.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE BILIOUS COLIC.
TUTT'S PILLS Cure KIDNEY Complaint.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE TORPID LIVER.
TUTT'S PILLS IMPART APPETITE.

DR. TUTT has succeeded in combining in these pills the heretofore antagonistic qualities of a STRENGTHENING PURGATIVE, and a PURIFYING TONIC.

Their first apparent effect is to increase the appetite by causing the food to properly assimilate. Thus the system is nourished, and by their tonic action on the digestive organs, regular and healthy evacuations are produced.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE ON FLESH while under the influence of these Pills, indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, melancholy, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system. Sold everywhere.

A STERLING OLD POEM.

Who shall judge man from his manner,
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for Princes,
Princes fit for nothing else.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar
Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden,
Hidden, crushed and overthrown;
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords, remember
That your meanest kinds are men!
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men of thoughts, and men of fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to Him all vague distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of the nation's wealth and fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of others' foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right;
God, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Links oppression, with its titles,
But as pebbles in the sea.

DOWN IN OLD KAINTUCK.

BY W. W.

If, even before the war had revolutionized the whole South, there was any place in the whole country free of everything like aristocratic pretension, that condition was certainly exemplified in the more hilly or mountainous districts of Kentucky and Tennessee, and indeed, so few were the "contrabands" in those sections that it was really hard by that test to fix for the people there any standard or index which gave one family precedence in rank or standing over the most plain or humble around.

And if any distinctions should have been attempted on the score of large bodies of land held by one family, that would certainly have been a failure; a good deal of those hills and mountain ranges being precisely of that kind of which it is sometimes said, the "more a man has of it the poorer and more embarrassed he is."

In truth, so exacting were the sovereigns of these wild and sparsely-settled mountain districts in their dealings with the politicians, that, in some cases, it endangered a man's chances for election to the Legislature, or even to Congress, to, at least seem to be too "larned" or pretentious on that score; for such an one was not supposed to sympathize any too strongly with the masses, conscious enough of their own deficiencies, and not particularly desirous of being reminded of them.

On one occasion, for instance, a very accomplished and able lawyer, who was a candidate for Congress in East Tennessee, was defeated by more than 2,000 majority, mainly because he taunted his opponent, who had already been in Congress, with his illiterateness; for when the lawyer told his competitor that if he, the latter, would "write three lines straight across a sheet of paper," then lying before him there in the Court House—where the speaking took place—and "spell every word correctly, he himself would withdraw from the canvass." The reply was that he, the ex-member, "was not going to be humbugged after that sort; but that the proposition was an insulting fling at those present, and the thousands in that Congressional district who couldn't read and write, and an assumption therefore not to be endured!"

And it didn't need the ridiculous story which was shortly invented and set going—"that the lawyer's wife had made him a mitten with which to shake poor men's hands," to beat him badly, for the other injudicious assumption had already accomplished that end.

But there was one determined and pronounced aristocrat in that section whose case must not be passed over; one Tom Amis; who couldn't be mistaken in that vicinage for anything else—that is, after his own particular style. An old aunt had left this gentleman a tract of land—some sixty acres—his "estate," he termed it; and along with this bequest a solitary contraband, and this "streak of good luck" had apparently left Tom not much more to desire. With an old mule, Tom managed to make the negro man cultivate the place, after a fashion; and a tolerably good saddle-horse enabled him himself to visit all the jollifications within twenty or thirty miles of his "estate." Passably good-looking, although his long black hair gave him a roystering appearance, with a pair of black gloves—he somehow always managed to have a pair—and a huge cane surmounted with a piece of quartz crystal about an inch in diameter, he generally strutted into company; and appeared never so proud and happy as when, at camp-meeting or church, he could manage to hoist the cane above his head for the envy or admiration of lookers-on. It was the great "Kohinoor diamond" of his own neighborhood.

Of course it required "management" to make that one contraband keep up the income of the "estate," but Tom was quite equal to it. It wouldn't do to let that "gang" be idle, so Tom had a dry ox-hide—so the story was—taken out to the little corn and tobacco patch, every morning, the scene of the contraband's daily labors, and causing it to be placed under a tree, from whence he could superintend operations, he would lie upon the hide all day, smoking a corn-cob pipe or dozing while Jack hoed. When the sun got round upon him and too hot, as of course it would do after awhile, he would call for Jack to take hold of the tail of the ox-hide and pull him into the shade again; in this particular, probably unconciously, imitating certain Kings of Spain, who had to be moved back from the fire-place by an attendant when it got too hot.

But, speaking of learning and the few pretensions to it throughout the mountain region, there were some learned individuals, as I have already shown that there could be aristocrats. One of these I certainly encountered, one afternoon, in the person of a rather noted quack doctor, who was the proprietor of some sort of a water-cure establishment away amongst the hills. I had overtaken him on the road, and it seemed that he had a stock of professional terms and phrases, mostly concocted by himself, with which he sought to stun his rustic patients into an awful sense of his erudition. I was soon made aware of his determination to impress me, also, for one of his first queries, as we rode onward, was: "How long before the evening shades will overwhelm the atmosphere?"

He further declared, in the course of conversation, that he "had a great detestation to disannul the use of ardent spirits," and that "men's health in that section would never be good so long as they did not know that a diaphramic infatuation caused by whisky and tobacco multiplied the functitiousness of the stomach."

I gravely responded that "I thought so, too, especially so far as the use of whisky and tobacco was in the case."

The universal hot biscuit and excessively heavy diet otherwise in vogue undoubtedly caused a good deal of dyspepsia and kindred troubles; and this the learned doctor characterized as "slothfulness of the digester," and one of his not-infrequent prescriptions for it was "calamy and jollup," while he claimed to be "great in scrofulo and drapsy, yallar jarndice and shakin' ager!"

That learning was sometimes valued, however, I will proceed to show. Traveling in company with a friend on the headwaters of Rockcastle creek, on one occasion, Saturday night found us at a large cabin where already two Baptist preachers had preceded us—who had arrived there that night to keep an appointment for preaching the next day. Finding that we also could be accommodated, we both determined to spend the Sabbath there to, of course, attend the meeting, and we concluded that if we did not succeed in getting very much edified on doctrinal hard points, we should at least see some new phases of life among these primitive people. And we did, as the result will show.

Sitting around the blazing fire that night, we soon found that the two old preachers were in manifest and peculiar trouble; a member of their flock, an elderly man—Bro. Hicks—noted for his cross-grained pig-headedness, having gotten hold of a book considered by them decidedly heterodox, and yet it was a sort of a bone they were incompetent to pick, and which, to aggravate their troubles, he insisted, in his pugnacious way, on poking at them every time they undertook to expound the scriptures in that vicinity.

Fortunately, my associate had struck a case he was quite at home upon, if I was not; and as the book had been loaned to one of the preachers a few days before to be returned the next day, the evening was partially spent in riddling the errors and false pretensions of the little work, whilst the two old preachers sat by fairly rubbing their hands, with—as it appeared afterwards—gleeful anticipations of what was to follow.

But my young friend, a fine Greek and Biblical scholar, had little suspicion of what was in store for him the next morning. Seated on a log outside the cabin, whilst the congregation on foot and on horseback came pouring in from the hills and hollows, we at length entered the house at the sound of the inevitable tin-horn; and directly that we were in-doors, were assailed by a knotty-headed, iron-gray looking old fellow, for "finding fault with his book."

Somewhat taken aback at the assault in the presence of a considerably large congregation, I stammered something like an apology for having taken liberties with "his book," that what had been said about it was no wise personal to him, suggesting at the same time, that we were not "preachers," and upon such an occasion as that should be excused from controversy.

But this did not seem to satisfy him at all. He had bothered so many, it appeared, by putting things at them they could not explain—although he could not make matters clear himself—that he was bent on letting his neighbors and the preachers see that he and his "book" had the best of it; and so would take no denial; whereupon my associate, who by this time had "got his dander up," fell aboard of him, and, as one of the preachers afterwards expressed it—"made a perfect shucking of him and his book."

Indeed, the old sinner was so completely used up, his heterodox treatise so thoroughly shown to be "mischievous and dangerous," that he became absolutely meek and penitent; whereupon, in the sermon and prayers alternately which followed the passage-at-arms, strong allusion was made to and thanks returned for the "rooting out of error—for the providential coming of that young man amongst them, to overthrow error such as even the most learned of their aged preachers found themselves unable to grapple with."

In regard to one outside idea concerning the people of the section I am describing—that they were too pugnacious and quarrelsome—too ready for "gouging" and kindred accomplishments to make it safe or pleasant to travel among them—the current reports, I believe, have generally taken that view of the case. But it is a view to be modified, as it is taken from this or that standpoint.

While trials of prowess, and oftentimes savage encounters growing out of bullying rivalries, etc., among themselves, were frequent enough, the stranger who treated them courteously had nothing special to be uneasy about so far as he desired immunity from assault. Of course, if he wanted a quarrel, it was easy enough to get it.

If he happened upon a jolly crowd, for instance, on "court day," or at some cross-roads gathering, he might be called upon to "kiss old roan"—take a pull at a whisky bottle presented to him—"or fight;" but commonly a stranger might ride up to the most noisy group, and with the salutation, "Good morning, gentlemen!" pass on his way with the like courteous greeting in response. Accosted and treated as "gentlemen," the hardest and most lawless cases would be ashamed to belie the appellation and compliment.

To be sure, again, there were men in almost every community down there with whom, from their touchy sense of "honor" and a reputation for fighting characteristics, gained through desperate encounters in their youth, a peaceable man might well be upon his guard; and such a one was my particular friend, Capt. Goins. I felt quite assured of this one day when we two were out fishing on the shore of a creek with steep banks, the water of which, having recently fallen, had left a broad margin of slippery mud running down to water some six or eight feet in depth, the bank being at an angle of about 45 deg. Sitting further down the stream, and about twenty yards from the Captain, I was aroused from watching my line by the sound of a peculiar grunt. Looking up to where that gentleman was posted, I saw him in his finest "go-to-meeting suit," sitting flat on the ground, and gradually but steadily slipping down the muddy bank, and leaving a smooth track as he went, in spite of a most desperate endeavor by digging his heels and sprawling his fingers into the slime to save himself. Conscious that he was cutting a peculiarly-ludicrous figure, and furious, too, at his mishap, he did not intend to betray to me his predicament at all; but the involuntary grunt mentioned betrayed him; and, seeing his eyes fairly flash fire as I reached down to the rescue, I discreetly gave him only my sympathy, reserving my laugh—which it was certainly hard to restrain—to another time. And yet, from his known characteristics and despite his avowed friendship for me, I could have had a desperate fight in hand "for half price," as the current phrase is, applicable to such cases, and very well I knew this.

Then again, there were localities, where, as it would seem, a fighting ring or club would take possession of a town in some cases, making a point of getting a fight whenever they could. I remember one of these country towns "up on Sandy," which was infested by a gang led by a long-limbed, dissolute lawyer, who would, about once a fortnight, when the fit was on him, pick a quarrel with almost any one whom he fell in with, and, when all other chances failed, he used sometimes to walk up the main street of the village, and from the opposite corner to a store there, hailing the owner thereof as a "cussed Dutchman," generally have a fight on his hands in five minutes. And, although Hans almost always got "vipped," the result, however, depending a good deal on the condition for soberness of his challenger, he said he was "Always ready to fight, for he couldn't stand it to be called a 'cussed Dutchman,' anyhow."

And yet broad jokes, the very broadest, were perhaps more often indulged in among these people, with their easy-going lives, and their love of fun, than among the staid Northerners.

"If you lived in the woods!" exclaimed a tall, rough-looking chap, one day, to another, a total stranger to him, but with a fiery-red head; "you could get your living for nothing."

"How so?" said the other, of course surprised at the suggestion.

"Why, if you would get into a hollow stump and stick that head of yours out of the top of it, the red-headed woodpeckers would come and feed you!"

On one occasion, again, I happened to be spending the night at the house of a Kentuckian, noted in his own neighborhood for his irascibility and fighting qualities; and after supper was over—of course in the same room—my companion, also a Kentuckian, lighted a cigar and stuck a piece of cascarilla in the end of it; which—the reader is probably aware—at once gives a strong smell of musk. The room began to be pervaded with the scent of the bark, and the first indication of it was manifested by the host's wife, who had remained at the table.

"What is in my coffee?" was her petulant query, as with a disgusted expression of countenance she emptied the contents of her cup into the broad fire-place.

My companion winked at me, gave another puff, and a look at our host, who was by this time snuffing around, and exclaimed:

"John, I'll be dog-oned if there ain't a pole-cat under the house amongst your hound pups; and you'll lose 'em."

Now, if there was anything on the place that John valued, it was these same hound pups; and staring wildly about, and yet not wanting to go in the darkness, and on his hands and knees on an exploring expedition under the floor after such game, he was puzzled what to do.

"I'll tell you how you can find out," said the wag. "Get down there on the hearth and see if you can't smell him. You can find out whether he's there that way."

Down, then, our host got on his "all fours," in the presence of the whole family circle, and, snuffing vigorously several long breaths at a hole which had chanced to be burned through the floor by a fallen brand, he declared he did "smell him!"

But he was soon undeceived and rewarded for his pains by an uproarious guffaw from his neighbor and myself, soon joined in by the whole family and himself, as the truth came out. Looking angry for an instant, he yet got up from his kneeling position a "wiser" if not a better man, averring that it was the best joke of the season.

The whole affair was strongly illustrative of the common love of fun among this people, and their readiness, upon occasion, to take the broadest jokes with entire equanimity and good nature, when a much less provocation under other circumstances sometimes led to bloody results. The common saying of the contrabands was very nigh right in this regard at least, "White man berry onsartain."

THE SUN-DANCE.

How the Sioux Indians Celebrated Their Annual Feast.

A letter received at the Interior Department from Dr. T. Woodbridge, agency physician for the Fort Peck agency, gives the following graphic description of the annual "sun-dance" of the Sioux nation, which took place near Poplar river in Montana Territory about four weeks ago: "I have just witnessed the great Indian festival of the 'sun-dance' or worship of the sun. Great preparations had been made for it, and everything was on the grandest scale. The city of lodges was moved and the Indians camped on a plain inclosing a hollow square large enough for the movements of thousands of horsemen. In the center the great pavilion or medicine lodge was erected, 150 feet in diameter, the outside formed of small posts of green poplar and willow thickly interwoven with green branches. Resting on this, and on a rude framework within, all around for about twenty feet the space was covered with buffalo skins, forming the 'dress circle,' places assigned to the musicians and actors or dancers. In the center was the great medicine pole, fifty feet high. Only the men occupied the deep circle, where they were feasted during the peformance of twenty-eight continuous hours, during which time about forty dogs were immolated and eaten, besides large quantities of buffalo meat, wild turnip-heads and hot cauldrons of other eatables that are nameless. About 5,000 Indians were present. All had on their holiday attire. The dresses of some of the chiefs and those acting as directors or priests were gorgeous.

"When all was prepared, amid the waving of banners, music, and the loud shouting of the assembled throng, over fifty braves entered, each painted and naked to the waist. Each carried in his hand an ornamented whistle, made from the bone of an eagle's wing, which was blown shrilly during the dancing. Each also carried a bouquet composed mostly of the wild sage. The first afternoon's performance would have been called wonderful for display of heroism and power to endure and suffer. Many had from fifty to 200 pieces cut out of the flesh of their arms and back. The dance was kept up all night with unabated fervor, every performance having something new and startling. But in the morning torture reigned supreme, men dancing with two, three and four buffalo heads suspended from holes cut in their flesh. One Indian dragged on the ground eight buffalo heads fastened to the flesh of his back, and in the stooping posture he was forced to assume they had torn the cuts in his back to the extent of three inches. Others were held by four different cords, two in the breast and two in the back, fastened to four stakes, and still others were fastened to the center-pole with ropes which were fastened to the breast and back. Some, in addition to being fastened by the flesh of their breasts, had buffalo heads suspended from the back, and they would be seized by the hanging heads and jerked until one would think their life would be forfeited. Others made frantic efforts to break loose, and I often noticed the integument to be stretched three or four inches from the body. Some fell faint and exhausted, and with wild shouts, the din of music, and wierd songs, made of it a perfect pandemonium. The dancers took neither food, sleep nor water during the festival. Their dancing, their invocations and their prayers were fervent. They laid their faces on the buffalo heads while praying for success in hunting, and the priest wept and asked the Great Spirit to give them success in the chase, and let them have food for their wives and children. Also to give them plenty of horses, to prosper them, and help them to subdue their enemies."

A Romance of Dimes and Dollars.

Wm. S. O'Brien, the California millionaire, declared on his death-bed that his only brother had passed from earth in the city of Baltimore as long ago as 1861. Nevertheless, the will of the bonanza king showed a bequest of $300,000 to Pauline O'Brien, a beautiful girl whose undefined relations to the rich man, under whose roof she dwelt, had been a matter of gossip in San Francisco. Pauline had been accustomed to speak of the millionaire as Uncle William, and when it became known that her share was the same as those received by the recognized nieces, the mystery deepened. After the death of O'Brien, Pauline in company with an aged woman, who proved to her mother, took a flying trip to Raleigh, N. C. returning thence to San Francisco with an old, decrepit man. Arrived again at the Golden Gate Pauline locked the old couple in rooms at the Palace Hotel and announcing to the O'Brien heirs that she had found her father, P. H. O'Brien, who had never been worth a dime, claimed for him $1,000,000. Her lawyer furnished the trustees of the estate with indisputable proof that William S. and Patrick H. were brothers. Months passed and the matter had nearly reached the courts when a compromise was effected. Under the compromise the trustees paid over to Pauline and her mother $600,000. This payment was made on last Wednesday week, but old Patrick never saw his thousands, he having died on Tuesday—the day before the payment.—San Francisco Post.

Is It Going to Rain?

The old signs seldom fail—a red and angry sunrise, or flushed clould at evening. Many a hope of rain have I seen dashed by a painted sky at sunset. There is truth in the old couplet, too:

If it rains before seven,
It will clear before eleven.

Morning rains are usually short-lived. Better wait till 10 o'clock. When the clouds are chilled, they turn blue and rise up. When the fog leaves the mountain, reaching upward, as if afraid of being left, the fair weather is near. Shoddy clouds are of little account, and soon fall to pieces. Have your clouds show a good strong fiber, and have them lined—not with silver, but with other clouds of a finer texture—and have them wadded. It wants two or three thicknesses to get up a rain. Especially, unless you have that cloud-mother, that dim, filmy, nebulous mass that has its root in the higher regions of the air, and is the source and backing of all storms—your rain will be light indeed.—"Locusts and Wild Honey," by John Burroughs.

Man a Fighting Animal.

Do what we will with him, man is naturally a fighting animal. There is a curious autobiography to be found in Southern book-shops, written by an old hunter who was born about a century ago. There is the same thirst for blood and fierce love of the chase in it as if a beast of prey or a greyhound was telling its story.

The most amusing example is where the old man tells how he and his sons once trained some young dogs to hunt bears.

"I put on the skin of an old bear," he says, "and crawled about on all-fours, while Elisha and Job drove the pups on. They were scared at first, but presently the whole six attacked me furiously, bit my calves, tore my hair, hung on my ears.

"I begun to shout 'Enough!' but 'Lisha cried, 'Don't, dad, don't! It's the life of the pups.'"

He adds, "Of course I stayed. I had consideration for the dogs."

It takes a great deal of training to root out this instinct from men who inherit it. Everybody knows the history of the "fighting Quakers" during the Revolutionary War. Many of the staid sons of staid sires of the same faith slipped out of meeting during the last war, to shoulder a musket.

One venerable old friend in Germantown, Pa., found that three of his sons had gone to this conflict against which his creed arrayed him. They oungest felt that he too must go, but feared to tell his family.

He took his gun, one day, and began to clean it, placing himself in his father's way. The old gentleman saw him, and paced slowly up and down, but said nothing. Presently he approached the young man.

"Charles," he said, deliberately, "if the devil has made thee feel that thee needs one of those worldly instruments, spare not thy money, but get the best."

Alexander Campbell, most combative of Scotch reformers and theologians, once submitted his head to the fingers of a phrenologist, who had no knowledge of Mr. Campbell's calling. The man finished his examination with the words, "From your executive ability and love of fighting, sir, you are or ought to be a great soldier."

The aged clergyman heaved a sigh: "No, sir, no. Circumstances were against me. But, according to my opportunity, I've done what I could—I've done what I could."

Will Love Dogs No More.

We have loved dogs, but we will not love any more. We have had too much trouble for them; and this trouble has even come in the form of grief. In youth we had a noble animal. His name was Brutus, and he represented Brutus in his loyalty and undying devotion. He was intelligent, affectionate and firm. It was his habit to attend a company of school-girls in their evening walk, and his demeanor on those occasions marked his pride as well as his courtesy and dignity. One evening a gallant gentleman, worthy of those brightly civil days for his gallantry and gentlemanly manners, met the admirable procession, and advanced with an animated step to pay attention to a young lady with whom he was intimately acquainted. Brutus had his eye upon him, and, without displaying any rudeness whatever, quietly advanced himself, intercepted the young gentleman's hand as it was gracefully put forward, and enveloped it with his mouth just as it was about to clasp the hand of the young lady. The teeth of Brutus were gently pressed upon the hand, but did not pierce or tear it. The young gentleman was a self-poised, sensible man, such as were common in those days. He did no fidgety or silly thing, but gradually withdrew the hand which the faithful guard had gently intercepted. He was so struck with the conduct of Brutus that he became his devoted friend, and ever after honored the dog that so faithfully protected the lady he admired. And yet this dog we so cherished was murdered by a man unknown. When found he lay between the corn-rows, lifeless, with a bullet-hole through his side. The brave and devoted animal slept the sleep of death, and the green corn waved gracefully above him. Was not that too good an animal to be owned and held by so frail a tenure? We want no more dogs. —Richmond (Va.) Dispatch.

An Oriole's Hatred of a Dog.

An incident, interesting to students of natural history, occurred a few days ago at a residence in this city. In front of the house a small tree is growing, in which an oriole, some time ago, took up its abode, building a nest and evincing an intention to raise a family. The owner of the house has a spaniel, over which he has shot innumerable game birds within a few years past. From the time the oriole began to build its nest it exhibited a marked antipathy to the dog, flying at him boldly whenever he came in front of the house and pecking him until he retired from the field. This occurred several times, the bird always coming off victorious. Of late the oriole has shown more objection than common to the dog, perhaps because there are now some young ones in the nest. On Sunday last the unhappy spaniel came out to lie on the front steps, but was not allowed to enjoy his rest unbroken, for the oriole swept down on him, pecked his back, flapped his wings in his eyes, and made it so uncomfortable for him that the dog ran into the house. But his trouble did not end there, for the bird went into the house after him, beating him continually.—Rochester Union.

A Fever Patient's Fatal Leap.

Leonard Gunther, aged 18, was sick at an uncle's with the typhoid fever, on Jefferson street, until yesterday morning. Then, in his delirium, he threw the woman nurse aside and leaped head-foremost out at the window. He fell three stories, struck on his head, and died instantly.—Dayton (Ohio) Journal.

THE WHIP-POOR-WILL.

When apple-branches, flushed with bloom,
Load June's warm evenings with perfume,
And balmier grows each perfect day,
And fields are sweet with new-mown hay,
Then, minstrel lone, I hear thy note,
Up from the pasture-thickets float—
Whip-poor-will!

Thine are the hours to love endeared,
And summoned by thy accents weird,
What wild regrets—what tender pain,
Recalls my youthful dreams again,
As floating down the shadowy years
That old refrain, fond memory hears—
Whip-poor-will!

The garish day inspires thee not;
But, hid in some deep-shaded grot,
Thou [illegible]
The silver hours inviolate,
When every harsher sound is flown,
And groves and glens are thine alone,
Whip-poor-will!

Then, when the rapt, voluptuous night
Pants in the young moon's tender light,
And woods and cliffs and shimmering streams
Are splendid in her argent beams—
How thrills the lover's heart to hear
Thy loud staccato, liquid-clear,
Whip-poor-will!

Whence comes thy iterated phrase,
That to the wondering ear conveys
Half-human sounds, yet cheats the sense
With vagueness of intelligence,
And, like a wandering voice of air,
Haunts the dim fields, we know not where,
Whip-poor-will?

"Oh, content enough," was the reply; "but I should be exceedingly ashamed at having such a fool."

"JAMES," said the veteran parliamentarian, as they sat quietly fishing, "it wouldn't do to move the previous question up here." "Why not here as well as elsewhere?" inquired James. "Because," explained the veteran, as he proceeded to render his hook tempting to the fish, "because if the motion should prevail, it would cut off all de bait."

PROF. HOLDEN says that a great many writers use a vocabulary of 30,000 words, and the average, among good writers, will fall very little below that. That may be true, but when a man tries to raise a window in a hurry and catches his thumb between the sash and the fly-screen, he doesn't use more than a half-dozen words, but they are worth 30,000 on ordinary occasions.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Birds of Paradise.

The birds of paradise unite all these modes of ornamentation in the highest degree, and with the most harmonious results. They join the graceful plumes of the ostrich to the dainty coloring of the sun-bird. Crests almost as largely developed as that of the umbrella-bird overshadow their beautiful heads; frills as full as those of the humming-birds fall down in metallic splendor before their gorgeous necks. And if any proof be wanting of the connection between the nature of the food and the general beauty of the plumage, it may be found in the fact that these royally attired creatures are first cousins of our own dingy crows and jackdaws; but, while the crow seeks his livelihood among the insects and carrion of an English plowed field, the bird of paradise regales his lordly palate on the crimson and purple fruits which gleam out amid the embowering foliage of Malayan forests.—Cornhill Magazine.

SABBATH READING.

Watch-Words.

Through gathering clouds and stormy seas of fate
Two golden watch-words guide and comfort me;
Toiling along my path, early and late,
I cling to Patience and Fidelity.

In all the weary changes of my day
I strive to follow duty faithfully;
And when I falter, fainting, by the way,
With subtle influence Patience strengthens me.

So onward, through what suffering God may send,
I walk with faith, and feet that shall not tire,
Trusting with Patience, strong unto the end,
To reach at last, O Lord, my soul's desire.

St. Paul and Ingersoll.

The most eloquent of materialists, Col. Ingersoll, not long ago delivered a discourse over the remains of his brother. Side by side with his oration we give the words of St. Paul:

So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption—

It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power—

It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a quickening spirit.

Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual.

The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven.

As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and, as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.

And, as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

Now, this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

Behold, I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed,

In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory?

The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law.

But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

MY FRIENDS: I am going to do that which the dead oft promised that he would do for me. This loved and loving brother, husband, father, friend, died where manhood's morning almost touches noon, and while the shadows still were falling toward the West. He had not passed on life's highway the stone that marks the highest point; but, being weary for a moment, he laid down by the wayside, and, using his burden for a pillow, fell into that dreamless sleep that kisses down his eyelids still. While yet in love with life and raptured with this world, he passed into silence away. This brave and tender man, in every storm of life, was oak and rock, but, in the sunshine, he was vine and flower. He was the friend of all heroic souls. He climbed the heights and left all superstitions far below, while on his forehead fell the golden dawning of the grander day. He loved the beautiful, and was, with color, form and music, touched to tears. He sided with the weak, and, with a willing hand, gave alms. With loyal heart and with the purest hands he faithfully discharged all public trusts. He was a worshiper of liberty, a friend of the oppressed. A thousand times I have heard him quote these words: "For justice all place a temple and all season summer." He believed that happiness was the only good reason, the only torch, justice the only worshiper, manhood the only religion and love the only priest. He added to the sum of human joy, and, were every one for whom he did some loving service to bring a blossom to his grave, he would sleep to-night beneath a wilderness of flowers. Life is a narrow vale; we strive in vain to look beyond the heights; we cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word, but, in the night of death, Hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing. He who sleeps here when dying, mistaking the approach of death for the return of health, whispered, with the latest breath, "I am better now." Let us believe, in spite of doubts and dogmas, in spite of fears and tears, that these dear words are true of all the countless dead.

And now, to you who have been chosen from among the many men he loved to do the last, sad office for the dead, we give his sacred dust. Speech cannot contain the love we bear. There was, there is, no gentler, stronger, manlier man, and now for wife and children, for myself and mine, we tender to you one and all, our dearest life.

Quiet Lives.

Christ's lowly, quiet workers unconsciously bless the world. They come out every morning from the presence of God and go to their business or their household work. And all day long as they toil they drop gentle words from their lips and scatter little seeds of kindness about them; and to-morrow flowers from the garden of God spring up in the dusty streets of earth and along the hard paths of toil on which their feet tread. More than once in the Scripture the lives of God's people in this world are compared in their influence to the dew. There may be other points of analogy, but specially noteworthy is the quiet manner in which dew performs its ministry. It falls silently and imperceptibly. It makes no noise. No one hears it dropping. It chooses the darkness of the night, when men are sleeping, and when no man can witness its beautiful work. It covers the leaves with clusters of pearls. It steals into the bosom of the flowers and leaves a new cupful of sweetness there. It pours itself down among the roots of the grasses and tender herbs and plants. And in the morning there is fresh beauty everywhere. The fields look greener, the gardens are more fragrant, all life glows and sparkles with a new splendor. And is there no lesson here as to the manner in which we should seek to do good in this world? Should we not strive to have our influence felt rather than to be seen or heard? Should we not scatter blessings so silently and so secretly that no one shall know what hand dropped them? The whole spirit of the gospel teaches this. "When thou doest thy alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth, that thy alms may be in secret." We are not to seek praise of men. We are not to do good deeds to receive rewards from men. We are not to sound trumpets or announce our good deeds from the housetop.—Dr. Bushnell.

First Look in a Mirror.

The effect which the sudden seeing of themselves as others see them had upon several Siamese women, is narrated by a lady:

A few weeks ago a company of Siamese women came to see me and to look at my house. They consider it a great event if I invite them through my rooms, and let them look at my bed, my tables, my chairs, my pictures and nick-nacks, and especially if they can get a look at themselves in the mirror on my bureau.

One or two of those who came had been here before, and they were telling of how they looked in the glass, till the others were all anxious to see too, so they gathered in a crowd and stood before the mirror.

One quick look, and then a surprised, startled cry, and some of them hid their faces, others jumped away, and some looked about to see who was really there.

They had never seen themselves before, and did not know how miserably they looked, with their black teeth and naked bodies. They drew their scarfs over their breasts, and tried to hide from the sight of themselves.

One turned and said to me, "We are very hateful-looking; don't you think so?"

I did not tell them I had always thought so, but I said:

"Now, since you know how you look, is it any wonder that we always tell you to wear more clothes, and to quit chewing betel?"

Some of them would not be induced to look the second time, while others stood and stared.

Western Educational Institutions.

No greater truism was ever written by pen or uttered by lip than that "Education is the lever that moves the world." And no people in the wide world seem to have a truer appreciation of this fact than the dwellers in that grand region denominated "the West." In the giant strides which that section of our country has of late made in population, wealth and material progress, no interest has improved and expanded with more rapid pace than her educational institutions.

It is only a few years since parents living in the West who desired to give their children a thorough education, preparatory or collegiate, were compelled to send them to some Eastern school, college or university, hundreds of miles away, thus entailing the additional expenses incident to traveling, besides the unpleasant feature of having them so far away from home. Happily for the West, this difficulty has been removed. Her institutions of learning to-day will compare favorably with those of the older States, and her preparatory schools are equal to any in the country. Many of her universities are richly endowed, and have professors who, for deep learning and capacity for dispensing knowledge, are unsurpassed anywhere in the land.

The educational facilities of the West being fully equal to those of the East, there no longer exists any reason why parents should send their children so far away from home to educate them. On the contrary, there are manifold reasons why they should look nearer home for fountains of knowledge. In the first place, when the expense of getting to and from the Eastern schools and colleges is taken into consideration, the cost of an education acquired in Western schools is much less than in the Eastern. In fact, the difference is so very great that it will in future figure as a very important factor in influencing the public in favor of the Western schools. Again, those who patronized the Western colleges will enjoy the advantage of having their children nearer home. They will be enabled to see and converse with them frequently, and refresh their minds regarding their morals and the duties devolving upon them as students and seekers after knowledge, and in case of sickness they can be more readily reached and cared for. Finally, the schools and colleges of the West are comparatively free from many vicious practices that have grown up in the old universities of the Eastern and Middle States, and which seem to be a sort of second nature with the students in those institutions. We allude to the disreputable and dangerous pastimes known as "hazing," "rushing," and occasionally open rebellion against the authorities. There is none of that petty spite and animosity against their instructors which, in many of the Eastern colleges, is so deplorably prevalent.

Parents living in the West who contemplate giving their children a liberal education ought to take these facts into consideration and patronize home institutions.

A Trick of the Clairvoyants.

In drawing out the facts of personal or family history, clairvoyants do not always ask direct questions, but rather make statements with an implied interrogation, to which the victim, oftentimes entirely unconsciously, responds by word or look or gesture, or perhaps by all three; and, at a later stage of the interview, these secret facts are artfully given back to the victim, who has no recollection of having previously imparted them, and will not believe that he has done so, but prefers to believe that he is in the presence of divinity.

It is not only possible, but easy, for a practical adept to draw out in this way minute and elaborate details of secret family history. A few years ago, while connected with one of the public institutions of this city, I made a number of experiments in this line. I told the patients afflicted with various forms of nervous and allied disorders, not to tell me about their symptoms nor give me any facts in their cases, but to let me tell them; and then I would proceed to indicate, after the manner of a clairvoyant, the locality of their maladies, and the history of their troubles. In the majority of cases I was successful, and made out the diagnosis to the satisfaction of those who sought my advice, and with good reason, for nothing I could do prevented them from telling me, although I asked them no questions; unintentionally and unconsciously, they would guide me at every stage of the interview. By a little practice any one can easily acquire this art; and long study, such as professional clairvoyants bestow upon this subject, develops great skill in thus managing and deluding the unwary and non-expert.—Scribner.

Dresses for Children.

Children are dressed very picturesqely this season. Their quaint caps and bonnets, their high boots and long stockings, the white-lace trimming on their dark frocks, and the touches of bright color in their neutral-tinted costumes help to a very artistic effect. All sorts of quaint capes and collars are added to frocks and coats; the double-round collar, the lower one two inches deeper than the upper, being the most popular. These are generally seen on coats and ulsters; dresses being trimmed rather to simulate a deep square, and enriched by upward insertions and outlined with lace.—Philadelphia Times.

INDUSTRIAL NOTES.

THE cattle trade of Arkansas is increasing greatly.

WOOL growing is becoming a leading industry in Western Texas.

THE Philadelphia ship-yards have only about 750 men now employed.

OUT of the nineteen window-glass factories in Pittsburgh, fifteen are in operation.

THE apple crop of Western North Carolina was almost wholly destroyed by severe frosts.

IRON rails are $5 a ton higher now than last year at this time, steel rails $3, and pig iron $1 to $3.

AGRICULTURAL-IMPLEMENT manufacturers report larger sales and a brighter outlook than for years before.

AMERICAN coal is selling at Geneva, Switzerland, slightly cheaper than French and German coal, and is regarded as much superior.

ALL agricultural interests in Louisiana are in a healthy condition, and farmers were never in a more prosperous condition than now.

IT has been customary among glass manufacturers to shut down every year for a couple of weeks in July, but, so far, none have shut down this year.

THE season's trade in Western cattle has now opened. It is expected that the "run" will be larger than ever before. Except in portions of Colorado, the cattle on the plains wintered in good condition, and are ready for market as early as last season.

A VERY cheering indication of the improved condition of business in the West is given in the fact that the clearings of the Chicago banks for the first six months of this year amounted to $583,000,000, an increase of nearly $80,000,000, or more than 15 per cent. over the corresponding six month of last year.

"David, Wake Up!"

Sixty years ago, Durham, Conn., was known as an old-fashioned, sleepy town of 1,000 inhabitants. About the only amusement of its chief men and women—bric-a-brac and painting on panels and porcelain were then unknown—was to grow genealogical trees, whose roots ran down to Godric the Saxon. Some of these precious trees rooted themselves—at least, such was the affirmation of ancestral pride—not far from the building of Babel. The sleepy old town had, however, a right to amuse itself in genealogy, for it produced a number of remarkable men—the Chaunceys, the Wadsworths, the Lymans, the Austins, and the Goodriches—celebrated in the literary, clerical, legal and official annals of a dozen States of the Union.

But the town, nevertheless, was sleepy, and so were the people—when in church. One hot Sunday morning in midsummer, as the minister, Rev. David Smith, paused at his "Seventhly, my brethren," he looked around.

Everybody seemed indifferently to "seventhly," for, with one exception, they were all asleep. Even the deacons, occupying the seat of honor, were nodding assent to what they heard not. The only person who appeared to be awake and listening was the minister's eldest son, David.

Looking down upon him, the preacher shouted, in his loudest tone:

"David, wake up!"

In an instant, every man, woman and child awoke, and, in after-times, "David, wake up!" became the irritant, more effective than fennel, with which the good people drove away the drowsy imp.

A Hasty Marriage.

A correspondent, writing from Jefferson, Greene county, Iowa, sends us an anecdote of her great-uncle, as illustrative of the promptness with which the men of the Revolution responded to the call of their country.

At the beginning of our War of Independence Maj. Samuel Lawrence, the father of Boston's two great merchants, Amos and Abbott Lawrence, lived in Groton, Mass. He was the commander of a company of "minute men," who held themselves ready to march against the enemy at a moment's notice.

The Major was engaged to be married to Miss Susanna Parker. The lady's mother suggested that, in view of the uncertain fortunes of war, the marriage should take place forthwith.

"Susie had better be Sam's widow," she said, "than his forlorn damsel."

Susie and the Major being willing, the parson was called in. While he was tying the nuptial knot, a mounted orderly interrupted the ceremony by handing sealed orders to Maj. Lawrence. They directed him to march his men immediately to the headquarters of the American army.

The Major delayed obedience long enough to complete the ceremony, and then, giving the bridal and the farewell kiss, assembled his men and marched.

On reporting himself to his commanding officer he was complimented upon his promptness. Learning of the circumstances under which the Major had marched, the officer procured him a furlough. For a few days the Major enjoyed a honeymoon, and then returned to duty.

The Major lived to see fifty years of American independence, and to raise an honored family.

That Sieve.

When P. T. Barnum, a young man, poor and in debt, left Danbury, says the News, he said to Judge Whittlesey:

"I will pay that bill when I get rich."

The Judge drew down his judicial features, and disdainfully replied:

"That will be when a sieve holds water."

In a few years the visionary young man was in a condition to pen the following brief letter to the Judge:

"I have fixed that sieve."

NEWS IN NATURAL SCIENCE.

Will Eyes Grow Again?—An Ant Story—Vegetable Ivory—Silk from Sea Shells.

The Colonies and India furnish some interesting particulars respecting the so-called "vegetable ivory" which is now so much used as a substitute for ivory. The vegetable ivory used is the produce of a species of palm found wild in South America and Africa. Inside the hard shell is the white kernel, which, being softer than ivory and easily carved, as well as readily dyed, and being less brittle than bone, is largely used in making buttons, etc. The unripe fruit consists of a green shell, containing a watery fluid, which, as the nut ripens, gradually thickens until it becomes a pulpy mass, and eventually hardens into solid matter. The water, though bitter to the taste, is wholesome, and often renders invaluable service to travelers who cannot otherwise obtain water to drink. The tree on which the fruit grows is unlike an ordinary palm, having little or no stem and drooping downwards, especially when the branches are over-weighted by the six or seven bunches of nuts, each containing six or seven seeds, inclosed in thick, heavy shells and outer sheath, and weighing altogether from twenty to twenty-four pounds.

Experiments just made by M. Philipeaux are said to prove that the optic organ has the same capabilities in the way of reconstruction as the bones. M. Philipeaux undertook to discover whether on completely emptying the eyes of young rabbits and guinea-pigs, the vitreous humor would be reorganized and whether even the crystalline would be reproduced. With this view he conducted his operations, always, of course, taking care not to touch the crystalline capsule, for experience has shown that in order for an organ to regenerate a part of it must be left in its place. It seems that a month after the mutilation was made, M. Philipeaux was able to state that the eyes which had been emptied were filled afresh, and that the crystalline was reconstituted. He operated on twenty-four animals, and in every case the mutilated eye revived. How far similar results would be obtainable with the human eye does not appear. If the same regenerating power is found to be general, a decided improvement may be possible in the treatment of certain injuries and diseases of the eye.

Sir John Lubbock has been fooling round the ants in a curious sort of way. He wanted to find out whether the ants recognized their fellows of the same nest by means of a password. His experiments lead him to the conclusion that there is no such thing as a password. He took pupæ from a nest and divided them, giving part to the nest of a neighbor of the same species and part to the nest of a stranger of the same species. When grown the returned of the pupæ from the neighbor were all welcomed. The returned from the stranger were none welcomed, all being attacked and driven. Sir John says that there must be some reason why 100,000 ants in the same nest, who cannot possibly know one another as individuals, are never at war, while should a stranger approach he is at once slain. He concludes that they recognize each other by some smell or other sense quite unknown to us.

A striking analogy between animal and plant life has been discovered by M. Van der Harrt, of Utrecht. When the common garden bean begins to sprout it is found to contain a ferment very closely resembling pepsin, which can be extracted by means of glycerine. This ferment has the power of changing albuminous into peptonic substances and starch into glucose. It is found exclusively in the cotyledons. In the case of flesh-eating plants all the steps of digestion seem to take place in the same manner as in animals.

Prof. Duges, of Mexico, writes to the Smithsonian Institution of a great flight of cow-birds (the common cow-bird, or molothrus pecoris). The flight was 12,000 yards in length, six yards wide, and a yard deep. He estimates the number contained in the flight at 10,000,000 birds. A few of the red-winged blackbirds were in the column.

Dr. Swan M. Burnett, of Washington, has recently made some examinations to ascertain whether the negro of the United States is affected with color-blindness to the same degree as the white race. He concluded that they are less liable to the defect.

Carlyle and Burns.

Men who were young a generation ago, and who then read Carlyle, have the great advantage of having been familiar, in their plastic and susceptible years, with one of the noblest pleas that one man of genius ever made for another, in Carlyle's essay upon Burns. They were countrymen, one born as the other died. Both had the deep, strong and melancholy nature which is nurtured by the misty coasts and solitary mountains and moors of Scotland. Both, too, had the immense vitality, the Berserker humor, the thorough manliness, of the Northern genius. As one reads the works of Carlyle, and marks his impatience of shams, and effeminacy, and equivocation, and conventional moralities, and hears his loud satiric laughter dying into a wail of pathos and entreaty, it is easy to feel that he saw the sound, hearty man he longs and prays for gone astray in Robert Burns. Such sweetness, and grace, and strength, and tenderness! Such soft, pathetic, penetrating melody, as if all the sadness of shaggy Scotland had found a voice! Such roistering, jovial humor, excessive, daring, unbridled!—a charm so universal that it drew men from their beds in taverns at midnight to listen, delighted until dawn. Here was a fullness of simple, native, massive manhood, not trained by the schools, not manipulated by the dancing-master and the professor of single-stick, overflowing bounds, shocking the proprieties, defying the rules, guilty of offenses that cannot be excused, and for which he paid the penalty. It fascinated and captivated the sad, grim, infinitely tender and manly and pure genius of Carlyle, and he has interpreted, as no other man has essayed to interpret, the wild, wistful, touching and tragical story of Robert Burns.—Harper's Magazine.

HOME DOCTOR.

REMEDY FOR A COUGH.—A friend tells us that a mixture of equal parts of Jamaica rum, honey and linseed oil, taken three times a day, a spoonful each time, is a most excellent medicine for a cough. In her own case, where the cough was brought on by an attack of pneumonia, she was entirely cured by its use.

TO PREPARE AN INVIGORATING BATH.—A teaspoonful or more of powdered borax thrown into the bath-tub while bathing will communicate a velvety softness to the water, and at the same time invigorate and rest the bather; persons troubled with nervousness or wakeful nights will find this kind of bath a great benefit.

CARE OF THE EYES.—When the eyes become inflamed from any cause, do not rub them at all—such irritation is dangerous—but bathe them in tepid milk and water; keep the bowels open by some gentle medicine, and eat little meat. The eyes are very sensitive to the state of the stomach. Avoid the glare of strong light.

RELIEVING CATARRH.—Inhale through the nostrils a strong solution of salt in water. I would advise as strong a solution as an ounce to the pint, though some will tolerate more. In this strength it is not painful, but acts as a tonic and astringent, relieving congestion, preventing the endosmose effect which would accompany the use of pure water or weaker solutions. But it is a mistake to suppose that salt water will cure all cases of catarrh. When the condition is one of chronic congestion simply, with acrid secretion, it may be sufficient; but in the worse forms, where there is a deep-seated inflammation with ulceration, more powerfully stringent, as well as stimulant, and even escharotic solutions are requisite to effect a cure. Some of the best of these are nitrate of silver, chlorate and permanganate of potash, sulphate of copper, sulphate and sulpho-carbolate of zinc, etc. When the douche does not seem to succeed, the spray from an atomizing-tube should be substituted.

BATHING.—Avoid bathing within two hours after meals, is the advice of the Royal Humane Society of England, or when exhausted by fatigue or from any other cause, or when the body is cooling after perspiration, and avoid bathing altogether in the open air, if, after being a short time in the water, there is a sense of chilliness, with numbness of the hands and feet, but bathe when the body is warm, provided no time is lost in getting into the water. Avoid chilling the body by sitting or standing undressed on the banks or in boats, after having been in the water, or remaining too long in the water, but leave the water immediately there is the slightest feeling of chilliness. The vigorous and strong may bathe early in the morning on an empty stomach, but the young and those who are weak had better bathe two or three hours after a meal; the best time for such is from two to three hours after breakfast. Those who are subject to attacks of giddiness or faintness, and who suffer from palpitations and other sense of discomfort at the heart, should not bathe without first consulting their medical adviser.

A HINT TO SUFFERERS FROM NEURALGIA.—Several evenings since I was attacked with a severe dental neuralgia. After resorting to friction, cold and hot applications, etc., without obtaining any relief, I lay upon my bed trusting that sleep might come and give me respite. Still the excruciating pain continued, and while I was suffering the "tortures of the doubly damned," undecided whether to arouse some tired druggist for a bottle of chloroform or chop my head off (with a decided preference, however, for the chloroform), I suddenly bethought me of what I read of an anæsthetic which we always carry with us. Thereupon I began to inflate my lungs to their utmost capacity, and then forcibly blew out all the air I could. Immediately the pain began to lessen, and, after a few repetitions of the process, it had entirely ceased, being displaced by a delightful tickling sensation in the gums, and furthermore I know not, for in less time than it takes to tell it I was sound asleep, awakening next morning delightfully refreshed and without a symptom of my ailment left. Hence, you see, I was not simply temporarily relieved, but entirely well again. I wish other sufferers would try this and report results.—Letter to Louisville Medical News.

Chastine Cox's Conviction.

The trial of Chastine Cox for the murder of Mrs. Hull was concluded this afternoon with the conviction of the prisoner. The defense attempted to prove only that no proof had been adduced that Mrs. Hull was dead on the morning when she was found, and that she might have died from fright or apoplexy. The jury retired at 5:18 o'clock, and it was considered a significant fact that they did not take their hats with them. Judge Cowing remained in his seat upon the bench, and the crowd in the court-room for the most part retained their places. Cox chatted and laughed with his counsel as if the whole thing was an excellent joke. As the time wore on and the jury did not return rumors of a disagreement began to be current. At 6:55, however, the jury returned and rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. The prisoner showed no more emotion or feeling than at any previous period of the trial. His counsel spoke to him, apparently reassuring him, for Cox smiled at the remark. Dist. Atty. Phelps then moved that sentence be pronounced, and Judge Cowing rose. "Chastine Cox," said he, "you have been convicted of murder in the first degree. What have you now to say why the punishment of death shall not be pronounced upon you according to law?"

Mr. Howe—He leaves it to me to speak for him. We have nothing to say to your Honor, for the reason that the verdict has been rendered. Of course your Honor has nothing left but to pass the sentence the law has prescribed. It will be for us to see whether our exceptions which we have taken are sustained by other tribunals. That is the only remedy we have.

Judge Cowing then, addressing Cox, expressed the hope that the levity depicted in his countenance in no way indicated his inward feeling. He urged the condemned man to base no hopes on the slender chance of pardon, but to spend the short time remaining to him in preparing for death. Cox was then sentenced to be hanged Aug. 29, between the hours of 9 a. m. and 4 p. m. During the sentence Cox showed the first sign of feeling that he had evinced during the trial. His under lip drooped, and his eyelids quivered. His face, too, grew a shade paler. A word from Mr. Howe apparently reassured him, and he resumed his old defiant air. He was then handcuffed to an officer and taken back to his cell.—New York paper.

A Criminal Cause Celebre.

At about 7 o'clock on the evening of Nov. 2, 1874, a lovely young woman Susan A. Hanson, sat with her mother, an elderly lady, in the kitchen of their home, in Brookfield Center. The curtains still remained up. The mother and daughter belonged to a much-respected family, and were just then cosily chatting and knitting by the fireside, when there came a thundering report, and, crashing through the window, a charge of buckshot, and the lovely young woman fell a ghastly corpse, without a struggle, at her mother's feet. The shrieks of the terrified mother awoke sleepers in the house and aroused the neighbors. Search was made far and near; public sentiment was at the fever-heat of righteous indignation; detectives were employed, and after a time Buzzell, an intelligent stone-cutter, owning and carrying on a good farm, was arrested for the cowardly murder, tried, acquitted and discharged. He was suspected because he was a gay deceiver, had courted the victim of the tragedy, Miss Hanson, and had suddenly deserted her and married another woman. He had made insinuations against her character, and she had attempted to establish her good reputation by a suit at law for breach of promise to marry, which was to be heard on the day after the murder, and Buzzell, the defendant, had expressed a wish that she were dead. However, he proved an alibi, and went forth to continue to live in the same community—a free, if not an unsuspected man. Subsequently, a young rascal named Cook, arrested for arson, confessed in detail that he killed Susan Hanson, and that Buzzell hired and assisted him to do it. Buzzell was rearrested. Then arose a legal question that greatly troubled the courts—could one who has been acquitted as a principal in a felony be convicted as an accessory in the same felony? The Judges held that he could, and Buzzell was again tried and was convicted chiefly on the testimony of the man Cook, who was discharged from custody for his valuable evidence. In the course of time Cook took a solemn oath that his statement that he was the one who held the gun and took part in the affair was wholly false, and that his testimony in court to that effect was also false in every respect, thus parading himself as an unmitigated liar and perjurer. His conflicting statements threw the public into a state of agitation, which was in no way allayed by the conviction of Messrs. Conway and Cowen, the principal detectives in the case, for conspiracy in another matter, and their affidavits that the Buzzell prosecution was also a "put-up job." Buzzell's counsel demanded a new trial, and the Supreme Court of the State, six Judges sitting, reviewed the case, satisfying themselves of the moral certainty of the prisoner's guilt, and decided that justice had been dealt him. He was accordingly hanged on the 10th of July. —Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

An Intractable Disease.

Notwithstanding the increased attention given, for the past year or two, to the prevention of the scarlet fever, it is doubtful whether anything has been discovered of real value in providing immunity against it. It is contagious, but the contagion disseminates itself slowly, and fastens itself only on those who are predisposed to it. Still, its tenacious vitality often sets all preventive measures at nought.

This dangerous disease has become fixed in our large cities, and in spite of the best efforts of our Boards of Health, readily becomes epidemic. Thus, last year, in New York, during July, August, September and October, it averaged thirty-nine cases a month. During November, it arose to ninety.

During December, January, February and March, it averaged over 192 a month. Says the Medical Record, our chief authority in this article, "This has occurred in spite of sanitary regulations, and we can only have the satisfaction of knowing that it would have been worse without them."

Belladonna has been longest relied on, but confidence in its efficacy is now in inverse proportion to a physician's experience. All the newer remedies, including those suggested by the germ-theory of disease, have been equally disappointing.

We have thus, for our main dependence, shut up to complete isolation of the patient, plenty of fresh air in the sick-room, and thorough disinfection. Greasing the body, and warm baths during convalescence, are a help, since they safely remove much of the scarf-skin, minute particles of which, inhaled by others, are a frequent, if not the most common, source of infection.

Noah's Family.

A good story is told by a teacher of one of the Sunday schools in the center of the city. A Sunday or two ago she asked her class of little girls who went into the ark with Noah. None of them seemed to know, but one little girl thought she must say something, and not knowing, used her natural-born right of guessing, and, to the astonishment of the teacher, replied, "His sisters and his cousins and his aunts."—Providence Journal.

The Scissors Grinder.

Is he really so handsome? said Eleanor May, incredulously.

"The handsomest man you ever saw in your life!" cried Olive Satterly.

She was sitting on the back door-step shelling peas, with a great cinnamon rose bush showering its pink petals down on her brown braids of hair, and her hazel eyes sparkled beneath their long lashes, while Maude, the beauty of the family, leaned out of the window, her pretty tresses screwed up in crimping papers, and a gingham wrapper buttoned carelessly at the throat, with no ornamental accessories in the way of collars, frills, or ribbon bows; for Maude had been to a party the night before, and had slept late, scolded her mother because the coffee was cold, and absolutely declined any interference with the household affairs that morning.

"Exactly like a corsair!' said Maude, suppressing a yawn. "Tall and dark, with such a great diamond on his little finger, and eyes like cherry wine. And he was so surprised to think that I recognized him through his disguise!'

"What costume did he assume?' asked Eleanor May, who, not having received an invitation to the fancy dress ball at Mrs. Pipington's, was naturally exceedingly inquisitive on the subject.

"A pirate,' said Maude, "with black velvet cap, you know, and scarlet sash and a cutlass. And he declared that he would disguise himself so completely the next time that I couldn't possibly identify him, and he wagered a box of kid gloves on the question.'

"I suppose he means at Lizzie Hooker's birthday party?' said Olive.

"Of course,' said Maude.

"I wish I could go,' said Olive, working diligently away at the peas, that dropped like emerald rain into the shining tin pan.

"Well, you can't,' replied Maude, shortly. "Mamma says she cannot afford two fancy dresses, and I'm the oldest.'

"Yes, I know,' said Olive, meekly.

"And Mr. Medlicote danced only once with you last night,' added Maude unable to repress her exultation, "and he waltzed with me three times, besides the German!'

Little Olive, looking slyly up at her sister, secretly wished that Providence had seen fit to make her also a beauty.

"I suppose,' said Miss May, curiously, "that he is very rich?'

"O, very!' nodded Maude.

And Olive's thoughts jumped at once to the idea of how beautiful her sister would look in the regulation orange blossoms and white tulle.

"I wonder if I ever shall be married?' pondered Olive, shelling peas faster than ever.

"Who's that coming around the corner of the house!' cried Maude, with some asperity, "one of those everlasting peddlers again? Oh, it's only a scissors grinder.'

"And very fortunate, too,' said Mrs. Satterly, a pale, over-worked little woman, with light hair and faded complexion; "for my shears are so bad I can't cut with 'em. And there's the embroidery scissors, and a pair that belongs to the mending basket, and—'

"How much do you ask a pair?' demanded Maud, sailing out upon the garden path, with her pretty feet thrust into slipshod slippers, soiled wrapper torn down one side, and her hair in the loose, tangled curls which had hung like coiled gold down her neck the night before.

The man—a swart-browned, stooping foreigner—set his wheel upon the grass, bowed low, with a smile which disclosed teeth gleaming whitely through his thick, bushy beard, and held up six fingers in pantomimic gesture.

'That's too much,' said Maude.

"He can't understand you,' said Eleanor, laughing.

Miss Satterly shook her head, stamped the little untidy foot, held up six pairs of scissors in various stages of dilapidation, and displayed a silver quarter of a dollar.

The scissors-grinder smiled again, and made an obeisance nearly to the ground, and assented to the bargain with numerous nods and signs.

"Isn't he funny?' said Eleanor.

"Horrid velveteen coated fellow!' said Maude. "To think he belongs to the same humanity with my divine Algernon!'

"He looks tired and thirsty,' said gentle-hearted Olive. "I've a great mind to offer him a cool drink.'

"You'll do no such thing,' said Maude, imperiously. "I'll have no sister of mine running to wait on scissors-grinders! Mamma, is that chocolate ready yet?'

"Chocolate?' repeated poor Mrs. Satterly, with a conscience-stricken air. "I declare, Maude, I forgot all about it. But I'll run directly and set it boiling.'

Maude Satterly crimsoned to the very temples.

"Forgot!' repeated she. "You're always forgetting! I never saw any one like you in my life! No, I won't have it now. If you can't prepare my chocolate when I want it, you shan't prepare it at all. I should think you might have thought of it, Olive.'

"I am very sorry, Maude,' began Olive, apologetically; "for all that, I think you ought not to speak so crossly to mamma.'

"Hold your tongue,' said Maude, stamping her foot again. "Do you suppose I am going to be tutored by you? I shall speak as I please, and so I give you fair warning. Dear me, how that scissors-grinder's buzzing makes my head ache!'

And she swept into the house like a fair fury.

When Olive came in, a few minutes afterward, with six pairs of scissors all sharpened and burnished up to a scientific state of brilliancy, her sister was lying on the sofa, with her face turned toward the wall and her eyes resolutely closed.

"Oh, dear me!' thought Olive, "I'm afraid she's in one of her regular sulking fits that lasts twenty-four hours at a time.'

And she took advantage of circumstances to pour out a goblet of ice-water and offered it surreptitiously to the swarthy Italian, when she carried out the silver quarter that he had so hardly earned.

He bowed low once more, after the Oriental fashion, drank it eagerly, and astonished Olive very much by raising her hand to his lips, as he uttered the words "Buon giorno signorina!" and departed.

"I suppose it's his foreign way,' said Olive, turning very rosy.

"It's lucky for you that Maude didn't see him,' laughed Eleanor May.

"Oh, Eleanor, don't tell her!' said Olive, blushing deeper than ever.

"Of course I shan't,' said Eleanor.

* * * *

"Well, what luck?' demanded Guy Mariner, as he sat smoking at his window that evening, and hailed with acclamation the approach of Algernon Medlicote.

"I've won my wager.'

"No!'

"But, by the shades of Mohammed, I have!' assented Medlicote, sitting down where the cool breeze of twilight could fan his brow.

"How did you manage?'

"I disguised myself as a scissors-grinder and put the family shears in perfect order.'

"Did they suspect—the young ladies, I mean.'

"Not in the least.'

"And how does the fair one with the 'golden locks' appear in the seclusion of her own home?'

'Like a slovenly virago,' said he. "Had it been anything else than the testimony of my own eyes I couldn't have believed it. But Olive—little brown eyed Olive—she is a jewel of the first water.'

"So you have transferred your allegiance from one sister to another?' laughed Mariner. "But isn't it rather hard for the divine Maude to lose both her water and her lover at the same time?'

"It's a rosebud mouth,' said Medlicote, gravely shaking his head, "but the sharp words spoiled its perfect Cupid's bow; the hair was like spun gold, but crimping papers are not becoming to the female face. And, upon the whole, Mariner, I think I have reason to be grateful for ever and ever to the scissors-grinding fraternity.'

And beautiful Maude Satterly could not understand why it was that Algernon Medlicote proposed to little brown-eyed Olive instead of her.

"Everybody thought he was devoted to me,' said she disconsolately.

"Perhaps he changed his mind,' said Eleanor.

Of course Mr. Medlicote confessed the episode of scissors-grinding to his blushing and happy little wife after their marriage—well regulated husbands never do keep anything from their wives—but Maude never suspected. For what says the old adage?

"Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

Wheat Straw Lumber.

A gentleman of Bushnell, Ill., recently exhibited some samples of lumber that have attracted much attention among the lumbermen.

To make hard wood lumber of common wheat straw, with all effects of polish and finish which is obtainable on the hardest of black walnut and mahogany, at as little cost as clear pine lumber can be made up for, is the claim of the inventor, and the samples which he produces would go far toward verifying his claims.

The process is as follows: He takes ordinary straw board—such as is usually manufactured at any paper mill used for the purpose. As many sheets are taken as are required to make the tickness of lumber desired. These sheets are passed through a chemical solution which thoroughly softens up the fibre and completely saturates it. The whole is then passed through a succession of rollers, dried and hardened during the passage, as well as polished, and then comes out of the other end of the machine, hard, dry lumber, ready for use. The inventor claims that the chemical properties, hardening in the fibre, entirely prevents water soaking, and renders the lumber combustible only in a very hot fire. The hardened finish on the outside also makes it impervious to water.

The samples on exhibition could hardly be told from hard-wood lumber, and in sawing it the difference could not be detected.

Paste It In Your Hat.

A prominent physician gives some excellent points of advice in regard to the treatment and prevention of sunstroke, which certainly can not fail amiss of some attention among those who value their life and health. It is a well-known fact that sunstroke is caused by extraordinary heat, and is more fatal when the atmosphere is dense and damp. The third and fourth day of a heated period are more apt to cause sunstroke than the first. Sleeplessness, irritability, excitement, unhealthy bedrooms, general debility, and the excessive use of stimulants are the primary causes of sunstroke. The rays of the sun are most dangerous during the hours of 11 in the forenoon and 4 in the afternoon. Thin and light clothes should be worn on hot days, and the bedrooms should be kept as cool as possible. Persons working in heated rooms should see that they are well ventilated, so that they may be constantly supplied with a current of fresh air. If working in the sun, precaution should be taken with the head covering; a light straw hat is the best to wear. Black felt hats should not be worn, as they absorb the rays of the sun, and allow no air on the top of the head. A wet cloth or a green leaf will prove very serviceable, by being placed on the head, and kept wet and cool. Do not check perspiration, but drink as much pure water as your system requires, because the pearls of sweat which emerges from the skin prevent the body from being overheated. If possible, the person working in the sun should provide himself with ample shade, and not work if very tired. If you are attacked with a diziness, headache or languid feeling, cease your work at once, seat yourself at a cool and shady place, and cover the head with a wet cloth, changing it from time to time, and pour water over the neck and back.

If a person is overcome with the heat, send for a physician immediately, and in the mean time give him cool drinks of water, tea or coffee. If the skin is of a hot and dry texture, sponge the same with cold water, and keep pieces of ice, covered with a towel, around his head. If ice cannot be procured at once, place a wet cloth on the head and pour on water—the more the better. If the patient looks pale and weak, the pulse acting slightly, let him inhale hartshorn and give him a spoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia, diluted in two teaspoonfuls of water, with a few grains of sugar.

No cases of sunstroke have as yet been reported, and if persons will take the care which they should, there will be few accidents of that kind to chronicle. A hot spell may visit us very suddenly, and those persons who have given the often-told precautions little heed are generally found among those prostrated by the heat.

When to Skim Milk.

The New England Farmer replies to the inquiries of a correspondent, when is the proper time to skim milk, and whether it is always desireable to remove the cream while the milk is sweet. Now these are difficult questions to answer in a few words, partly because there are so many other conditions connected with butter making, all of which may have an important bearing on the question. Under certain conditions we would prefer to have cream sour when taken from the milk, or certainly very soon afterward. There is, probably, no month in the year when dairymen are so much annoyed by bad behavior in cream as in November, and at a time, too, when the milk may be kept an indefinite length of time without souring. We might answer that, when milk inclines to keep sweet for a long time, we would prefer to have the conditions changed so that it should sour, and when it sours too readily, we would endeavor to keep it sweet. In July and August, milk set in open pans without ice, and in a warm room, inclines to sour too soon, before the cream has time to rise completely. At this time we should change the conditions so that is shall keep sweet longer. In cold weather, the cream rises so slowly that it often becomes bitter in the pans. Here more heat is wanted, even though it tends to sour the milk. So, we would say, in cold weahter keep milk where it will tend to grow sour in forty eight hours, and in hot weather keep it from souring in less than twenty-four hours.

We prefer to have milk that is set in open pans ready to skim in from twenty four to thirty-six hours, the year round, and just ready to sour when the cream is removed, but not really sour, nor thick, like curdled milk. We prefer to have cream slightly acid when it goes into the churn, summer and winter, because it usually comes to butter more rapidly, while the quality is equally good as from perfect sweet cream. Milk that has become so sour as to curdle and remain in insoluble flakes, will be caught in the butter in the form of white specks, much to its injury, both in flavor and keeping qualities. Simple souring, in its early stages, is not injurious to cream for making good butter.

FLOWERS.

Gather Them When You Can.

[Forney's Progress.]

Flowers by the wayside are like opportunities neglected; we pass them by, without noticing them, although they often beckon to us with their fragrance and beauty. I have three or four women in my memory to illustrate my thought; one who was untaught by her opportunities; the others who cultured and added to them; and the last, who began by gathering the weeds of poverty, then secured a drop of professional success, and finally left to her country and her sex the perfume of a virtuous name and the aroma of a sweet benevolence blended with patriotism.

Eugenie, the childless widow at Chiselhurst, who became empress of France by accident, had a thousand opportunities to become illustrious; but she lost them all, because neglecting the flowers by the wayside, that taught her of her early poverty and obscurity. She devoted herself to politics, became an active ally to a few reckless partisans of the Church of Rome, and after the death of her husband allowed herself to be absorbed in an attempt to make a party for her son as the future ruler of France, and so sent him forth to die at the hands of the savages of South Africa, whither he went to make for himself a military fame.

How much more womanly and Christian-like if she had followed the example ot Anna Dickinson, of Philadelphia, or Mrs. Willard of Chicago, both poor girls at the start, and now among the empresses of American intellect, because they gathered the flowers by the way, improved their many opportunities, and now, by self-reliance, culture, unparalleled courage, having made themselves abundantly happy and prosperous; and are held up as examples for their own sex. A million of women will strive to emulate their career, while only silly coquettes will be attracted by the follies of the disappointed Eugenie.

Flowers by the wayside are sometimes so mingled with the weeds that it requires a sharp eye to pick them out. They seemed to be all weeds which first bloomed for Charlotte Cushman, but she looked well and discerned the roses near at hand, hidden, it is true, beyond the sharp thorns of poverty and disappointment, but waiting for her to pluck them. Once she had them almost in her grasp, but she only shook the bush, and the leaves fell with her tears to the ground. That was when her voice promised her fame and fortune; when the bright career of a prima donna seemed to open for her, and in its wealth and luxury silence the memories of the theater ballet. It needed a brave spirit to look further, but Charlotte Cushman was brave and proud even in her failure, and she simply stepped a little aside, courageously fought for her flowers by the wayside, and carried them off in triumph. Not only did she lose no opportunity, she made opportunity. Where was the chance for the ugly girl by the side of her handsome sister, who was regarded as the favorite child of fate? Yet today, of the thousands who honor the name of Charlotte Cushman, not a hundred know that the beautiful Susan ever existed, and that the two girls stepped together upon the first round of the ladder. Charlotte lives though dead, herself the fairest flower of her time in her profession, blessed for her charity and her grand womanhood. Of Susan the record say nothing, save that she married.

Something Worth Knowing.

Every little while we read in the papers of some one who has stuck a rusty nail in his foot, or knee, or hand, or some other portion of his body, and that lock-jaw resulted therefrom, of which the patient died. If every person was aware of a perfect remedy for all such wounds, and would apply it, then all such reports must cease. But, although we can give the remedy we can not enforce its application. Some will not employ it because they think it is too simple; others will have no faith in it when they read it; while others think such a wound of small account and not worth fussing over, until it is too late to do any good. Yet all such wounds can be healed without the fatal consequences which follow them. The remedy is simple, almost always on hand, and can be applied by any one, and what is better, it is infallible. It is simply to smoke the wound, or any bruise or wound that is inflammed, with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take the pain out of the worst wound, repeated two or three times, it will allay the worst case of inflammation arising from a wound. People may sneer at the "old man's remedy" as much as they please, but when they are afflicted, just let them try it. It has saved many lives and much pain, and is worthy of being printed in letters of gold and put in every home.

Ohio the Mother of Officeholders.

The supreme court of the District of Columbia consists of six judges. Until recently, five composed a full bench. The sixth was added to compensate for the inefficiency of Judge Humphreys, who died a few weeks ago. David K. Carter, formerly a member of congress from Ohio, and afterward minister to Bolivia, is chief justice. The fraudulent president has just filled the vacancy caused by Humphreys' death by the appointment of Charles P. James of Ohio, one of his special friends and pets, who has been about Washington for some years past. Ohio thus gets two judges—if James should be confirmed—in a court of six, while the District of Columbia, with all her interests at stake, has but one.

The supreme court of the United States is composed of nine Judges, two of whom, Mr. Chief Justice Waite and Mr. Justice Swayne, are from Ohio. The cluster of contiguous states, namely, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kentucky, is represented by six of the nine judges. New England has one, the Pacific coast has one, and the northwest has one. The south proper has no representative, though Mr. Harlan, who was appointed as a reward for his services on the Louisiana commission to an Ohio man, and who succeeded David Davis, as night succeeds day, was claimed to be a southern appointment.

The fraudulent president, the secretary of the treasury, the chief justice of the United States, the general and lieutenant general of the army, and the vice-admiral of the navy all hail from Ohio. The executive, the purse, the sword, and the head of the judiciary are thus united in a single state. The real Ohio idea is to get and to hold office.

Piute Barbarity.

[Silver Reef Miner.]

It is well known that some of the Indian tribes of America have a habit of killing horses when their chiefs and medicine men die; and in some instances the departing braves' wives have been dispatched to bear them company to the happy hunting-grounds. When the celebrated Ute chief, Walker, died in the northern part of the Territory, a good many years ago, a whole band of horses were slain by his warriors; but heretofore no one had supposed that the Indians of this section had interest enough in the future life to prepare an escort for their departing braves. The death of a buck near Toquerville a short time ago showed that the old chief who begs biscuits at that settlement is blooded. He forthwith decided to kill a squaw to accompany his favorite warrior, but the squaw, getting a hint of her intended funeral, hid herself so effectually that no clew could be got of her whereabout. As the time allowed for the sacrifice was rapidly passing, the old chief, in order not to be defeated, selected a three-year-old papoose, which he took from its mother, and buried in the grave of the deceased. The head of the child was left projecting above the ground, so that it could breathe, but he allowed no one to go near it, till Bishop Bringhurst, discovering the commotion in the tribe, traced out the cause and saved the life of the child after it had been in the situation described two or three days. The mother of the child was afraid to tell what had happened, though she was observed to be grief-stricken. The Toquerville people thought seriously of burying the old Lamanite with his head the other way, but he insisted that the religion of the Piutes required him to do what he had done.

Punished Enough.

Klein, a German, and Nichols, an Englishman, were arraigned in Essex Market court yesterday on a charge of disorderly conduct.

"You are fined $10 each," said the justice.

Klein, whose face was swollen and his clothes torn, asked, "You vas fine me dot much?"

"Yes, sir."

"Vell, shudge, you vas gruel. Ef I don't vas afraid dot you got yourself angry, I would say dot you wos tamned gruel. But I don't vas said it."

"You had better not, Klein. But why am I cruel?"

"Vell, because dot fight vas got der pest ov me. Doze eyes vas plackened, dot nose swolled, doze Sunday clothes all rags. Vas I not done by so much already, but you vas heap dot injury on top mit doze insults and fine me too?"

The interpreter said he couldn't translate the sentence, and Klein was conveyed away.

Nothing Mean About Democrats.

[Terrell (Texas) Star.]

A prominent greenbacker—that is, prominent among greenbackers—says, "Both the old parties are played out—the country demands a change. If the devil had his dues democrats and republicans would be scarce indeed." Of course they would be scarce, as most of them would be at hell's iron grates handing water to thirsting greenbackers. Nothing mean about democrats.

Duty as Rose Terry Cooke Sees It.

Some of you appear to doubt if you can decide for yourselves what your vocation in life is. Do not hurry. "Do the duty that lies nearest thee: the rest will follow." Learn to do the simplest, commonest things; these all fit you for the future. And do not, above all, fall into that silly, childish can't of hating "duty," and doing things for "love." It is the fatal weakness these days that love is exalted, not merely above but in place of all other virtues; that self-denial, self-control, courage, endurance, are all set aside for the sake of love, which is perverted to mean indolence and self-indulgence. This is not the love of the Bible, but a counterfeit weakness, out of which spring evils innumerable, even in the very bosom of our homes and churches. Duty is the very breath of God and the outcome of love to him, as surely as warmth is born of fire. Adhere to this, and the path of life will unfold before you and the voice of the Lord say to your souls: "This is the way; walk ye in it. And by duty I do not mean great action, suffering, or sacrifice, but the petty details of daily life; patience with noisy, quarrelsome, perverse children; obedience to parents; devotion to the comfort and pleasure of those about you; attention to your own health, temper and appearance; a study of economy and neatness in the household; and, when the in-doors duty is done, there remains always some lonely person to visit and cheer, some kindly, neighborly act to perform; some church-work to help in. Be faithful over these few things, Mary Ann, and the work of your life will find you out in good time and welcome you.

A Woman's Trick.

(Denver News.)

It used to be said in the early times in Denver, when the free and easy life of pioneer days was thought a necessity, that ladies sometimes masqueraded in male attire—especially at night—just to see what it was that detained their husbands down town so late. One in particular had a very attractive husband, and, woman-like, she was very fond of him. It seemed to her that so precious a possession should be guarded zealously, and she did her best to keep him in view. But his incomings and outgoings were frequent. Like the Irishman's flea, he was anywhere but at the place at which he was expected to be found. Nevertheless she buckled bravely down to her mission, and few were his escapades that failed to come under her personal observation. One night she traced him to a dance-hall, and just as he was about leading one of the reigning belles of the place to form a set in a cotillion a handsomely dressed boy interposed between them.

"I beg your pardon, sir, but I have a weakness for this girl myself," remark the youth, "and with your leave I'll have a dance with her."

Before the astonished gentleman could gather his senses about him the youth and girl were whirling away in the mazes of the dance. It was the look and tone of the intruder which had dumfounded him. He had seen that face somewhere, and the voice was as familiar to him as spring violets.

"He looks to be every inch a boy, and yet I'll swear it's a woman," he muttered, doubtfully.

In a few moments the dance was over, and the boy came close to him.

"Arent you tired?" he inquired.

"Well, yes," replied the citizen, "a little!"

"Well let's go home," suggested the youth.

"Go—home!" interposed the citizen in tones long drawn out, while a faint inkling of the youth's identity began to dawn upon him. Then he stopped and peered wistfully into the face wreathed with smiles.

"Will you go home?" the boy again inquired.

It was hardly necessary to have made the inquiry. It was evident that the citizen had begun to comprehend the situation. But he heaved a sigh as he replied cordially:

"I think I will."

It was his last night out. The places that knew him once knew him no more. Pleasures taken under such circumstances had ceased to be pleasing. The gentleman now is one of the pillars of society.

The Kind of Wind they have out West.

(Reno (Nev.) Gazette)

During the high wind which prevailed yesterday morning, J. Moorman Cutter started out with a half-gallon of whisky to take to his sick mother, who lives out on Virginia street. He was found some hours afterward lying behind a fence on the hill in an inarticulate condition. Later in the day he recovered sufficiently to explain the catastrophe which had overtaken him. He said that he stopped around a corner to fix a cork in the jug, and while he was taking the measure of the orifice of the jug a tremendous zephyr came down on him like a whirlwind. It sucked the liquor clean out of the jug, blew it down his throat and turned the jug inside out. He could remember nothing more of the occurrence. No traces of any jug or liquor were noticed where Cutter was picked up. They had both been spirited away.

Utilizing the Exodus.

[Baltimore Sun Washington Special.]

It seems certain that the republican politicians intend utilizing the exodus for political purposes. The scheme is to use the greater portion of the funds raised by the campaign committee here to the colonizing of negro immigrants in Ohio and Indiana this autumn, so that they will be able to vote at the next presidential election. They think they can settle a sufficient number of negroes in the two states named to make them safely republican. They believe it is the best use the campaign funds can be put to. The Grant men are particularly interested in the scheme, and as it is their boast that their candidate is the only one named on their side who can not only match Tilden in the way of raising money for a campaign, but can go him many dollars better, the chances for success are good if money will accomplish what they desire.

Old Jeff's Luck.

Much has been said, of late, concerning the will of Mrs. Dorsey, of Miss., in which all her property is bequeathed to Jeff Davis. The following is a full text of the will, as probated last week.

BEAUVOIR, HARRISON COUNTY, MISS.,
January 4, 1878.

I, Sarah Anne Dorsey, of Tensas parish, La., being aware of the uncertainty of life, and being now in sound health of mind and body, do make this my last will and testament, which I write, sign and seal with my own hand, in the presence of three competent witnesses, as I possess property in the states of Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas. I owe no obligation of any sort whatever to any relative of my own; I have done all I could for them during my life. I, therefore, give and bequeath all my property, real, personal and mixed, wherever located and situated, wholly and entirely without hindrance or qualification, to my most honored and esteemed friend, Jefferson Davis, ex-president of the confederate states, for his own sole use and benefit, in fee simple, forever; and I hereby constitute him my sole heir, executor and administrator. If Jefferson Davis should not survive me, I give all that I have bequeathed him to his youngest daughter Varina. I do not intend to share in the ingratitude of my country toward the man who is in my eyes the highest and noblest in existence.

In testimony whereof I sign this will, written with my own hand, in the presence of W. L. Walthall, F. S. Hewes and John C. Craig, subscribing witnesses, resident in Harrison county, Miss.

SARAH ANNE DORSEY.

An Improved "Maud Muller."

Doubtless a majority of the readers of Whittier's "Maud Muller" have wished that the poem had ended with the marriage of the dignified judge to the fair hay-raker. An incident in the life of the eccentric Judge Breckenridge, of Pittsburg, would have justified such a pleasing finale to the touching ballad. The judge, who was an independent sort of a man, much given to having his own way, rode up, one day, to a tavern in a mountainous district in Pennsylvania. A handsome girl appeared to offer her services as hostler. She mounted the horse, rode him off to a spring, and in returning jumped him over a five-barred gate. The judge looked on in admiration. The girl pleased him, and he made inquiries about her. She proved to be the landlord's daughter, and to be so worthy that the judge resolved that she should be Mrs. Breckenridge. He proposed and was accepted. But there was an obstacle to immediate marriage. The girl was a diamond, but a rough one, and needed polish and setting before she could appear in the society in which her intended husband moved. The judge took her to a lady in Philadelphia, the head of a fashionable school for girls. "What will you have her taught?" asked the lady after the judge had explained who was his charge and for what purpose he desired her education. "Madam, dress and address." "Sir, it shall be done." And it was; and that so effectually that Mrs. Breckenridge was noted as an elegant and accomplished lady.

Study to Have Ideas.

[Scientific American.]

A suggestive story is told of the late Joseph Harrison, of Philadelphia, inventor of the sectional boiler for which the academy of art and science awarded him the Rumford medal, and widely known as the partner of Winans in Russian railway contracts. He was climbing the Gemmi, in Switzerland, accompanied by a young man, and the conversation fell on the younger's chances of rising in the world should he embrace the profession of mechanical engineer. Mr. Harrison favored the idea, saying that this was the age of invention and improvement, that machinery was constantly being applied to new uses, and that he who would make it a study and master it in all its forms would never lack for remunerative employment. "But I have no skill in drawing," objected the young man. "Neither have I," said Harrison, "I never had time to learn. But I have always found that if I had an idea I could express it on a shingle with a piece of chalk, and let a draughtsman work it out handsomely and according to rule. And I've generally had ideas enough to keep three or four draughtsmen busy. You can always hire draughtsmen, but you can't hire ideas. Study to have ideas, my boy." It may be added that Mr. Harrison's success was due not to scholarship advantages, but to native capacity and personal effort.

It is a significant circumstance, and one that furnishes the basis for the severest criticism of the current methods of academic instruction, that men, who, like Mr. Harrison, have attained signal eminence for originality of thought, have rely been men of much schooling. While knowledge and skill are both highly desirable, they are still of second rank, and it is possible to acquire them at too great a cost. If a man has ideas—original, individual, creative ideas—he can usually hire skill and buy knowledge. They are essential elements of education. But they should be gained by processes which make them the tools, not the end of culture. The man should be the master, not the slave of his learning; and whether he is the one or the other depends very largely on the way his knowledge has been gained. And it is better to be the master of a little knowledge, with capacity to use it creatively, than to be the unproductive carrier of all the learning in the libraries. Our young readers whose scholastic advantages, so called, have been few, may well take the lesson to heart. Study to have ideas; life will give no end of opportunities for using them.

The Stinging Tree.

Though the tropical shrubs of Queensland are very luxuriant and beautiful, they are not without their dangerous drawbacks, for there is one plant growing in them that is really deadly in its effects—that is to say, deadly in the same way that one would apply the term to fire, as if a certain proportion of one's body is burned by the stinging tree, death would be the result. It would be as safe to pass through fire as to fall into one of these trees. They are found growing from two to three inches high to ten or fifteen feet; in the old ones the stem is whitish, and red berries usually grow on top. It emits a peculiar and disagreeable smell, but is best known by its leaf, which is nearly round, having a point on the top, and is jagged all around the edge like the nettle. All the leaves are large—some larger than a saucer. "Sometimes," says a traveler, "while shooting turkeys in the scrubs, I have entirely forgotten the stinging tree till warned of it close proximity by its smell, and have then found myself in a little forest of them. I was only once stung, and that very light. Its effects are very curious; it leaves no mark, but the pain is maddening; for months after, the part when touched is tender, in rainy weather, or when it gets wet in washing, etc. I have seen a man who treats ordinary pain lightly roll on the ground in agony after being stung; and I have known a horse so completely mad after getting into a grove of the trees that he rushed open-mouthed at every one who approached him, and had to be shot in the scrub. Dogs, when stung, will rush about, whining piteously, biting pieces from the affected part. The small stinging trees, a few inches high, are as dangerous as any, being so hard to see, and seriously imperilling one's ankles. The scrub is usually found growing among palm trees."

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A HORRIBLE murder was committed at Ellington, Chautauqua county, N. Y., a few days ago. During the temporary absence from home of Mr. Charles Crosly, a wealthy farmer, some unknown parties, supposed to be vagrant tramps, entered the house, choked Mrs. Crosly to death and robbed her of $30. Mr. Crosly, returning home before the villains had gotten away, was assailed, shot and almost beaten to death. Two tramps were arrested on suspicion of being the authors of the crime.

PITTSBURGH dispatches give particulars of a terrific rain-storm in the oil regions of Pennsylvania. The oil-towns of Petrolia and Karns suffered terribly. Twenty-five houses in the former place were swept away and destroyed, and the line of railroad between Parker and Karns City was submerged, bridges washed out, culverts destroyed, and the road ruined in many places. The people of that section in many instances barely escaped with their lives. The rainfall up the Monongahela valley and along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which skirts the Youghiogeny, was the heaviest known for years. Houses, fences, outbuildings, lumber, and other property were swept away, and many of the coal mines flooded. The miners in some of them narrowly escaped drowning. At Schroder's mine, near Elizabeth, the men waded out through water to their chins. The damage to growing crops has been very great, but any approximation of the sum is beyond computation. At Irwin's station the rainfall is reported to have reached seven inches, and the Youghioghony Branch railroad was damaged in several places, the force of the water being so great as to break the steel rails.

THE decision of the lower courts in the case of Cove Bennett and Mrs. Smith, found guilty of murdering the latter's husband, has been reversed by the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals. The condemned pair will, therefore, have another trial.

D. M. BENNETT, a printer and publisher, who was convicted in New York of sending obscene publications through the mails, has been taken to the Albany penitentiary. President Hayes refused to pardon him....Prescott G. Pillsbury, the cashier of the Lawrence (Mass.) National Bank, is a defaulter to the amount of $64,000.... The discovery of enormous deposits of iron ore of the best quality among the farms on the Ohio river about eight miles from Pittsburgh has caused a big excitement in that region. One farmer leased a five-acre piece to the prospectors for $3,000, and another refused $10,000 for the use of twenty acres. Land has suddenly risen to fabulous prices, and an important addition to the wealth of the region will be the result.

A DISTRESSING accident, resulting in the drowning of five ladies, happened at Clayton, N. Y., the other day. Two steam yachts, lashed together, and containing a pleasure party, started out for Kingston, Ont. They had not proceeded more than twenty rods from the dock when the head-lashing loosed, and one of the yachts capsized and sunk, drowning Mrs. Persells, of Binghamton; Mrs. Sarah Bostwick, Mrs. and Miss Berkelem, of Kirkwood, N. Y., and Miss Hattie Pollock, of New York city....Martin Brady, a veteran of the war of 1812, and one of the oldest type-setters in New York city, died last week. Six of his comrades in the war of 1812 attended the funeral....At New Brunswick, N. J., a rowboat containing a pleasure party of five persons was run into by the schooner Hayes in the Raritan river, capsizing it, and drowning two ladies, Mrs. John Dunnigan and Miss Kate Horan.

THE WEST.

IN a pacing-race over the Chicago Jockey Club course, the other day, Sleepy Tom, a blind horse, made the fastest time on record, 2:12¼.

A SHOCKING disaster occurred on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad near Waukegan, Ill., on the evening of July 26. A gravel train had been engaged unloading dirt north of Lake Forest, and ran close to the time of the Milwaukee passenger which leaves Chicago at 5 o'clock. The conductor of the train, Thos. Halligan, waited until the last minute, and then ordered the train to Waukegan. On the way to this place, on the curve perhaps half a mile south, the engineer saw a cow lying directly across the track, but only too late, and as the ten flat cars which preceded the engine struck the obstacle they were thrown from the track and piled into a huge confusion of debris on both sides of the track. The engineer, Frank Drew, had reversed the engine and jumped for his life. There were nineteen men on the train. Some were thrown in one direction and some in another. Those who sought to save themselves by clinging to the cars were only to be crushed and mangled by being thrown underneath the wheels or cars. The mangled remains of some lay underneath the huge pile, and could only be removed from their resting place by the use of huge jacks. Here one could find a leg severed from the body; in another place an arm; and still in another location could be found a corpse beyond recognition. The dead and wounded were conveyed to the depot, where it was found that Anthony Joyce, section boss, John Dugan and Patrick Conners, workmen, were among the dead. Michael Sheridan died within an hour. Among the wounded are Marks Malloy, badly injured about the spine; Austin Dugan, internal injuries and fracture of the skull; Thomas McNulty, internal injuries and fracture of the hip; Henry Burns, fracture of the leg and spine injured; Thomas Halligan, of Milwaukee, double fracture of the leg and internal injuries; Patrick Mulligan, slight scald injuries; a German named Grams, bad scalp wounds.

CROP reports: Intelligence received at St. Paul from two-thirds of the counties in Minnesota pierced by railroads shows the wheat harvest to be progressing rapidly and under the most favorable circumstances. Oats and corn never looked better, and both promise a better yield than ever before, especially the latter. From reports received at Leavenworth from all parts of Kansas, it is evident the corn crop of this year will be the largest ever known, and will be simply immense. The only question in regard to this crop will be what to do with it, as the supply is very great. The wheat crop of this year, too, will be larger than was expected. Reports received at Milwaukee from nearly all points on the railroads north and west in the wheat-growing region predict a perfect harvest and an unusually large crop. On the line of the Northern Pacific at least twenty-five bushels of splendid wheat to the acre is expected. The lowest estimate for Southern Minnesota is ten bushels to the acre. The reports are nearly all positive to the effect of a large yield and good quality. Wheat is considered entirely out of danger. Reports from the interior of Wisconsin are very favorable.

JOHN KRANZ, of East Farmington, Polk county, Wis., drove into a lake with six children in his wagon to water his horses. The horses, becoming frightened, ran into deep water, the wagon was upset, and Kranz and five of the children were drowned. One boy escaped by swimming. The eldest child was a girl of 17.... A Dubuque dispatch says: "A disease akin to cholera is ravaging Center Point, Linn county, this State. Fully twenty persons have died from its effects during the past thirteen days, and an equal number are prostrated by it. The disease is also raging in Walker, a little town seven miles from Center Point, several deaths having occurred there. An order for forty coffins was received from Center Point to-day by a Dubuque undertaker. The physicians at Center Point are worn out, and residents are fleeing from the place."

DISPATCHES from Fort Peck report that Gen. Miles has imprisoned there a number of half-breeds who have been selling arms and ammunition to hostile Indians.

POTTER PALMER, proprietor of the Palmer House, Chicago, has telegraphed to President Langstaff, of the Howard Association, Memphis, authorizing him to draw on Mr. Palmer for $25 monthly until further notice for the relief of the needy sufferers in Memphis.

GEN. TERRY, commanding the Military Department of Dakota, has received dispatches from Gen. Miles dated, "Camp on Rock creek, eighteen miles south of the boundary," saying Sitting Bull's band of Sioux fled northward to Wood mountain, leaving their property scattered along the line of route for fifty miles. The Sioux are estimated to number 5,000, with 2,000 fighting men. Gen. Miles says he believes he has force enough to deal with all the Indians Sitting Bull can gather.

A TERRIBLE calamity occurred a few nights ago on Goguac lake, near Battle Creek, Mich., which suddenly transformed that pleasant resort into a place of mourning, and almost desolation. The pleasure steamer Lew Clark took fire and was burned; also the dwelling of James Cleveland and three boat-houses. Mrs. Cleveland and her infant perished in the flames, and two other children were so badly injured that they are not expected to live. Mr. Cleveland saved his own and one of his children's lives by jumping with it from the second story of his burning house into the lake. The fire originated in the steamer's engine-room.

THE SOUTH.

THE number of new cases of yellow fever reported to the Memphis Board of Health on July 25 was eleven; number of deaths, ten. A telegram from Memphis on that date says: "The weather continues warm and fair, and there is little change in the deep gloom and death-like stillness that has prevailed in this community for the last day or two. With the exception of the little bustle attending the departing of steamers and the few persons quietly making their way to the Memphis and Charleston depot, now the only outlet left open, there is but little evidence of life to be seen. The drug clerks, doctors, telegraphers and undertakers alone are kept busy. The fever, at first confined to the Jones avenue and Clay street neighborhood, is now gradually spreading to all parts of the city, and it is only a question of material to work upon for it to appear in any unexpected spot." Of 16,000 people remaining in that city, over 12,000 are colored. The colored people are not in favor of the proposed camp scheme, not liking the idea of being removed from the city. A Cincinnati dispatch says: "Passengers on steamers from Memphis speak of the quarantine along the route as the most rigid ever heard of. The people are wild in their determination to keep out Yellow Jack. At Hickman, Ky., a passenger on the Vint Shirkle, from Memphis, being forbidden to land, gave the officers the slip and got ashore. The people spotted him out and chased him to the woods with shot-guns." A St. Louis telegram says the Mayor of that city had "telegraphed the National Board of Health that the yellow-fever refugees from Memphis are arriving in such large numbers that the establishment of a quarantine became necessary. He asked that tents and rations for 1,000 persons for thirty days be forwarded at once."

AT Memphis, on the 26th of July, thirteen new cases of yellow fever and three deaths were reported to the Board of Health, and on the 27th there were fourteen new cases and nine deaths. The President of the Board of Health had gone so far as to write a proclamation declaring the fever epidemic, but, at the solicitation of a large number of business men, decided not to issue it. A committee of safety had been appointed to devise measures for the good of the city. The health authorities of Illinois and Missouri are considering the feasibility of maintaining a floating quarantine for refugees. There were three well-developed cases of fever in New Orleans on the 27th of July, all of them in the upper part of the city.

THIRTEEN new cases of yellow fever and one death from the disease, at Memphis, on July 28. A census of the city, taken by special policemen, showed the population to be 16,110. Whites, 4,283; colored, 11,827; adults, 10,651; children, 5,559. Of the whole, 9,743 have had the fever, leaving 6,367 susceptible to the disease.

EX-SENATOR ROBERT W. JOHNSON, an old-time Arkansas politician, died recently at his home in Little Rock....A horrible murder was recently perpetrated near Atlanta, Ga., the victims being an old and wealthy man named James Defoar and his wife. They were assaulted, while sleeping in bed, by some one with a heavy ax, and their heads almost severed. The bedclothes were not disordered, and the assassin had evidently struck but one blow for each. The murder was committed by tramps for the purpose of robbery.

THE Memphis yellow-fever bulletin for July 29 was eight new cases and four deaths. Travel was entirely cut off to and from the city, and locomotives were carrying the mails. A camp had been established not far from the city, and the colored people were being removed thither.—Five clear and undisputed cases of yellow fever were reported at New Orleans on the 29th. The work of disinfecting the city was being vigorously prosecuted.—Three deaths from yellow fever had occurred in Louisville—all of them imported—and one had occurred in quarantine at St. Louis.—Montgomery, Ala., and Vicksburg, Miss., have established quarantine against New Orleans.—The Executive Committee of the National Board of Health has issued a circular on disinfection. It advises thorough scrubbing and moist cleansing, to be followed by the fumes of burning sulphur at the rate of eighteen ounces per 1,000 cubic feet of space to be disinfected.

HON. BLAND BALLARD, Judge of the United States Court for the District of Kentucky, died last week at his home in Louisville. He was appointed Judge by President Lincoln, and had served eighteen years.

THERE were fourteen new cases of yellow fever and one death at Memphis on the 31st ult. No additional cases were reported at New Orleans. At Havana, Cuba, for the week ending July 26, there were 117 deaths from yellow fever.

JOHN COLE and Burnet Gordon, farmers, neighbors and brothers-in-law, visited Frankfort, Ky., the other day, and, meeting on the street, began a dispute about a standing difficulty between them in regard to dealings in stock. Angry words followed, when both men suddenly drew pocket knives and rushed at each other. The duel lasted for some minutes, both men hacking away at each other with fearful effect. Suddenly Cole staggered inside of a saloon, fell upon the floor, and in five minutes was dead. A blow from Gordon's knife had severed the carotid artery, and he bled to death.

THERE were four deaths from yellow fever at Memphis on the 31st ult. Nine new cases were reported.

FIVE convicts confined in the Kentucky penitentiary at Frankfort escaped a few mornings since. Three of them were recaptured after an exciting chase. The other two, both of them life-prisoners, are still at large.

WASHINGTON.

HON. E. W. STOUGHTON, United States Minister to Russia, who has been at his home in New York on leave of absence several weeks, tendered his resignation to the President last week. It is said his successor will not be immediately named.

FIGURES furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office show that the amount of public land entered for homestead settlement in the year ended June 30, 1879, was a trifle over 6,000,000 acres, or an area a little greater than that of the State of New Hampshire, and considerably larger than that of New Jersey. The average number of acres taken by each homestead settler, as shown by the entries of the last ten years, is 130. Unsettled public lands in the United States, therefore, received a population of at least 50,000 during the last twelve months under the operation of the Homestead law alone. The real accession probably far exceeds 100,000 persons. From an unpublished statement made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it is claimed that the whole number of homestead settlers from the time the Homestead law went into operation to June 30, 1878, a period of sixteen years, was 384,848. Allowing 120 acres to each settler, the whole amount of land thus occupied was 46,181,760. This immense domain would make fifteen States as large as Connecticut, is larger by nearly 3,000,000 acres than all New England, and it exceeds the combined areas of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New York by an area about equal to that of Delaware. In the number of homestead entries Kansas takes the lead, with 61,034. Minnesota stands next with 51,575, and Nebraska third, with 40,008.

SECRETARY SCHURZ, in the matter of the decision in the New Idria Mining Company, has succeeded in displeasing both parties. The decision is, in effect, that the New Idria Company cannot, under the Patent law, claim more than 160 acres of the land in question, which is something less than one-third of the valuable quicksilver mining property now occupied by that corporation. The remainder of the valuable grant, the decision declares, is the property of the United States Government.

A COMPARATIVE statement has just been completed by the Internal Revenue Bureau showing the receipts from the several specific sources of revenue during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1878-'79, and giving the increase and decrease thereof. The principal decrease is on tobacco taxed at the rate of 24 cents per pound. In 1878 the amount paid upon this grade of tobacco was $25,320,065. In 1879 it was $18,909,235, being a decrease in 1879 of $7,350,829. The principal increase is on tobacco taxed at the rate of 16 cents per pound, of which there was none in 1878. The amount realized from this source in 1879 was $9,734,697. The aggregate receipts are as follows: In 1878, $111,097,725; in 1879, $113,918,465; total increase in 1879, $2,820,740.

GEN. WALKER, Chief of the tenth census, is sending out circulars to the Mayors of the different cities, asking for information respecting the social statistics, industries, and general characteristics of the cities of the United States. This information will be published in a special report.

IT is estimated that the postal receipts of the United States for the present year will reach $32,000,000, as against $18,344,511 in 1869.

IT is stated from Washington that the President is violently opposed to De Lesseps' isthmus-canal project, and in favor of assembling a commission of American military and naval officers for the purpose of making an exhaustive examination of all the surveys, and deciding which of the various routes offers the greatest advantages—or is least likely to be found utterly impracticable.

POLITICAL.

GEN. BUTLER has announced his intention of again standing for Governor of Massachusetts this fall....Secretary Schurz is going to Ohio to make a speech on the issues of the campaign, about the 15th of August.... The Democratic State Convention, of Wisconsin, will meet at Madison, Sept. 9.

GENERAL.

A TORONTO dispatch states that Mr. Letellier, Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, has been removed from office.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made in a cable dispatch of the resignation of John Welsh, United States Minister to Great Britain, and of his intention to sail for America on the 20th of August. Domestic bereavement is stated to be the cause.

ACCORDING to "Poor's Manual," the gross earnings of all the railroads of the United States for 1878 were $490,103,361, against $472,909,272 for the preceding year. Western railroads have an unusually large share of the total and the increase, both in gross and net earnings and in the dividends declared.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., in the American Newspaper Reporter for July, show that the whole number of newspapers in the United States has increased since January of the current year from 8,703 to 9,153. New papers abound in the Territories. Suspensions have been fewer than in any corresponding period for several years.

VISIBLE supply of grain in the States and Canada: Wheat, 13,474,000 bushels; corn, 10,796,000 bushels; oats, 1,537,000 bushels; rye, 342,000 bushels; barley, 358,000 bushels.... The convention of the National Cotton Exchange will be held in New York on the 11th of August, instead of in St. Louis. Apprehension of quarantine obstruction is the reason for the change.

THE steamship Arizona arrived at Queenstown, Ireland, on the 29th ult., having made the passage from New York in the remarkable time of seven days, eight hours and eight minutes—the fastest time on record.... Minister Kasson, who has been absent from the Austrian Court for two months past on leave of absence, sailed from New York in the steamer Bothnia, on his return, last week.... Philip St. Pierre and George Barrow, seamen, of the steamer St. Lawrence, were drowned at Quebec by falling into the river, the deck-rail having broken.

FOREIGN.

THE burden of dispatches from England continues to be the depression in the cotton trade. Some of the latest cablegrams show that $10,000,000 worth of mill property in a single district has been lying idle for three years, and that, although there has been a reduction of 20 per cent. in wages, the mills are still either running on short time or are closed altogether. House property in the factory towns has lost half its value. The only remedy suggested for this disastrous condition seems to be a further shortening of time in the mills at work....Disastrous floods are reported throughout Belgium, and the floods in the valley of the Rhine have caused great loss of property.

A CABLE dispatch says that Petropanlovski, in West Siberia, and the remains of Uralsk have been burned by the revolutionists. Veliteyaski has also suffered from incendiarism. ....A London telegram says that nearly 300 engineers on a strike at Bradford are prepared to emigrate to the United States and Canada, in accordance with invitations received from the various branches of the Amalgamated Engineers' Society in the principal engineering centers.

THE harvest in the Southeast of France has nearly terminated, and in the Southwest is about half finished. The quality of the crops is reputed better than last year, but the quantity at the utmost is barely an average. ....The Peruvian Minister at Washington has received the following official telegram from Lima: "The Huascar entered the blockaded port of Iquique, and fought the Chilian squadron for two hours, leaving hors du combat the Consino and Abtao. The Huascar was unhurt."....The Colorado beetle has made its appearance in the vicinity of Cork, Ireland.

THE operatives and employers of the Durham collieries in England, by mutual arrangement, referred the wages dispute to Lord Derby. He has given his decision, reducing the wages of the workmen 1½ per cent. in addition to a recent reduction. About 57,000 workmen are affected by this decision....Kate Webster, a servant girl, was hanged near London the other day, for the murder of her mistress, Mrs. Thomas. The murder was attended by circumstances of unusual atrocity. Mrs. Thomas' body was boiled and thrown into the Thames, and the head was destroyed by burning. Fragments of the murdered woman's body, wrapped in paper and placed in a small pine box, were found floating in the Thames.

A CANNON of twenty-four centimetres caliber burst on board the German gunboat Renown at Wilhelmshaven, Germany, killing five and wounding twenty-five persons....The Porte has at last decided to adopt the modifications demanded by the British and French Embassadors to Turkey in the firman of investiture of Tewfik Pasha as Khedive of Egypt. This restores to the Khedive all privileges enjoyed by Ismail Pasha under the firman of 1873, without any reservation of the right to conclude treaties....A cable dispatch reports the horrors of the fire at Ortakeni, on the Bosphorus, to be much greater than at first reported. The whole town was burned, and several of the inhabitants lost their lives.

IN the great race for the Goodwood cup, won by Isonomy, Lorillard's horse, Parole, came in third....British returns show that twenty officers and 400 men died of cholera and other diseases on the march from the Afghan campaign, while only about 100 men were killed in action.

QUICK WORK.

A Roadmaster Who Understood His Business.

[Saratoga Letter.]

A gentleman who had long been selling the stock of the New York Central and other railroads, but had no personal knowledge of their executive management, told me that he had seen one of the most extraordinary pieces of executive dispatch in his life on Vanderbilt's railroad.

"I was coming down the Hudson River road," he said, "two or three days ago, when the train was stopped by a wreck near Hudson. A freight train had been thrown off the track. The engine was lying imbedded in a hole, one car was lying across the track, another had lost its trucks and was flat on the track, and the tender of the locomotive was also deeply imbedded. We had waited there an hour and a half or two hours, and twenty trains had been stopped. They had yanked one of the cars up on jack-screws, as if to run trucks under it and then get it out of the way. It looked as if we were going to stay until night, and we began to think about finding a steamboat or buggy or something to get on to New York, when all at once an engine and wrecking-car heaved in sight. Before the engine had come to a stop, we could hear the Roadmaster's voice ring out, giving his orders before he had seen the situation. He seemed to be as familiar with every thing on the spot at if he had been there all night. There was an engine off at some distance, but doing nothing. He called out to the engineer to come up and make fast to the buried locomotive. In half a minute the engine was attached and pulling to get the other out of the hole, and at the second effort the great mass of iron came up sullenly and was hauled out of the road. 'Pass that rope over the top of that car and make it fast to that tree yonder,' he cried. It was done. 'Now five hundred of you lay hold of that rope,' he shouted. The entire little army, under the inspiration of that voice, laid hold of the rope, using the tree for a purchase, and they pulled the car across the track square out of the way by main strength. Then the rails which had been bent were straightened with heavy hammers and nailed down. 'Come on here with that engine,' he cried again, 'and make fast to this truck.' With another tremendous pull the whole thing came out of the ground, like a tree by the roots, and was rushed off. 'Now start that first train,' cried the man. In less than ten minutes from the time of his arrival what looked to be a week's job was out of the way, and the passengers went on. I formed a higher idea then of William Vanderbilt's executive men than I ever had before," said the gentleman.

Spiritualism.

For every man interested in the question of immortality we have the profoundest sympathy. It is a question which has an intense, abiding interest for every thoughtful mind. At this time, particularly when the immortality of the soul is questioned more sharply than it has ever been before in the history of Christianity, the precious faith of the churches has to be fought for with all the weapons that can be laid hold of. From the fact that there is really no evidence of immortality except the resurrection of Christ Himself, and His declarations, many minds have reached about them on every side for everything that offers help. In the desire to know something positively about the matter, modern Spiritualism had its birth and has held its life. It promised to do just the thing that millions of minds desired to have done; so that, when it assumed to demonstrate the existence of life after death, it had a tremendous audience in readiness for it. The marvel is that there was a man or woman living who was unwilling to hear what it and its promulgators had to say. That it has millions of believers and followers to-day is, probably, due less to its real, inherent strength, than to the greedy want which it assumes to satisfy—a want so greedy that it accepts as fact that which only has its lying semblance.

We are not among those who regard what are claimed to be the facts of Spiritualism as improbable a priori. No man can read the Bible carefully without being educated in a belief in Spiritualism. In both the Old and the New Testament we have multiplied records of the communications of spiritual existences with men and women in the flesh. The doctrine of demoniacal possession is taught with great distinctness. The ministry of angels, the return to the earth of those long dead, familiar intercourse with Christ after His resurrection, all are in the line of phenomena claimed as genuine by modern Spiritualists; so that it is not strange that Christian men and women should find themselves educated by the Bible itself into a sort of readiness to receive Spiritualism. It is, or would seem to be, easy for a Christian to believe that visitants from the unseen world are about him influencing his mind, and endeavoring to make themselves known. That is precisely what they used to do in the olden time. Why should they not do it now as well as they did it then?—Scribner.

Chloroform for Pigs.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of a certain doctor, who, when he runs short of food for his pigs, gives them chloroform. It is reported that they remain under its influence from a week to ten days, and that when they recover, instead of having lost flesh, they exhibit marked signs of improvement.

ALL SORTS.

IN 1816 divorce was abolished in France, the law allowing judicial separations. These separations number 2,500 annually, and those who oppose the law claim that they are more demoralizing than a law that would allow divorce. An effort to secure the modification of the law is now being made, the church party opposing.

LORILLARD'S success with his American horses on the English turf this season has encouraged other Americans to enter that field. Among the nominations already made for next year's events, there are thirteen horses from this side of the Atlantic for the Derby alone, six of them made by Mr. Lorillard; while Americans will also be liberally represented in the St. Leger and the Oaks.

OLD Aunt Sarah Fields, a negro woman of Blue Ridge, Ky., firmly believed that she must die, be buried, and rise again on the third day, in order that her race should be benefited. The accommodating boys of her neighborhood gave her chloroform, and left her in a graveyard, so that when she awoke she thought that the desired miracle had been wrought. She is now waiting for the good result.

MR. A. C. ELLITHORPE, of Chicago, has invented a device by which fatalities from falling elevators promise to cease. It is simply to make a couple of feet at the bottom of the elevator shaft an air cushion or spring which breaks the jar of the fall. It was experimented with at the Chamber of Commerce building in that city with perfect success, immense weights being let fall without a jar sufficient to break an egg lying on the floor of the cab.

COL. CHARLES E. WENDELL, who from a private in the First Michigan infantry became the head of the regiment, was killed at the second Bull Run. Dr. W. D. Chapman, now a resident of Wood's Cross Roads, Gloucester county, Va., found an elegantly-mounted revolver on the battle-field bearing Col. Wendell's name. For the last seventeen years Dr. Chapman has been seeking some relative of Col. Wendell's and finding Mrs. G. E. Curtis in Detroit, a few days ago, restored the revolver.

THE demonstrations of grief exhibited by the Royalists of England over the grave of the late French Prince Imperial affords a world of encouragement to the Bonapartists of France, and is, indeed, fanning back to life the spirit of that invalid faction. The Republicans of France, on the other hand, are much annoyed by the tears of Queen Victoria and the Princes of her realm, though certainly there is little reason for fear that these tears will float back to France the throne which departed on the floods of the revolution of 1870.

COL. BEE, the Chinese Consul in San Francisco, explains the increased arrivals of Chinese at that port on the ground that the belief in China is that the bill restricting emigration from that country to the United States had actually become a law, and that subsequent to the 4th of July only fifteen persons would be allowed to take passage on one steamer. The Chinese, having learned that the measure had passed both houses of Congress, concluded that the question was settled, and hastened to start for the golden shore while there was an opportunity.

MISS BROWN, a Pennsylvania heiress is spending the summer at Rye Beach, N. H. Robert G. Miller, a sailor on the hotel yacht, saw and loved her, but didn't dare to tell her so. She got a fish bone in her throat. Miller mounted a horse and rode at a headlong pace for a doctor. He was thrown on the way, and sustained a broken arm, but got to the doctor's office, told his errand, and fainted. The doctor arrived at the hotel just in time to save Miss Brown's life, and now she is nursing Miller, with the intention of marrying him as soon as he is in fit condition.

THE woman's rights advocates of California had a great treat a few days ago in a wedding performed in Oakland. The bride was a female physician, Dr. Jennie Bearby, of Oakland; the officiating representative of the church was a female parson, the Rev. Ada C. Bowles, of the First Universalist Society of San Francisco; and an interesting company of other female followers of the learned vocations—physicians, lawyers, artists and writers—were in attendance. It was the first marriage performed by a woman on the Pacific coast. The repast that followed the ceremony was of a teetotal temperance character. The groom was the County Physician.

THE recent investigation by two French doctors of the influence of mental labor on the growth of the brain and skull was full of interest. They measured the heads of persons of many different pursuits, educated as well as illiterate. The results were in favor of educated men leading an intellectual life; that is to say, the heads of these men were much more fully developed than those of other men. It was found that both alves where not of the head always symmetrically developed. In students, for example, the development of the left frontal region was fuller than that of the right; but in illiterate subjects the right occipital region was larger than the left. In the students the frontal region was more developed than the occipital; in illiterate subjects the occipital region was the largest.

A FINANCIAL gentleman, who has long had relations with the Syndicate, and is transacting business in Europe for the Treasury Department, sends to Washington some interesting information relative to the money condition of Europe. France is growing rich as rapidly as she is growing Republican. The Bank of France holds to-day $450,000,000 in bullion. About 60 per cent., or $280,000,000, is in silver. The people hold as much more, and in nearly the same proportion of the two metals. Much of it is hoarded, of course, but a large share is in active circulation. The bank-note circulation confined to the Bank of France is now $446,000,000. Very few notes remain outstanding below 100 francs, or $20. At the close of the war, or soon after, the note circulation had reached nearly $600,000,000, and while, in seven years, this volume has virtually decreased about $150,000,000, the bullion in the bank has been more than doubled, and the 5 per cent. rentes paid out in satisfaction of the vast and onerous German indemnities have nearly all been drawn home within the same time and into French ownership. The bonds rule at 116⅛ on the Paris Bourse, and would go still higher but for the reserved option of the Government to call them in for redemption. The Bank of England holds to-day $176,431,000 in gold bullion, but, of the bank-note circulation of $245,000,000 from the Issue Department, about $100,000,000 is held in reserve for the want of profitable employment.

Husband and Wife.

"Your husband was arrested by an officer, Mrs. Powers," said the Justice in Essex Market Court yesterday to a sad-faced little woman, "on a charge of cruelly beating you. I have sent for you to make a complaint against him."

"Against my husband, sir?" she asked in a low voice.

"Why, of course. Your face is cut and swollen, your arms black and blue, and your lips quivering now from the pain his brutality has caused you. Your cries were pitiful to hear, your neighbors say, and they add that your husband is a drunkard and that you have to support him."

"Oh! let him go," said the little woman, crying. "He didn't mean to do it. We've been married just a year and a half. Our little boy is home asleep. I would not have it said his father ever had been arrested for beating his mother. You'll let him go; please do," and the woman wept afresh.

"And what do you say, Powers?" answered the court.

"Say!" answered the drunken brute. "Why, I say —— her! I'll give it to her when I get her again. I'll stop her blubbering and her baby stories."

"You will not if I have the power to prevent you. You are committed for six months in default of $600 to keep the peace."—New York Herald.

Schoolboy Blunders.

The Lyon County (Nev.) Times, writing of the ludicrous mistakes at a recent school examination there, says: Although the replies indicated a reasonably-high degree of proficiency among the scholars, some ludicrous mistakes were made:

A boy was told to correct the following sentence: "Milo began to lift the ox when he was a calf." The reply was: "Milo, when he was an ox, began to lift the calf."

A little boy was asked: "What are the principal minerals in Nevada?" He replied, without the least hesitation: "Gold, silver and trout."

To the question, "How would you go from New York to San Francisco by water?" a boy in the same department replied promptly, and with the utmost assurance: "By boat!"

Another scholar in the same class being asked, "Why do we celebrate the Fourth of July?" answered unhesitatingly: "Because three Presidents died on that day."

A boy in the high school, having been required to give the plural of two, answered "Three!" and resumed his seat with a self-satisfied air.

Potato Bugs.

Prof. Cyrus Thomas, State Entomologist, writes Secretary Fisher, of the State Board of Agriculture, the following information concerning the potato bugs, which are now very numerous. The suggestion made as to how they can be exterminated should be acted upon by all whose potato plants are troubled with them:

"Old-fashioned potato bugs are around in considerable numbers, but I beat them this time. The plan adopted was to whip them off with brush switches; it has succeeded in all cases tried yet, and in no instance has it required more than one repetition. A few Colorado potato beetles put in their appearance in some potato patches, but a vigorous warfare soon exterminated them before they had time to deposit eggs."—Springfield (Ill.) State Register.

AUBURN COURIER,

THEO. REED,
ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

NEBRASKA has just taken a State census, and the result gives her a total population of 386,410, a gain of 72,662 since last year.

THE last Legislature in Indiana, in the "Woman's Rights" law, exempted from execution against a woman all "jewelry, ornaments, books, works of art and virtue," which have been given her as presents. The law does not designate how the "works of art and virtue" are to be catalogued.

THE East Indies are rapidly becoming a competitor to China in the production of tea. It is consequently an object to the American dealer and consumer to ascertain the probable quantity of the coming new crop in that country. The reports so far are somewhat contradictory. Some give the yield at 37,000,000 pounds, while others put it down at 49,000,000 pounds.

THERE is a good deal of distress in London over the amount of money in the Bank of England, but the feeling is, of course, not generally shared. It appears that on the 1st inst. the bank contained something like $175,000,000, the largest amount ever, at one time, collected in its vaults. The Bank of France was in a similar deplorable condition, struggling along under a load of $450,000,000.

CONGRESS is fast falling into the system of special legislation which has become so objectionable, and, in fact, such a disgrace, to the State Legislatures. During the last session of that body 727 bills and 46 joint resolutions were introduced in the Senate, and 2,395 bills and 119 joint resolutions in the House. Of course the vast majority of these were of a character and nature in which the general public had no sort of interest.

THE Pennsylvania railroad has solved the rapid-transit problem for Philadelphia by buying a right of way through nine squares, nearly three-quarters of a mile, from the Schuylkill river to Broad street, near the center of the city. The road already has a right of way to the river, which it proposes to cross on an elevated bridge, and then cross the city by bridging the streets and running on its own property through the blocks. The company has been driven to this step by the necessity of competing with the new route to New York which the Reading has secured.

MONTANA, during the past sixteen years, has produced $153,000,000 of gold and silver. Of this sum, $147,000,000 was in gold. This makes Montana rank next to California as a producer of gold. There are already 20,000 quartz mines in the Territory. Iron and lead mines have been opened, and coal is plentiful. It is claimed that the cost of keeping herds of cattle in Montana is only 60 cents a head. Including taxes, a 3-year-old beef steer, which will sell on the the ground for $30, only costs $3 for feed and care. The losses in raising are estimated at 2 per cent., while the profits vary from 25 to 40 cents per annum. In 1873 there were but 86,944 cattle in the Territory; in 1878 there were 350,000 head, while 22,000, valued at $240,000, were exported to Eastern markets.

WHILE the postoffice business done in any State does not furnish an accurate criterion of its relative importance, nevertheless the sales of stamps and postal cards and the receipts from newspaper postage afford perhaps as fair a basis as any that is available for judging the proportion of Government revenue that comes from different parts of the country. Somebody has taken the trouble to figure out the part of the $245,000,000 paid into the treasury for the support of the General Government which each State contributes. On this basis New York, of course, comes first, with $47,600,000, and Pennsylvania second, with $25,600,000; Illinois is third in the list, with $20,400,000, and Massachusetts fourth, with $16,900,000, followed closely by Ohio, with $16,400,000. Then there is a drop to $9,100,000 from Missouri, and the figures fall steadily until Florida brings up the rear with but $810,000.

A FOUR-FOLD murder of incredible horror has been committed in Prague by two discharged workmen of one Keport, an upholsterer in the Johannisplatz. The motive was revenge for having had to undergo three days' imprisonment in consequence of unseemly conduct toward Keport's sister. They were no sooner free of prison than these miscreants went to their late employer's workshop, and, locking the door behind them, drew their revolvers and knives and began the butchery. Keport, his wife, sister and infant daughter were killed on the spot, their bodies being dreadfully mangled. An assistant, who sprang out of the window with twenty-one wounds, lies dying in the hospital. Twelve shots were fired and six people wounded besides the four slain. The police had the greatest trouble in preventing the crowd of some thousands of people from lynching the ruffians. One of them, indeed, was so knocked about by the exasperated people before he could be got away that he is now unrecognizable.

PROF. VIRCHOW, Dr. Schliemann's companion and coadjutor in the latest excavations in the Troad, has written to the eminent Homeric archæologist, informing him of a concurrence of geological opinion at Berlin in the conclusion that all the building stones, fragments of which the professor brought home from Hissarlik, are of fresh-water formation. This conclusion is thought to be decisive against those who affirm the impossibility of identifying Hissarlik with the Homeric Troy, on the ground that at the time of the great epic war the site must have been covered by the sea.

THE reopening of the case of the New Idria Mining Company against William McGarrahan, before the Secretary of the Interior, at Washington, revives the old story of this suit. The argument proceeds on a motion on the part of the company to reopen the decision made eight years ago, by which a patent of the mine was refused to the New Idria Company. The argument, of course, reopens the old story. The case is now both before Congress and the courts. The motion to secure a patent is, of course, an effort on the part of the company to forestall, if possible, adverse action either on the part of Congress or the courts. It will be remembered that some eight years ago a patent was about to issue, but was stopped by the direct interposition of President Grant, on the ground that there were allegations of fraud, and that Congress was about to consider the subject. The same state of things now exists, both houses of Congress having the subject under consideration.

AN interesting decision as to the validity of the marriages that used to prevail among slaves has just been rendered by an Augusta (Ga.) court. Mary Thomas has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Mike Thomas, and apparently was disposed to leave James Thomas out in the cold in the disposition of the property. Thereupon James brought suit against Mary, claiming that he was the son of the deceased Mike, and entitled to inherit what he had left. The administrator replied that Mike Thomas and James' mother were never married, and consequently James was an illegitimate child and could not inherit. James admitted that his father and mother were never married, because the relation of marriage was not recognized by law as existing among slaves, but he claimed and proved that his parents had lived together in what was regarded among negroes as a state of wedlock, and that he had always been recognized by his father as his son. The court decided on this showing that he was a legitimate child, and therefore entitled to inherit his father's property, which is certainly the common-sense view of the case.

A Deserted Town.

Pine Flat, Sonoma county, is a good example of deserted mining town. Five or six years ago, when this part of the country was all excitement on account of the quicksilver discoveries, Pine Flat was a very lively town of 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants. Six or eight hundred men were to be seen in the streets, the hotels could not accomodate all who came, and business of all kinds was just "booming." Houses were put up in a day, canvas tents stood upon every available spot, a system of pipes supplied water to the town, and the wave of prosperity threatened to swamp everybody with riches. But a change came o'er the spirit of their dreams. The price of quicksilver declined, the wave of prosperity subsided to a calm and then receded, until to-day, by actual count, there are two and one-half houses to each inhabitant, and there are fifteen houses.—San Francisco Examiner.

Pope Leo.

Pope Leo rises early, and, after his devotions, gives himself up to study until the hour set for audiences or assembling of the congregations over which he presides. Although in delicate health, he works hard, and makes his household do the same. Like the majority of Italians of Southern Italy, the Pope has only one regular repast a day, at about 1 o'clock. He is an enemy to the delicacies of the table, and his fare is much more meager than that of many of his curates. He eats boiled mush, which takes the place of soup, a little boiled or roasted meat, rarely vegetables, cheese made of goats' milk, and drinks ordinary wine. Even on the day of his election to the papacy he sent back the roast beef given to him, and asked in its place a second plate of soup.

A Mother at Thirteen Years.

Dr. Dillard states that on last Saturday a girl living several miles from Belton, and who was married last year before she was 12 years old, gave birth to a female infant. The mother is not 13 years old, and will not be until September. The child-mother and her babe were doing well at last accounts.—North Georgian.

THE NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The Republicans of Congress, the Republican in the White House, the Republican newspapers throughout the country, have been exalting the national authority in the recent political discussions. The veto messages were sent to Congress ostensibly in defense of the national authority. The speeches of the Republicans in the House and Senate were full of tributes to the national authority. Day after day the Republican press teems with articles lifting up the national authority, and, by the same token, belittling the authority of the States. A large portion of the Republican party is anxious to make this the sole political issue in the elections of 1879. It is charged that the Democratic party is determined to destroy the authority of the nation when it asks for a destruction of the test oath for jurors, for the banishment of the army from the polls, and when it would forbid the use of the Federal purse at the ballot-boxes. It is the theory of one party in this country that because it is determined forever in this country that a State has no right to secede from the Union a State has no rights at all. The war negatived forever the right of a State to leave the Union. Does it therefore follow that a State has no rights whatever? The right of secession was only asserted by a few States. Must all of the States lose all of their rights because it is settled in blood that these few States had not this right? Because it is fixed that this Union of States is perpetual, is it fixed that there are no States—as the constitution knows States—in the Union?

Let us analyze this "national authority" for which the Republicans so universally and vehemently plead. Do they really ask for the authority of the nation or for the authority of the Republican party? The Federal Government is divided into three co-ordinate branches. These three are independent, distinct, separate, and together they compose the "national authority." The balancing is so delicate that supreme power rests nowhere; for the Executive may be impeached and removed from office, the Justices of the Supreme Court may also be impeached and removed, laws may be passed in spite of the refusal of the signature of the Executive; and, on the other hand, the laws of Congress may be declared null and void by the Supreme Court. It is, however, these three departments or branches of Government that constitute the "national authority." Is it for these, for this "national authority," that the Republicans shout? Not at all. Upon the leading questions now at issue between the two parties, between two branches of the Government, the Supreme Court has already decided against the Republican party. That party does not plead for a national authority that includes the Supreme Court; and here is one of the three great branches of that authority that is ignored, ruled out, when these men hurrah for the nation with a big "N." Do they shout for the legislative branch of the national authority? Not at all. They howl against it. This great coordinate branch of the national authority they specially curse and despise. It is clothed by the constitution with larger powers than either of the other branches of the Government, but it has no place in the national authority for which our Republican friends now cheer. We find, in short, upon examination, that the only part of the national authority of which the Republican orators and organs are really in favor is that part of which they happen to have control. It is not the national authority, but Republican authority, party and partisan authority, which they are anxious to maintain. It is not constitutional authority of the Federal Government, but the unconstitutional authority of a Republican Executive to which they are devoted. The executive department of the Government was designed by the constitution to be the most modest of its three great branches. It was intended to be in fact as in name the executive department. The Executive was to execute the laws, not to make or interpret them. We have recently heard the strange doctrine that the Executive is part of the legislative power of the country; we have recently seen the Executive ignore or defy the department of the judiciary; and we now behold a great party shouting night and day for the national authority, meaning the one man in the White House in accord with itself. He, or his party, is become the national authority, and his party goes before the country on this issue. Driven from power in the national legislature, the Republican party would make the President the nation. "I am the state," said the imperial Louis XIV. When, therefore, the Republican journals and the Republican statesmen declaim in favor of the "national authority," they are only in favor of that part of it which they chance to control. They denounce and defy the legislative part of it, for it passed measures in harmony with civil liberty in time of peace, and they would have none of them. They ignore and defy the decrees of the Supreme Court, and the Executive alone is the national authority. Upon this proposition they appeal to the people, and denounce their opponents as traitors. Is the President the nation or not? Can men be opposed to the Republican authority and yet be in favor of the national authority?

Child Killed by a Panther.

A shocking tragedy is reported to have occurred near Forrest place, in St. Mary's parish, on Tuesday evening last. A little before dark on that day, it seems a colored man and woman started to visit a neighbor some distance off, and a small boy, of some 10 years, desired to accompany them. On being prohibited from doing so, the little fellow waited until they had started, when he followed them "from afar off." The road he had to traverse led through a dense forest, near which is a thick cane-brake. When in the road opposite this wood the boy was heard to utter an agonizing cry for help, and on the man returning a part of his clothing was found in the road, and a track of blood led toward the undergrowth. The man was too frightened to enter the forest, but immediately procured assistance, and, upon entering the woods, a portion of the skeleton of the unfortunate child was found, bearing unmistakable signs of having been mangled by the jaws of some powerful carnivorous animal. It was supposed that a panther had done this horrible work, and a number of the best dogs were put into the woods to hunt it, but no intelligence of the chase has reached us. As is natural to suppose, great excitement prevails in the neighborhood. —New Orleans Democrat.

JOHNNY DAVENPORT'S DEVILTRY.

The Work Before the Wallace Committee.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

Senator Wallace has just paid a flying visit to Washington to make ready for the summer work in looking after Johnny Davenport. He says it is the intention of the committee to overhaul Davenport and his past conduct in connection with elections, thoroughly and completely. Several committees have investigated Davenport, and, though each of them discovered fraud and rascality committed by him, a great deal has been left undiscovered. Senator Wallace says he has the names of men who were appointed Supervisors and Deputy Marshals by Davenport at the last election, together with their residences, and he intends to investigate their characters and records. He thinks enough is already known to warrant the statement that Davenport's hirelings will be proven to belong to the worst criminal classes in New York. These men were employed because of their bad character and their willingness to commit any act required of them. Crimes against citizens and against laws were contemplated, and criminals were employed to execute them. United States Marshal Payne, of New York city, refused to furnish a list of names and residences of the men who had been employed under him as Supervisors and Deputy Marshals, until he was forced to do so by the Wallace committee. Wallace says the Tammany Society employed a firm of reputable lawyers last winter to prosecute men who, as Supervisors and Deputy Marshals, had outraged voters at the polls and deprived them of their right of suffrage. These attorneys called upon Davenport for the names of the men he had put at the polls, and by him were referred to the United States Marshals. The lawyers then requested from Mr. Payne the information needed, and, after being put off for weeks, they got a list of names simply, and this was all they ever could get. The efforts to obtain the residences of United States election officers were entirely fruitless, notwithstanding the energy they displayed. All sorts of dodges and subterfuges were resorted to by the Marshals to avoid giving information that would enable the prosecution to lay hands upon the Davenport hirelings, and finally, when there was no longer any chance for evasion, the attorneys met with a downright refusal. Payne and his chief clerk were summoned to appear before the Wallace committee in Washington, and to bring with them a copy of the roll of Supervisors and Marshals, together with the residence of each one. This summons, of course, could not be disobeyed, and it was only the power of Congress that finally compelled Payne to disclose the habitations of his election employes. It is to follow out this line of testimony that the committee has laid out its summer work.

His Best Sermon Spoiled.

Brother Cuthbert Roach, brother of the Rev. Elijah Roach, many years ago moved from Charlotte county, Va., to Trigg county, Ky. He told me when he went to the Little River Association, Ky., he heard a leading minister in that association, and a very good man, preach from the following text: Acts ii., 40: "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." The old gentleman pronounced the word "untoward," as if it was untow-erd, and went on to tell the audience that in the days of the apostles the people lived in walled cities, with towers and battlements for their defence; that the apostle used the word figuratively here, to show how defenceless was that wicked generation, without towers of strength, into which they could enter and defend themselves from the wrath of God. Thus it is at the present day, said he, the sinner is exposed and has no tower in which to defend himself. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, "save yourselves from this untow-erd generation." As they returned from the church, Brother Roach said to the preacher: "Did you not give a wrong interpretation to the word untoward in your text to-day by pronouncing it incorrectly?" He replied, "Oh no, Brother Roach, I know I am correct, for I have preached that sermon at least twenty times at different places, and the brethren have told me it is the best sermon they ever heard me preach." "Well, well," says Brother Roach, "we will see what the dictionary says as to the meaning and its pronunciation when we get to the house." After they had looked at the dictionary the good old brother, with evident mortification and regret, exclaimed: "Brother Roach, this is too bad! You have spoiled one of my best sermons! I shall never be able to preach it again."—Richmond (Va.) Religious Herald.

His Heart on His Right Side.

A very singular case has just been discovered by Dr. Kellogg, of Rush, Monroe county. Mr. Jacob Banks, of Rush, lost by death a little boy, aged 4 years. The most of his lifetime he was sick and puny, and often attended by physicians. For a month past he has been attended by Dr. Kellogg. On making a thorough examination the doctor found that the little fellow's heart was in his right side, almost under the arm. When dead he was almost a skeleton.—Buffalo Courier.

SALUTE THE BRIDE.

A Stalwart Michigander on His "Bridle Tower."

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

There was a marriage at the upper end of the Detroit, Lansing and Northern road the other day. A great big chap, almost able to throw a car-load of lumber off the track, fell in love with a widow who was cooking for the hands in a saw-mill, and, after a week's acquaintance, they were married. The boys around the mill lent William three calico shirts, a dress-coat, and a pair of white pants, and chipped in a purse of about $20, and the couple started for Detroit on a bridal tour within an hour after being married.

"This 'ere lady," explained William, as the conductor came along for tickets, "are my bride. Just spliced fifty-six minutes ago. Cost $2, but durn the cost! She's a lily of the valley, Mary is, and I'm the right bower in a new pack of keerds. Conductor, sa-lute the bride!"

The conductor hesitated. The widow had freckles and wrinkles, and a turn-up nose, and kissing the bride was no gratification.

"Conductor, sa-lute the bride, or look out for tornadoes!" continued William, as he rose up and shed his coat.

The conductor sa-luted. It was the best thing he could do just then.

"I never did try to put on style before," muttered William, "but I'm bound to see this thing through if I have to fight all Michigan. These 'ere passengers has got to come up to the chalk, they has."

The car was full. William walked down the aisle, waved his hand to command attention, and said:

"I've just been married; over thar' sots the bride. Anybody who wants to salute the bride kin now do so. Anybody who don't want will have cause to believe that a tree fell on him."

One by one the men walked up and kissed the widow, until only one was left. He was asleep. William reached over and lifted him into a sitting position at one movement, and commanded:

"Ar' ye goin' to dust over thar' an' kiss the bride?"

"Blast your bride, and you, too!" growled the passenger.

William drew him over the back of the seat, laid him down in the aisle, tied his legs in a knot, and was making a bundle of him just of a size to go through the widow, when the man caved, and went over and saluted.

"Now, then," said William, as he put on his coat, "this bridle tower will be resumed as usual, and, if Mary and me squeeze hands or git to laying heads on each other's shoulders, I shall demand to know who laffed about it, and I'll make him e-magine that I'm a hull boom full of the biggest kind of saw-logs, an' more comin' down on the rise. Now, Mary, hitch along an' let me get my arm around ye!"

Steel Sleepers for Railways.

We learn that iron permanent way is receiving increased attention on the part of the administrations of German and Belgian railways. The great Boehum and Krupp works are stated to have made serious proposals to various German railway companies on the subject, and metallic permanent way on the Serres and Battig system has been laid down between Buyssinghen and Hal, on the Belgian state railways. This section is rather crowded with traffic, even express trains from Brussels to Paris and Calais passing over it. We may, then, fairly assume that iron permanent way will now receive a fair trial upon the continent. But is not merely iron permanent way which is now talked of. Steel has declined to such a moderate price that steel sleepers are now coming under consideration. By reducing the thickness of steel sleepers a little, the John Cockerill Company considers that it can supply steel permanent way upon even cheaper terms than iron permenent way, so that it is not impossible that in future we shall have steel rails supported upon steel sleepers.

The great advantage attending the use of iron or steel permanent way is the saving which it will secure in the important matter of labor. An iron permanent way may cost in the first instance more than one based on the old-fashioned wooden sleepers, but these are continually going to ruin, being scorched with too much heat one day, and saturated with too much wet the next. An iron permanent way once established is clearly more durable, and if it is more durable the expenditure for labor and materials in connection with renewals will obviously be greatly reduced. In these days, when many a struggling railway company is casting about for relief in one shape or other, such a saving as this will no doubt be very welcome.—Colliery Guardian (England).

Expensive Economy.

The rebuilding of the famous Eddystone lighthouse has revealed a curious bit of most expensive economy. It will be remembered that, after one structure had been destroyed by storm and another by fire, John Smeaton undertook the task which was successfully completed more than 100 years ago. He secured a perfect foundation for the massive pile by an ingenious system of dovetailing, which fixed the lower courses of stone into the solid rock of the reef. But he discovered, after the entire work was finished, a small cavern in the reef, immediately under the foundations, which might, he thought, prove a source of trouble at some distant period in the future. He estimated the cost of filling up and properly cementing at $1,250, and recommended it should be done immediately. But it never was done, and now the danger which Smeaton predicted, and would have guarded against, has actually arrived. The incessant action of the waves, assisted, perhaps, by the weight and vibrations of the tower above, has enlarged the caverns until the foundations can no longer be trusted. The old lighthouse will be torn down to high-water level, and a new one built about 100 feet southeast of it. Had Smeaton's advice been followed there is every reason to believe that the building with which his name is inseparably associated would have stood forever. So the $1,250 saved was a great many thousands lost—saying nothing of the possibilities of failures in the attempt now in progress.

INDIANA ITEMS.

JOHN HILL a 10-year-old negro, shot and instantly killed his sister, aged 16, in a family quarrel, at Economy.

A BOY by the name of Dewit, working for Mr. Madison Hill, a farmer of Winchester, was lately dragged to death under a hay-rake.

THE Merry Bowman Archery Club, of Crawfordsville, are preparing for the great national archery contest to be held in Chicago in August.

IN Richland township, Rush county one day last week, and within a radius of two miles, three men were injured by newly-patented labor-saving harvesting machinery. One sustained a few broken ribs, another a broken leg, and the third a broken arm.

A MEETING or the bar of the State has just formed a society auxiliary to the National Association, and elected the following officers: President, Robert Lowery; Vice President, Simeon Stansifer; Secretary, Ferdinand Winter; Treasurer, N. B. Taylor.

A FEW miles south of Cloverdale, two boys named Smith and Sims were playing with a shot-gun. Smith pointed the gun at Sims, "playfully" remarking that he would shoot him. He pulled the trigger, and discharged the contents of the gun into Sims' abdomen, killing him instantly.

GEN. EKIN, of the] Quartermaster's Department at Jeffersonville, has received orders for the manufacture of 25,000 army-blouses, 41,000 shirts, 30,000 pairs of drawers, 7,500 pairs of overalls, 7,500 stable frocks, and 10,000 single bed-ticks. The work will be commenced in about five weeks.

A WILD beast is roaming in the country near Shelbyville. It has been seen by a number of parties lately, and one man had his dog literally torn to pieces a few nights since by the animal. It came into the yard and the dog began the attack. It made no noise, and in a moment silenced the dog. The residents say it is a panther or a leopard.

THE Board of Trustees of Asbury University have elected Prof. John M. Mansfield, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, to the chair of Natural Sciences, and passed a resolution vacating the Greek chair next June of the college year. This is now held by Prof. Wiley. Prof. J. C. Redpath was elected Vice President of the Faculty, vice Prof. Lingley, resigned.

THE organization of the Indianapolis Mercantile Association was perfected last week by the election of the following officers: President, Wm. M. Davis; First Vice President, A. L. Wright; Second Vice President, H. Bamberger; Treasurer, H. Lieber; Secretary, D. W. Girard; Executive Committee, Joseph R. Perry, J. T. Brush, W. H. Craft. The organization starts with a good membership, and will have in view the general business interests of the city.

Corn Is King.

Last year the corn crop of the United States was worth $583,000,000, while ex-King Cotton gave us only $250,000,000. Indian corn is the sheet anchor of American agriculture, and demands our most careful consideration. What would England give if she could only raise Indian corn!

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, AUG. 7, 1879.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

Tilden thinks Justice Field, of California, is the next best man for the democratic nomination in 1880.

The Fort Wayne Journal has changed hands again. Mr. Ludlum is succeeded by Messrs. Russell & Wright. The latter names look familiar.

The democracy of DeKalb county will support the man for governor, who can command the largest vote at the next election, regardless of "booms."

The democrats of Maine have nominated a straight democratic ticket, refusing to await the action of the greenbackers. The result will be three tickets.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says, that the Pinafore company under the management of Mr. Mays (our Tom.) is reported as doing an excellent business through Illinois.

Information from Indianapolis is to the effect that James P. Voorhees, son of the senator, has resigned his position in the governor's office, with a view to going upon the stage in the fall.

And still John Sherman cannot find time to explain the republican system of book-keeping in the treasury department. Grover's report makes an explanation necessary.

John E. Seely, three years ago a horse farrier in Goshen, N. Y., took Greeley's advice and went west. He engaged in the restaurant and hotel business there, and speculated in mining stocks. He is now worth $5,000,000, having made an average of $4,600 per day.

Grant has intimated that he will not consent to any circus-show demonstration, when he arrives in this country. He has probably heard of the decline of the "boom." The general would have no objection to the proposed reception, except that the McMullen brothers propose to make some money out of it.

A decree of foreclosure of the mortgage on the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw railroad has been entered in the United States court at Indianapolis, at the suit of James F. Joy, and the property will be sold within the next two months. It is now operated by the Michigan Central railroad, and it is probable that that corporation will purchase at the sale.

A Georgia negro girl who went to Liberia in 1877, has just returned. She says, "the natives are very hard on our people when they commit crime." She mentions the case of one Reuben Cayho, who stole something from one of them and they caught him, tied a big rock around his neck and threw him in the river. It would require a large number of "natives" and a mountain of "socks" to do justice to the republican thieves, at Washington City.

Exchange.—General Ewing's home at Lancaster is a plain brick mansion, pleasantly situated on high ground. The general's eldest son, William, who is 28 years old, is principal of an academy in an adjoining township. The eldest daughter, Miss Mary Ewing, is a young lady of many graces and excellencies. The general has three other children, two boys and a girl. He is very much liked by his neighbors, who always find him genial, generous and well-bred.

A great sensation has been created among the men of the United States, by the announcement that a new office has been created by the government, which requires the appointment of an official to be stationed in the custom-house at Detroit, whose duty it will be to disrobe all the women who come over from Canada, in order to see that no dutiable goods are smuggled through on their persons. Don't get excited gentlemen, the office is to be filled by a lady.

Judge Van Long, of Warsaw, is favorably spoken of for successor to Judge Biddle on the supreme bench. He would make a strong candidate.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

We are much pleased to see the name of Judge Long mentioned in that connection. In our opinion the democracy of the 5th district could not present a more worthy gentleman for the suffrages of the people of the state. Having had the honor of a personal acquaintance with Judge Long for a number of years, we are enabled to judge as to his popularity as a citizen. No person will attempt to dispute his legal ability. In 1873 he was appointed judge of the circuit court by Gov. Hendricks; at the next election his majority was about 1000, (in a republican district,) and in 1878 he was again elected by a handsome majority. In both elections he received a nice majority in his own county (Kosciusko) which is largely republican. The northwestern portion of the state would be ably represented on the supreme bench by Hon. E. V. Long. We hope to see him nominated, if he will accept the position.

On Monday of last week, a Miss Lavinia Fry, aged twenty, met with a terrible death in Lancaster county, Pa. She was passing along the public road when a drove of cattle passed by, and an infuriated bull attacked her. Catching her on his horns he tossed her twenty feet across a creek. The animal plunged after her, and on the opposite bank he again caught her on his horns and threw her over a five-rail fence. One horn penetrated her abdomen. Her right-hip bone was broken, and she was so badly wounded that she died shortly afterward.

A leading business man of Indianapolis who is a Protestant, married a Catholic lady, and the issue is a son four months old. Last week the lady visited her former home, and while there caused her child to be baptized by the Catholic priest. The father upon hearing this was furious, and his attorney wrote to the priest directing the church record to be erased. No reply being received a bitter letter was forwarded and if not answered a suit will be filed in court to compel the church authorities to produce the baptismal record that it may be officially erased. The legal point is that the father has control over the religious as well as secular interest of his child, and it will be the first case ever brought in the courts of this state.

Depravity is being practiced to an alarming extent in some of our large cities by the heirs of persons whose bodies have been laid to rest in valuable cemetery lots. The trustees of Greenwood cemetery, at New York say, "that through the poverty or cupidity of those who inherit lots in the cemetery, the lots are sold, and the bodies of those buried in them are dug up and reburied in the graves in the public lots. In this way the remains of whole families have been disturbed, when the expectation of those who purchased the lots in the first place was that their bodies would remain there unmolested until the day of resurrection. It is now proposed to render the sale of such lots impossible by the heirs-at-law, and it is claimed that under an old law lots may be declared inalienable and the heirs at law be prohibited from selling their interest in the same, except to each other, by filing in the office of the cemetery a declaration to that effect. The traffic in lots by the descendant of those who were buried in them has been far greater than would be suspected, and when a sale is effected the bones of those buried in the lots are taken up and transferred to public lots, the tomb-stones are cleared away, and in some instances the new graves of the dead are allowed to go unmarked."

We do not wonder.

We do not wonder that housewives who have been accustomed to use Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts should turn in disgust from the trash often sold under the name of Flavoring Extracts, which stuff smells and tastes like turpentine. Dr. Price's Flavoring Extracts have the taste and odor of the fresh fruits.

Our County Board.

EDITORS COURIER:—A year ago and over, considerable was said in the republican papers of the county, about some of the expenditures of the board of commissioners of this county, and also as to what some pleased to call the extravagances of the members of the board in "running around over the county." Having an interest and some experience in those matters, and having observed somewhat largely the doings of the different boards in this county for over twenty years, I concluded to investigate these charges somewhat, as I thought upon the first impression there might be some fire where there was so much smoke. But it being an election year, concluded that some of the charges were prompted by partisan motives, and so thought that anything that would be said in defense or extenuation would be judged also of a partisan character. I dismissed the subject until an "off year," when there would be no election, so that the subject would receive an impartial consideration. And now after thus waiting and watching, I propose to say a few words and will challenge the opposite side to disprove the following statements.

1st. That DeKalb county never had a better, safer, more industrious or more economical board of county commissioners, than at present.

2nd. That no board of the county has ever expended so much money as well, in making its necessary improvements and paying current expenditures.

3rd. That no board of the county ever before brought the poor farm down to a paying basis but this board; the poor farm always heretofore costing yearly from $2,000 to $5,000.

4th. That during the term of this board it has not had a lawsuit to defend nor to prosecute, in regard to the acts of the present board, nor has there been an appeal from any of its decisions involving the interests of the county.

5th. That during the term of the present board more ditches have been constructed, more wet lands reclaimed and made valuable, more bridges have been erected or repaired, than any one previous board.

Now Messrs. Editors, the above are broad assertions and comprehend a great deal, and I will admit they seem to talk a little like buncomb, but I will dare any one to investigate and truthfully controvert them. It may be true that some error of judgment may be now detected, since the occasion of the act has passed. We can almost always in looking over past acts detect something that might have been improved, or should not have been done. Human beings are not infallible. It may also be that in some slight matter some expense has been incurred, that by some possibility might have been avoided, as for instance, I have heard some democrats grumble because the board would hire a livery team from a republican livery-man, and some republican swear of the county's expenses when the board would hire a team of a democratic livery-man. But when we are informed that it is the duty of the board to look after the completion of the ditches, to see to the construction and repairs of all the bridges in the county, to look after or provide for all the poor or paupers, to see to the county property, and to scrutinize, audit, allow or reject, all the claims and accounts of the township and county officers, it requires no small amount of time, and necessarily involves the visiting of many parts of the county.

As stated above, some mistakes may have been committed, and no error is so likely to be committed as the doing of an act on the representation of a lot of individuals of a particular locality, without going and looking into it for themselves, and even then they will find two factions, one in favor of, and the other opposed to it, and it will make no difference what the board may do they will be cussed anyhow—they will be d—d if they do, and they will be d—d if they don't. There is not a locality in the county, not even the smallest subdivision, as a road district, but what you will find therein one or more persons who do not want the board to expend money of the county for some purpose, and the more that person thinks he wants it, the more he will rip and swear about it and find fault with the board.

Recently the county was compelled by the court to pay $175, because a previous board did not examine a bridge to see that it was safe and not rotten. The bridge appeared all right, and a man with a load of brick broke it down, killing one horse, injuring himself and the other horse, breaking his wagon and harness. The court held it was the duty of the commissioners to examine and see if the bridges are safe, and if they do not thus examine, and be sure of their safety to the traveling public, the county is liable for the damages. This is the law in this state, and how many such accidents and payments of damages have been prevented by the board "running around over the county," neither you nor I, nor the grumblers, can begin to tell, nor in fact can the commissioners themselves tell. But enough for the present.

—We saw Charley Emanuel coming home from Antwerp, Ohio, Monday evening. He was afoot.

—Enos Kuhlman, traveling agent for J. C. Jackson & Co's. jewelry house, was in the city last week.

—Rob. McClellan has been on the sick list for several days past, but is convalescent at present.

—"Sellers' Liver Pills" never fail to cure billiousness, indigestion, or headache. Sold by all druggists.

—For the "new home" sewing machine, the best and cheapest in the world, go to A. H. Putt, Garrett, Ind.

—The state board of agriculture is to secure the attendance of President Hayes at the coming state fair.

—Our exchanges say that quinine is going up instead of down. In this vicinity it is going down—the hole.

—Not a single cow, horse, mule, etc., can be seen running at large on our streets after Old Sol goes to rest.

—We noticed Col. John Casebeer, proprietor of the depot restaurant at Garrett, and wife, in the city on Saturday.

—We heard a young gent remark that he had captured a "speckled beauty." Wonder if he means a freckled-faced girl.

—The town marshal is giving the street crossings a general overhauling, and putting down a number of new ones.

—John Hartman, formerly clerk at the Swineford house, is suffering from a badly swollen face, caused by being poisoned.

—We are informed that Allie Sheffer, daughter of John Sheffer, living south of town, is dangerously ill with typhoid pneumonia.

—Lightning-rod men are getting numerous in this vicinity. We noticed three or four outfits on the streets Wednesday morning.

—A junior base ball nine from this city visited Waterloo Saturday last and walked away with our neighbors by a score of 20 to 10.

—If Noah ever had the number of flies reduced to "a pair," he was a greater fraud than Hayes, for not exterminating them.

—The supreme court has decided that a citizen of the state need not be a resident of the county, to get a license to sell liquor therein.

—Farmers, remember that Schaab, Beugnot & Co., are paying the highest market price for wheat. Be sure and see them before selling.

—B. D. Harris, deputy clerk, and wife, left last Thursday for a tour around the lakes to Milwaukee, and thence to Waukesha, Wis.

—New goods are being received at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's., almost every day. The latest styles of all goods for ladies' use, always in stock.

—The new sidewalk in front of the business houses of Davis, Austin, Tarney, Willis and Eldridge, is a good and substantial improvement.

—Married, at the residence of Rev. Johnson, in Auburn, on Thursday, July 31st, Mr. E. B. Salander to Miss Ada Hilton, both of Pleasant Lake.

—We notice through our exchanges that meetings of soldiers are being called to make preparations for the soldiers' reunion, to be held at this place.

—Owing to the oppressiveness of the weather and the illness of Rev. Mr. Norris, there were no services at the M. E. church last Sabbath evening.

—"They cannot all lie," was the observation of one while reading the endless testimonials to "Dr. Lindsey's Blood Searcher." It is infallible.

—A lady says, to kill insects on house plants, she uses a teaspoonful of kerosene to a gallon of water, and sprinkles it on the plants with a hand-broom.

Does'nt Mitch Houston look as though he was a judge of good beef? His very looks indicate that he would handle nothing but first-class meat at his market.

—We learn that the dance at Waterloo, last Thursday evening, was not a success financially, but the participants from this place report a very pleasant time.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Davenport, left for Otsego, Mich., last Monday, for the benefit of the latter's health. Otsego is said to be the highest point in the state named.

—Col. John Casebeer, formerly of this place, but late of Garrett, has leased the Crosby house, at Defiance, Ohio, and will take charge of the same in a few days.

—The engine on the passenger train going east on the Eel River railroad got out of whack Saturday, about a mile east of this city, and delayed all trains about ten hours.

—Marion Hollinger, who has been employed at the stave factory of C. Beugnot & Co. for several years past, got the g. b. last Saturday, and "skipped the town."

—H. G. Garmire has opened a new harness shop in Auburn, at the old Shilling stand. He invites the farmers and everybody to call and examine his stock before buying.

—Auburn people who own cows should be getting their pens and stables ready to keep them inclosed at night. The marshal will be after them on the 15th of this month.

—At a meeting of the town board last Tuesday evening, Mr. John Treesh was appointed school trustee. The appointment being made necessary by Mr. C. C. Shafer refusing to qualify.

—The party who took those pictures and letters from a coat belonging to Byron Rainier, while hanging in Dr. Spooner's barn, had better return them before they get themselves into trouble.

—The citizens of Auburn deserve credit for their promptness in complying with the sidewalk ordinance. Nothing adds more to the appearance of a town than good side-walks and clean streets.

—If there is a chromo agent within seventy-five miles of this office, we would like to have him call, or send us a sample with price list, as we are indebted to Col. Durkee for valuable services.

—I. N. Cool returned yesterday from another trip to Cincinnati, where he purchased his sixth car-load of buggies. We expect, ere long, to see every man in the county taking his ease in a Cincinnati buggy.

—Messrs. Schaab, Beugnot & Co., have the largest stock of clothing ever brought to Auburn, which is being offered at lower figures than ever before known. Call and examine their goods and be convinced.

—The report that Mr. J. U. Carmer was about to die from the effects of the wound received some time since, was not well founded. Hemorrhage of the scalp caused some alarm a few nights ago, but with prompt treatment at the time, and careful attention since, he is getting well as fast as could be expected.

—Read the advertisement for the Tri-State fair, at Toledo, Ohio. Northeastern Indiana will be well represented.

—George Baldock has a new process for pickling beets. Coop Ralston has the recipe, and you can get it from him gratis.

—Our communications from Spencerville couldn't be squeezed in this week; they are in type, however, and will be found on the first page of our next issue.

—Fort Wayne is at last to have water works. At the election last Tuesday, there were 2,734 votes polled, of which 2,166 were for, and 568 against them—a whopping majority on the right side.

—An old man named Barnhart, living near butler, went to his eternal rest on his eightieth birthday, Tuesday, and was buried yesterday. Such is life, though eighty years is a long period between the cradle and the tomb.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co have commenced buying wheat at the Saginaw elevators, and we think it will be to the interest of all those having wheat to sell, to call and see them, as they will pay as much as you can get anywhere.

—Mr. Ed. Baker will hereafter deliver bread, daily, to any part of the city, free of charge. The first delivery will be made next Monday; those desiring bread at that time, will please leave their orders at the bakery on or before Saturday next.

—We have a few gossipers in this city who can raise more hell to the square foot of ground than the worst hurricane that ever blew over the earth's surface. We gain our knowledge from one who has been a subject, who says there is no mistake in the assertion.

—We are compelled to suspend operations in our job department for a day or two this week, in order to make some repairs. Our customers will please be as indulgent as possible; we will not keep them waiting long, though we are very much crowded with work.

—An exchange gives the following recipe for pic-nic lemonade: "Take a tub of water, a few lemons, more or less sugar, a huge lump of ice, a large amount of imagination, and another tub of water to keep the lemonade tub filled up, and you have it without limit."

—Women, like newspaper foremen, are sometimes troubled about making up their forms.—Waterloo Observer. Particularly if there is a scarcity of live matter.—Valpo. Messenger. The Messenger is right. It is hard to justify any "form" without the necessary matter to make it up.

—We noticed it while taking our usual walk Saturday evening—that is, noticed a young lady whirl on her heel, retract half a square (with a parcel under her arm), and drop in at the nearest neighbors to prevent passing us on the street. Who'd 'a' thunk it, as good lookin' as we are?

—Having engaged in a partnership in business, for the future, we desire speedily to close up all accounts. Those knowing themselves indebted to either of us on open account will please call and settle the same, either by cash or note. And oblige,
T. G. Matheny,
J. B. Casebeer.

—Go and witness the Hillsdale Regatta, at Baw Beese lake, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 13th and 14th. The Ft. W. J. & S. railroad will sell excursion tickets at greatly reduced rates, good to return on any train not later than the 15th. Those who love sport should witness the contest between the crack crews of the northwest.

—Marshal Scott is now circulating a subscription list for the purpose of raising money to gravel the streets of Auburn. The money will be expended to the very best advantage. About 30 good shovelers will be employed at $1.10 each, to load cars at the gravel pit of the Saginaw railroad. The town trustees will pay for the use of the gravel train, and the citizens are volunteering to unload the cars when they arrive here. Our people are all interested in having good streets, and they are taking the proper steps to secure them with little expense to the town. Everyone should lend a helping hand.

—We see that the managers of the northeastern Indiana fair, which is to come off at some point in DeKalb county at some future time—perhaps it may be this year yet—got their premium list printed at a job office in Indianapolis, although there are three printing offices in the county, and more than a dozen in the region embraced by the fair, that could have turned out a better specimen of work. Of course the managers will go to Indianapolis for free notices for their fair!—Indianian.

Correct again. DeKalb county could not only "have turned out a better specimen of work," but could have done it for less money than we understand was paid for that. It is due to the managers of the association to say, however, that they are willing to pay for local notices, although the Courier donated all notices last year for the good of the cause.

—Whistles of steam threshers can be heard in almost any direction.

—Messrs. Wm. Sheffer and S. H. Rush have formed a copartnership, under the firm name of Sheffer & Rush, in the harness, saddle and carriage-trimming business. A full stock of light and heavy harness, saddles, collars, whips, &c, &c, always on hand. Carriages and buggies trimmed in first-class style, at low rates. Give the boys a call, at the old stand of G. Rhodenbaugh.

—Harvest for the M. D.'s has commenced.

—Mrs. J. A. Reed, who has been under the doctor's care for the past week, is reported better.

—Mrs. D. Young is recovering from an attack of bilious fever.

—An adopted daughter of Isaac Gunsenhouser (daughter of J. R. Nichols) was reported as dying late last night.

—A harvest meeting will be held in the grove of O. H. Widney, on Sunday, the 17th of August, under the management of the Dunkard church. Everybody is invited to come, and don't forget to bring baskets well filled.

—The corner-stone of the new Lutheran church at this place will be laid Aug. 26th. Rev. Kelso of Spencerville, officiating. An invitation to all is extended.

—A building to be occupied as a variety store, is to be erected on the corners west of town. Architect, Geo. Wade.

—The doctor at Spencerville will sell bottled beer for the next 30 days, for 100 per cent profit, i. e., 17 cents per bottle, with the privilege of drinking the same anywhere in the town, except on his premises. Two-cent pieces taken for quarter dollars.

—Any one visiting Spencerville will do well to pay the store of Barny Bro's a visit, whether wishing to purchase goods or not. They sell everything dirt cheap, and then the boys know how to treat their customers; everybody is treated alike, rich and poor. There is Dick with his sanctimonious-looking face, making you always feel as if you were almost "over there", and Sol. Reaks and Mart to call you up to smoke, providing you have the required nickel.

Queen of the Oven.

A biscuit made with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is certainly the queen of the oven. So light, white and enjoyable! After breakfasting on biscuits made with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder what man would grumble because his wife asked him for money?

45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

TEUFEL'S LAND.

BY W. E. COFIELD.

Walpurgis week, or the week of darkness, is truly a week of terror to the inhabitants of the Hartz mountains and vicinity. During this week neither aged nor young can be found bold enough to act as guide over the mountains, to the chagrin of the luckless tourist who is compelled to imitate the action of the peasants and "remain indoor until Walpurgis night is over." Goblins, bogies, specters and Brocken witches come forth from their retreats for their annual feast and ball. Oppressive silence, save the demon's laugh, broods over the land, and spirits lost hold undisputed sway.]

A glorious sunset gleams
 Upon the wild and rugged Hartz,
Gilding in bright silver sheens
 Its frowning, dark, unseemly parts—
Tinging the woods with golden hue,
Lighting the lakes with azure blue,
 As slow the waning day departs.

But hush! for 'tis Walpurgis night,
And now goblins take their flight
O'er hill and dale and dell,
Led on by demons fell,
Laughing devils of giant make,
And bogies of most horrid shape;
Grim specters of the lost appear,
With mournful wailings sad to hear.
The powers of darkness hold their sway
And pounce upon their frightened prey,
With hollow sound and rumblings low,
As to their orgies thus they go,
To hold a feast and revel wild
O'er man, or maid, or wanton child.

Stir not without this darksome night,
For dread goblins take delight
To catch you unawares
In pits, and falls, and snares.
Children, unless they wish to die,
Must not be cross, nor fret, nor cry,
Or they perchance among the rest
Will help to make "Walpurgis feast."
In lonely forest far away,
Upon the mountain side—they say—
The feast is spread, and spirits fierce
With horrid looks so dark that scarce
The prince of demons could surpass—
Gulp down their human food en masse.

"Pour forth the wine of human gore
And drink as we were wont of yore;"
Thus speaks a king of devils,
And at his word each revels,
Devouring food of human kind,
In "Gast Mahl"—and red gory wine—
Side dishes and removes the same
Is served to each of satan's clan.
Revel loud and wild, ye chosen band,
Brought hither at my sole command.
Mortals live, and mortals quickly die,
Racked by sharp pains they cry.
Why then what harm when we relieve
An untired youth of future grief?

We drop adown the curtain dark,
And thus a transient life is marked—
No sorrow then they know,
For thus 'tis all must go.
The oldest to the latest birth
Must soon return to mother earth.
Then haste, O hasten, "Brocken Witches,"
With vain mortals and their riches,
Cast them in the "Teufel's Kessel"
And join the dance around the festal,
With red and dripping gore fill up
The goblin's ancient drinking cup;
Let all be merry at the feast,
From greatest to the very least.
Then away to gay Hexentanzplatz
Where witches hold their orgies at;
Join in the mystic ring
And dance, and laugh, and sing.
Let music rule the hour
And mortals frail will cower
At sounds as strange and weird
As mankind ever heard—
They dare not venture out
Whene'er we are about;
They hide, and trembling flee
At noises of our glee—
Well may ye mortals frail
In our dread presence quail.
You foiled our ruler's plan,
And robbed him of his land.
He builded Teufelsmauer
To hold his subjects there;
But then a mystic power
At daylight's early hour
Threw down his prided Mau'r
And left the gate ajar;
His subjects changed to slaves,
And he must hide in caves
To shun the daylight's hour
And strong supernatural power;
But comes our time at last—
Man rules while demons fast,
And smiles with satisfaction sure-
But when the chosen hour
Had made its yearly tour
And brought us hither here,
He turns aside in fear
From specters dark and drear,
And bides his time indoor
'Till Walpurgus week is o'er—

But harken to that roar;
Our carnival is o'er
Says Satan's under king.
No longer must we sing—
Through tangled fern or brake
Each must himself betake
To native home; or fate
May wave his magic wand
O'er this enchanted land
And leave you faint and weak.
Stop not your thirst to slake,
Lest daylight find you here,
And pow'rs of light appear
To rob you of your fame
And leave a broken name,
For you'll not power possess
To revel with the rest.
Then farewell, comrades, all,
And subjects of the ball,
Let's up, away, and leave
For mountain home and cave,
To bide our time of year,
When we'll again appear
To hold our festives here;
With revels wild to cheer
Our comrades one and all,
And witches of the ball.
So speed ye while ye can Unto your native land."

Morning dawned all bright and gay,
 With dew-wet wings of golden light,
And ushers in the new-born day
 On downy pinions shining bright
The King of Day rolls up the curt'n dark,
Bespangl'd o'er with dew of diamond spark,
 And scatters hence the dreary night.

BELLE RIVE, Ill.

WOULD HE REMEMBER!

BY PRESLEY W. MORRIS.

There was no moon on that night. Dark clouds overspread the heavens. Occasionally the wind swept by with a mournful sound.

Locksley Hall lifted its walls toward the sky amidst a multitude of giant trees. On this night one standing close to it could barely discern the great building outlined against the dark sky.

Out at a side door slipped a young girl. She walked away from the house. In a place where the great trees were thickest overhead she paused. All was blackness. She shivered, and drew her shawl about her. It was a September night, and cool.

"He should be here," she murmured.

"He is here," said a voice. "Dear Katie!"

"Herbert!"

Then a pair of strong arms folded the girl, and kisses were rained upon her face.

"My sweet, my love!"

"Herbert, I did not dream you were so near."

"No? But you should know, my darling, that I would be punctual to the minute. You are a little late."

"I could not come sooner. Papa kept me reading to him. I was glad to go away when I did."

"I was not upbraiding you, Katie."

"I know you were not."

Then they were silent for a time, content to hold each other's hands.

"When shall I make all known, Katie?" asked the man, presently.

"Oh, I don't know. I dread to tell papa. You know the feud between him and your papa has raged for so long and been so high."

"I can manage my father."

"I fear it will be different with me. I sometimes feel as if papa will never give us his blessing."

And so the conversation ran. But lovers' interviews cannot last forever, and at length the two separated.

The young man's name was Herbert Fontain. His father owned an estate adjoining that of the owner of Locksley Place.

After parting from Katie, Herbert slowly pursued his way along a dark path. Hearing a rapid step behind him, he turned into another path.

"Fenwick!" called a voice.

Herbert did not answer. He knew the voice well. It was Arthur Locksley's, the father of Katie.

"Fenwick!" was called again.

Still the young man was silent. He knew that it would provoke Mr. Locksley's anger to know that he, a Fontain, was a trespasser on his estate at that hour of the night.

Mr. Locksley said no more, but kept on his way in another path. Herbert also continued on. Some words were continually running through his brain. They were, "Kittie, my love! Kittie, my love!"

Directly, however, he paused. He was bewildered. He did not know where he was. For a moment he hesitated.

"Pshaw! this is ridiculous, that I should lose my way at the door of my own house, fairly. But the night is terrible dark."

Then he went on. He had proceeded but a short distance when he heard a man say:

"I could not come to Locksley Place after you ordered me not to set foot within your door again, so there was nothing for it but to write you to meet me here."

Herbert saw a building faintly outlined a short distance before him, and discovered where he was. This structure was an old house on the Locksley estate, uninhabited save by bats and owls.

"And I suppose, Mr. Fenwick Locksley," returned the voice of Katie's father, "that something very important must have brought you here What crime have you committed?"

"None that will bring the law on me yet. I only want a few hundred dollars to keep me out of a debt of honor."

"You can't have it, sir!"

"Then I shall do what you so much fear—commit something desperate. I must have money by fair means or foul. I am not particular, but I know that you dread to have the Locksley name stained with crime."

"I give you over to the devil!" cried Arther Locksley. "You have held that threat over me long enough. Obtain what you want as best you can!"

Then followed a moment's silence. This Fenwick Locksley, a wild and dissipated young man, was Arthur Locksley's nephew.

"Then this is final?" the young man at length asked.

"Yes."

"And the money?"

"What money?"

"That I say I must have."

"Scoundrel! Dissipated wretch! I repeat, get it as best you can."

Arthur Locksley was a passionate man, and his anger was rising fast.

"Beware!" cried the young man. "You forget that I have your hot blood in my veins."

"Wretch, dare not to threaten me, or —"

Herbert Fontain heard a blow, followed quickly by a sharp report. He rushed toward the old house, found the entrance, and, as he burst in, he heard a sound like the falling of a trap-door. It was that, and he concluded that the body of Arthur Locksley had been dropped into a vault beneath the old mansion.

As he rushed in, he encountered the figure of a man. He seized him. There was a blinding flash. Thunders, as of the rending of the universe, rang in his ears. Then he turned and fled madly on, on, till he sank to the earth, unconscious.

* * * * *

Herbert Fontain raised himself with a start. The sun streamed in his face through the trees. He was lying in a woodland path.

"What means this? How could I have got here?" he asked himself.

He sought his home. The sun was some hours high when he reached it. As he entered he encountered his brother.

"Well, Herbert, my boy, been taking a morning walk?" he asked.

"Yes," answered Herbert, confusedly. He went to his room. One thought was puzzling him.

"How came I there in the forest?"

On his temple was a livid mark.

CHAPTER II.

It was 1 o'clock in the afternoon. A slender, girlish figure was hastening up the avenue to the Fontain residence. She was very pretty, with wonderful brown eyes, cherry lips and crimson cheeks, usually, but pale enough now. She raised the heavy brass knocker at the entrance and rapped timidly. A servant answered.

"Mr. Herbert Fontain?" she said, inquiringly.

"Yes, miss. Walk in, and I will speak to him."

The young girl was ushered into the library. In a few moments a firm tread echoed along the hall, and Herbert entered.

"Why, Katie!" he cried, unable to say anything else, in sheer astonishment at seeing her there.

The girl fell on his breast and burst into tears.

"Poor, dear papa!" she sobbed.

"What of him?" asked Herbert.

"He is gone! I feel he is dead!"

"What!"

"He has disappeared and left no trace. I have not seen him since last night."

Herbert's hands flew up to his temples.

"Last night!" he muttered; nothing more, however. Memory was seeking to assert herself, but the effort was vain.

"Herbert, what can we do?"

"We can institute a search, at least," said Herbert. "Darling, I am glad you came to me. I will go over to Locksley place with you."

"Come, dear, as soon as possible," said the poor child.

"I will go now," he said.

On the way they said but few words. Arriving there, the young man dispatched a servant to town for officers. With the assistance of the officers and the servants search was made. In vain. Night approached, and still no trace could be found of Arthur Locksley.

"I will go home for a brief space," said Herbert. "It is strange father has not been here this afternoon."

He was alone with Katie when he addressed those words to her.

"Oh, Herbert, it seems like a punishment upon me that papa should disappear while I was with you last night," she said.

"With me last night!" he said, in astonishment. "I have no recollection of it."

The girl opened her eyes in surprise.

"Why, Herbert!" she cried, "I was."

This time he did not contradict her.

"Alone in the forest this morning!" he thought. "No recollection of how I came there! There is some dreadful mystery here. I wish my poor mind could clear it."

Still memory did not aid him.

Going up the avenue to his home half an hour later, he overtook his father. One glance at his face showed that that he had not heard the sad news.

"Dear father, where have you been this afternoon?" asked Herbert.

"I started off in a hurry at 1 o'clock with a geologist, to explore Watkins creek. I just a moment ago returned."

"Then you have not heard?"

"Heard what, my son?"

"Mr. Locksley has mysteriously disappeared."

"No!"

"Ay."

Mr. Fontain was deeply shocked.

"Has search been made?"

"Yes."

"Can no trace be found?"

"None. It is a very mysterious affair."

The front entrance was reached. At that moment some horsemen rode up to the avenue gate. They dismounted and hurried up to the house. Herbert and his father paused, waiting for them. They soon reached the house.

"Mr. Fontain," said one, then hesitated.

"Mr. Hilton," said Herbert's father.

Mr. Hilton was the Sheriff of the county.

"Mr. Fontain," he continued, while his voice trembled, "I have a painful duty to perform. Information has been lodged against you, and I am compelled to arrest you upon the charge of murdering Arthur Locksley. Permit me, while discharging my duty, to express my utter disbelief in the charge."

Mr. Fontain paled. He did not utter a word at first, seeming too much astonished to do so. Herbert advanced as though he would strike the officer. Then his father found his tongue.

"My son," he said, gently, "Mr. Hilton is blameless in this matter. Wait till you find the accuser."

He turned suddenly to the Sheriff.

"Who is my accuser?"

"Mr. Fenwick Locksley."

At the mention of that name Herbert's hands again sought his temples.

"Oh, would that I could recollect!" he cried. "My poor head will burst if I do not."

The party, including Mr. Fontain and his son, reached the county town an hour afterward. Herbert had first seen Katie to tell her where he was going and what for.

"Oh, this dreadful charge is not true," wept Katie; "Herbert, your father is innocent; I know he is."

During that ride Mr. Fontain had scarcely spoken, only to say—

"Confront me with my accuser; confront me with my accuser as soon as possible."

In a magistrate's office that was done. Fenwick Locksley was very pale, but his lips were set firmly. It was a desperate game he was playing, but one he considered necessary to his safety.

"So you say that I killed Arthur Locksley?" Mr. Fontain said, haughtily.

"Yes," said Fenwick, boldly.

"Have you any other grounds than the feud which existed between us upon which to found your accusations?"

"I have. I saw you do the deed. I rushed upon you. You felled me to the earth. I know all save what disposition you made of the body."

Mr. Fontain's eyes flashed fire.

"Fenwick Locksley, you lie!" he cried, indignantly.

At the beginning of this interview Herbert Fontain's hands flew up to his temples. His features worked painfully. As Fenwick Locksley uttered his last words, he sprung before him and looked upon him with flashing eyes for a moment.

"At last I remember!" he cried. "Fenwick Locksley, you are the murderer of your uncle! You killed him near the old mansion on his own estate. You threw his body into the vault beneath. Murderer! Your hands are stained with innocent blood!"

With a muttered curse Fenwick Locksley sprung toward the door of his room. But half a dozen men sprung upon him. He fought like a madman; but was soon overpowered.

* * * * * * * *

Dear reader, when, in as short a time after as possible, Arthur Locksley was taken out of the dark vault, all present expected to behold a mangled corpse. But it was not so, for as he was lifted out, he opened his eyes and groaned. He was badly hurt, but he did not die, and upon the events of that night was founded the reconciliation between the houses of Locksley and Fontain. And Herbert married Katie.

Fenwick Locksley escaped from jail, and was never heard of afterward.

Herbert Fontain had a small scar on his forehead caused by the pistol shot that deprived him of the power of remembering the events of that fateful evening.

Curiosities of the Animal World.

DEATH is generally the result of a gopher getting within reach of a cat; and, just to see the fun, the boys in Edwards Bros. & Noble's, at Kinsley, Kan., put a young gopher in a box with an old cat and young kittens. Instead of being pounced upon and torn to pieces, the gopher was adopted by the old cat, and suckled and treated as one of the kittens.

A MAN living at Worth, Ga., bought a fine large Cotswold ram, and turned the ram into a pasture with some other sheep. Previously he had lost a number of sheep from the ravages of dogs. One morning, a few weeks after he had received the ram, he saw it at full tilt butting something on the ground. On approaching nearer he found a dead dog, with every bone in its body broken. Near by was a lamb, badly torn and bleeding, which the dog had attacked.

IN Grant county, Ky., a few days ago, as Dr. Mileham and J. T. Mann were going to Eagle creek from Williamstown, they saw a huge snake lying across the road. The doctor drove over it to crush it, but did not succeed in doing so; and the serpent wound itself around one of the wheels and struck several times at the doctor's throat, who finally grasped it by the neck, while Mann mashed its head. It measured ten feet four inches in length and six inches in diameter.

MR. WILSON, of Butler county, Ky., had a fearful and successful fight with a large snake a few days ago. Mr. Wilson was working on a place of new ground when the serpent sprang upon him and coiled about him. Mr. Wilson was at first almost paralyzed, but in a moment regained his composure sufficiently to grasp the enemy by its neck and choke it until it was forced to let go. He then took a hoe and killed him. The snake measured six feet five inches in length, and was two and three-fourths inches in diameter in the largest part of its body.

THERE is a species of stinging scorpion found in the river bottoms of Western Texas. Immediately after the birth of her young, the female places them in a basket-shaped receptacle on her back, where they at once attach attach themselves and begin sucking her blood. Of course, the mother soon succumbs to this unfilial treatment and begins to droop. The young ones are by this time sufficiently nourished to demand more substantial food, and they kill their mother and devour her. Should one of the young ones become detached from the living nest, it is at once killed and feasted upon by the mother. Thus it seems that, while the female willingly sacrifices her life to her offspring, yet she does not hesitate to kill them should they be so devoid of instinct as to refuse to remain where she places them after birth. While this is going on, the male parent stands around, evidently "bossing the job."

A GENTLEMAN writes from Cabanus, Va., to the Cincinnati Commercial: "As my sons were going to plow they heard a noise near the roadside, and, on looking, they saw a large king snake coiled around a heavy copperhead snake, with the head of the venomous reptile in his mouth. One of the boys got a forked stick and carried the serpent to the house, about 300 yards distant, but the king snake did not unloose the hold upon the head of its victim. The two were placed near the window where I was sitting, and I watched them nearly an hour. They seldom moved. This was about sundown. Curious to see how they would make it, and fearing the copperhead would get away, I had a fork run through its body and fastened to the ground. Now it looked as if the king snake had sucked everything out of the copperhead's body. After dark, by the light of a lamp, we saw that the king snake had uncoiled and was fast swallowing the other. At the expiration of half an hour we took out the fork, and the king snake started off with its prey. We put in the fork again, and then turned a box over them until morning. There then appeared but one snake—the king snake—and when released it glided away."

A PARTY of ladies and gentlemen went to High Knob, Pa., on a whortleberry excursion. One of the party took along a small black-and-tan terrier dog. While all hands were gathering berries the dog wandered off into the thicket, and was soon heard barking. One of the men hurried to the spot and saw the dog with a big rattlesnake in his mouth, shaking it fiercely. He seized a stick, and, taking a few steps forward, was startled by a loud rattling noise a few yards to his right. Giving a glance in that direction, he saw scores of rattlesnakes coiled and sounding their rattles. He took a small fish-horn which he had tied to his belt, and blew it to call together the rest of the party. Soon three other men arrived. They armed themselves with sticks, and, moving cautiously to within reaching distance, began the battle. When it was over the victors counted thirty-eight dead snakes, measuring from two and a half to five feet in length, and some having as many as twenty rattles.

Remarkable Accident.

A heavy rain fell here Monday. It is thought that a waterspout burst at the head waters of Flat creek, which caused the creek to rise with wonderful rapidity. The water came down in mountain waves. A Mr. Henry Stokes, an old resident of this county, who lives on Flat creek, started across the creek on a visit to his mother-in-law's in a wagon, accompanied by his wife and two children. He drove into the creek, which was not past fording. The horses' bits broke, they became unmanageable, and turned down stream. Stokes heard a rumbling sound upstream. Looking in that direction, he saw a huge wave of water, six or eight feet high, moving down on him. He seized his two children and jumped into the water. His wife followed with an infant. The waves rolled over both parents. They lost the children in the struggle. Stokes and his wife drifted down stream seventy-five yards. Stokes sank. His wife gathered him by the top of the head and buoyed him up until an island was reached. Both were exhausted. Cries for help brought neighbors. Ropes were thrown to them, and they were drawn ashore. Their children were drowned. The horses were drowned and the wagon washed away.—Sedalia (Mo.) Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Miss Braddon at York.

A California gentleman, who had the pleasure of a visit and a hearty reception at the house of Mrs. Maxwell (Miss Braddon), speaks in glowing terms of the home life of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell have several little children, the youngest a boy of 4 years, all of whom took their places at the table. Her works were not once alluded to by herself. If any questions were asked regarding her writings, she answered in a plain, straightforward manner. I said, "Miss Braddon, will you allow me to ask you about your books?" "Why, certainly," said she, "if that will interest you." I asked her what part of the day most of her literary work was done in. "At any time," she answered, "but I find my brain clearer in the early morning. I rise at 7 o'clock, walk in the grounds for half an hour, then write for an hour; by that time I generally feel ready for a good hearty breakfast. During the day, if an opportunity occurs, or if I feel in the humor, I write, never longer than an hour or two at the very most. I am like a great many people, and do not like to commence, although I have thought out my work beforehand. However, I find when I set myself down to real work that my thoughts find vent, and my pen will not write fast enough." "Does it not tire you?" "No, I never tire of writing. At one time when I first began, I did not know what I was going to say, but now I learn that, like everything else, thoughts will be more completely expressed by having one's plan perfected beforehand." "Can you foresee your strongest chapters?" "I seem to know which they will be, and find when I get into the story deeper that I am far more interested in my characters than any of my readers can ever be. For the time being I see them, hear them speak, and note the manner in which they express themselves. In fact, to me they are living, breathing personages, my familiar spirits." "How do you plan the end? This seems always the most difficult part of them." "I do not plan them. I follow up my story as if I were reading some one else's writing. The characters and the manner in which they have figured lead me to the end; and, indeed I feel a real regret at being compelled to part with them."

A Crystallized Woman.

Another very remarkable instance, we are informed, says an English paper, has just come to light as to the preserving or petrifying effects of nitrate of soda. A well-known and influential city firm, who have extensive connections with South American planters, miners, etc., have recently received from Peru a curiosity in the shape of what may be termed a crystallized female body, which as their correspondents advise them, was some short time since discovered by a set of miners at Pisague, in that country, completely imbedded in one of the great nitrate of soda deposits peculiar to the district. The body is described as having the appearance of a petrified mummy, and is stated to be in a singular state of preservation. This curiosity has already been seen by some of our best-known naturalists and analysts, and it is believed that the woman, who apparently was of middle age, must have perished through accident or design at a remote period of the past, as some even go so far as to say 2,000 or 3,000 years ago. That her death was violent there is little room to doubt, inasmuch as when discovered the body was in a recumbent position, partly on the side, with chest slightly crushed as if through a severe fall, the legs drawn up, and the fingers and toes contracted. The hair is in a most perfect state, and maintains its contact with the skull in a peculiarly astonishing manner, and the mouth is open displaying the teeth and tongue, which are plainly visible. The extremities are remarkably small and perfect, even the nails being in their respective places. The hair on the head, we should add, appears to be plaited in a very peculiar manner, and is of great length and thickness, though in some parts detached, owing to part of the skull having been destroyed.

European Forest Areas.

The land covered with forests in Europe is said to be 29 per cent. of the whole area. Russia contains 40 per cent. of woodland, of which 200,000,000 acres consists of cone-bearing trees. Sweden and Norway have 34 per cent., birch, maple, pine, fir and willow. Austria has 19 per cent., Germany has 26 per cent., and France 17. France is making strong efforts to bring her area up to 25 per cent., which is considered to be the normal quantity to reach the best results in the cultivation of general crops. Spain, Holland and Belgium have but 7 per cent.; Portugal, 5 per cent., and Great Britain but 4 per cent. The latter country is greatly assisted by the natural humidity of the climate, which makes the conservation of forests not so great a necessity.

A New Textile Fabric.

An account is given in the French journals of a new and interesting invention, namely, a method of producing a cloth from glass, which has some special advantages over the ordinary textiles, that is, it is produced in all colors, and of different strengths, and is also incombustible, this latter property rendering it valuable for those who have to work near a fire or flames. It is also adapted for ladies' dresses, and for other purposes, in place of silk, and it is said to be more glossy and lustrous, and is moreover easily washed. It is stated to have all the appearance characterizing heavy silk, and is soft and elastic like the latter. Its usefulness, however, must of course depend in a great degree on its durability.

A LAND O'ER THE RIVER.

BY WEBSTER T. BAIR.

They say there's a land o'er the river,
 Where pleasures forever abound;
That the voices of myriad angels
 Sweetly throughout it resound.

They tell me this land is all beauty;
 That flowers forever bloom there;
That storm-clouds and darkness never shadow
 This region so bright and so fair.

They tell me that sin never enters
 This land that is holy and pure;
No death, nor sickness, nor sorrow
 Is there; of this they are sure.

The bright land they tell me is Heaven;
 That Jesus forever is there
Interceding for me with the Father!
 Oh, why should I longer despair!

Many dear ones have passed o'er the river,
 And inhabit this beautiful land;
They are singing the glad hallelujahs
 And beck'ning me on with their hand.

Oh heart! grow not weary in waiting;
 Be patient, and earth's trials stand!
Soon Jesus shall send his bright angels
 To bear thee away to this land.

Be watchful! and trust in Him ever;
 Sometime He will give thee a rest
In this bright happy land o'er the river—
 This beautiful land of the blest.

EXTRACT from a French Mayor's report about an accident to a mule: "The aforesaid mule, on the way from Bangeres to Z——, while crossing a bridge, timid by nature, made a slip and fell into a ravine, whose death was instantaneous." This account is somewhat mixed, but a little study will doubtless straighten it out.

THE late Lord Derby, in replying once to the Duke of Argyll, who had made a fierce attack on him in the House of Lords, said he felt very much like a Lancashire tenant of his who had a little wife who occasionally gave him a beating, whereat the husband used to say, "It does not matter, it employs and amuses her, and does not hurt me."

ONE of our exchanges says: The wife of Mr. Nicholas Elberman fell on the sidewalk and sprained her ankle, with her baby in her arms, yesterday, 1 year old, but the baby was not hurt much except a bad scratch on the left cheek, about an inch from the eye, which it was lucky was not injured by the fall, as the site of the other eye was destroyed by a stick poked into it by its brother several weeks since, 6 years old, in play."

THE following incident is related of the venerable Dr. Nesbit, formerly President of Dickinson College: "It amazes me that ministers don't write better sermons; I am sick of the dull, prosy affairs," said a lady in presence of Dr. Nesbit. "But it is no easy matter, my good woman, to write sermons," suggested the Doctor. "Yes," rejoined the lady, "but you are so long about it. I could write one in half the time if I only had a text." "Oh, if a text is all you want," said Dr. Nesbit, "I will furnish that. Take this one from Solomon: 'It is better to dwell in a corner of a house-top than in a wide house with a brawling woman.'" "Do you mean me, sir?" inquired the lady, quicky. "Oh, my good woman," was the response, "you will never make a sermonizer; you are too soon in your applications."

Senator Chandler said to a Boston Traveller correspondent: "Many years ago I determined to take a course of training in boxing, and I employed one of the best trainers in the country, the man who trained Heenan in his famous prize-fight before the war. I was under this man's charge for at least six months, and in that time became quite an adept in using my fists. I got up a first-class muscle, and have preserved it to this day. No person in the Senate suspects that I am a boxer, or that I can strike a blow of iron, but if I am ever assailed my assailant will discover that I can defend myself without resorting to weapons."

Sound the Loud Timbrel.

Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea!
Jehovah has triumph'd—His people are free.
Sing—for the pride of the tyrant is broken,
His chariots, his horsemen, all splendid and brave.
How vain was their boasting—the Lord hath but spoken,
And chariots and horsemen are sunk in the wave.
Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea!
Jehovah has triumph'd—His people are free.

Praise to the Conqueror, praise to the Lord,
His word was our arrow, His breath was our sword!
Who shall return to tell Egypt the story
Of those she sent forth in the hour of her pride?
For the Lord hath look'd out from His pillar of glory,
And all her brave thousands are dash'd in the tide.
Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea!
Jehovah has triumph'd—His people are free.

Christianizing the Churches.

Even those churches that may be fairly said to belong to Christ show in many of their doings a deplorable lack of respect for the fundamental principles of His religion. The social relation of many of them can hardly be called Christian. The pride and exclusiveness, the lack of friendly sympathy, the division of the body into distinct classes of rich and poor, cultivated and illiterate, between whom no real bond of brotherhood exists—all this is in direct disobedience to the organic law of the Christian church. And not only by these unseemly gradations of rank and caste, but also by the spirit that is manifested in the relations of Christians when they are brought together in the churches, is this law set at naught. There are a great many petty quarrels about small matters, and the inconsistency and shamefulness of this state of things does not seem to be recognized by many church members. Each man wants his own way, and is ready to fight if he cannot have it. In many churches there are chronic dissensions. Are these Christian churches? Look at that wrangling and raging church court now in session in Brooklyn! Is there anything in that city that more needs Christianizing than that presbytery?

The financial methods by which these churches are often managed find no authorization in the New Testament. The principle of competition upon which the commercial operations of society rest, and which is also brought in to regulate the financial affairs of most of our churches, is not a Christain principle. And it can hardly be said that Christian principle has much to do with the secular side of our church organizations. So long as the man who has the money gets the best seat in church, so long as the whole business of distributing sittings proceeds upon a selfish basis, and the aim of each is to get for himself the best accommodations that the place affords at the lowest possible price rather than to seek the comfort and pleasure of the rest, so long as many practices of questionable honesty are resorted to for the replenishment of the treasury of the church, there will be room for a question whether these churches belong to Christ. Indeed there is nothing that stands more in need of Christianizing than the secular affairs of a good many of our churches.

It must also be said that there are certain portions of the Sunday service that can scarcely be called Christian, or even religious, in any sense. To assert that the music which is commonly heard in our churches in worship, or answers any of the purposes of worship, would be hazardous. It is sometimes good art, and sometimes it is not; but it is generally a performance; it is rarely an act of worship. And it is a serious question whether the interests of pure religion throughout the land would not be promoted by abolishing music from all our churches. If it is not to be abolished, the sooner it is Christianized the better.—Sunday Afternoon.

Gave Her Choicest.

They who give only their poorer powers, and present only second-rate offerings, in religious service, sin against their better knowledge. How fixed in the human soul is the conviction that Heaven does not accept such is seen in all the agonizing surrenders and tragic sacrifices of pagan faith.

The insane deed of blood of which the Freeman child, in Pocasset, Mass., was the victim, was a like convulsion of blind obedience—as utterly uncontrolled by the religion and spirit of Jesus as was the act of the poor Hindoo mother of Kedgeree.

This woman lived on the Ganges, near Sanger island, and she had a pair of beautiful twin babes. But one of them was a girl, and blind, and the benighted mother on that account supposed herself under "Gunga's" curse for some offense she had done.

A missionary's wife found her lamenting, and heard the story of her grief. The God must be appeased, the woman said. He was certainly angry, or the children would have been both boys, and with good eyes. She would have to make a sacrifice to soothe his wrath. The Christian lady did what she could to impress her with better teachings, but with little effect. She left her sadly, but not dreaming what the wretched mother meditated doing.

A day or two later the lady called again. As before, the mother sat beside the little basket-cradle weeping—but there was but one babe in the cradle. It was the blind girl. The other had been drowned in the Ganges!

The Christian lady was horror-struck when she knew the truth.

"Unhappy woman!" she exclaimed; then after a silence she added with something more like pity, "If you were driven to do this, why did you destroy the one you loved, and spare the one you hated?"

The woman sobbed and beat her breast. "Oh, it is that that breaks my heart," she said. "The god must have the best. When I had a perfect one he would not take the other. Alas, my boy, my boy!"

Why should so many who live in this land of light be shamed—not by the deed—but by the devotion of such cruel heathen belief? Under the gentle law of Christ we know that God's demand for the best we have only bids us use it for Him, and devote it to Him, not destroy it.

If we serve Him selfishly, may not even the poor, dark-souled Hindoo mother of Kedgeree rise up and condemn us?—Youth's Companion.

Discovery of Another Mastodon.

In 1845 the largest and most perfect skeleton of a mastodon ever found was taken from a swamp in the town of New Windsor, near Newburg, N. Y. It was set up by Dr. Warren, and is now in the Boston Museum.

On July 5 the bones of another mastodon were discovered in the same neighborhood—namely, on the farm of Hugh Kelly, at Little Britain, N. Y. The skeleton appears to be nearly if not quite complete, and the separate bones are in fine condition.

The dimensions of the chief parts of the skeleton found are as follows: The skull is 45 inches long, 28 wide, 29 high, and 23½ between the eyes. The diameter of the nostrils is 6 inches, the nostrils extending into the head 2 feet. Four teeth were found in each jaw in an excellent state of preservation. The enamel is of a bluish tint and unbroken. The four back teeth are eight-pointed, measure 7 by 3½ inches, and stand 3 inches out of the jaw. The four front teeth are six-pointed, and measure 4½ by 3½ inches. The depth of forehead is 18 inches; the eye-sockets are 7 inches in diameter, and the ear-sockets 18 inches in diameter. On each side and above the mouth are holes measuring 6½ inches in diameter, from which probably protruded the tusks, which have not yet been found. These openings extend into the skull a depth of 2 feet. There are 8 fangs on each back tooth and 6 on each front one. The space between the rows of teeth across the jaws measures 7½ inches on the upper and 6½ inches on the lower jaw. In the center of the forehead is a cavity measuring 11 by 4 inches. It cannot be surmised what this cavity indicates, unless it be for a trunk between the tusks corresponding to that of an elephant. The lower jaw was joined to the upper after they had been unearthed, making a perfect skull. It is estimated that the skull complete will not weigh less than 600 pounds.

The fore-leg, including the thigh bone, measures 7 feet in length, and it weighs, it is judged, 150 pounds. The first joint of the hind leg measures 2 feet 5 inches in length, and the second joint of the same leg 3 feet 4 inches. The only part of the other fore-leg yet found is the second joint, measuring 3 feet 10 inches in length. A dozen or more sections of the spine are among the bones unearthed. The largest measures 10 by 16 inches. A score or more other bones are among the lot, among them that of a toe, measuring 6½ by 4½ inches.

These measurements indicate an animal rivaling in size the one described by Dr. Warren.—Scientific American.

How Germany Has Spent the French War Indemnity.

An account has been lately published of the way in which the indemnity paid by France to Germany on the conclusion of the war of 1870-71 has been spent. Altogether, including the war contributions imposed upon Paris and the departments occupied by the German troops, Germany has received from France the sum of 5,254,000,000 francs, or about £210,160,000. Of this sum £91,748,543 were in the first instance set aside for imperial purposes, and the remainder was divided among the several states forming the empire, the old North German Confederation receiving £79,114,235; Bavaria, £13,468,819; Wurtemberg, £4,248,304; Baden, £3,050,593; and Hesse, £1,436,509. Of the £91,748,543 set aside for imperial purposes, £28,033,849 have been appropriated to form a pension fund; £10,800,000 to strengthen, enlarge and add to the number of the fortified places of the empire; £8,580,000 for the purchase and construction of railways in Alsace and Lorraine, and £6,447,142 to improve the fortresses in the two annexed provinces; £6,000,000 have been placed in the imperial war treasury; £600,000 have been awarded in grants for eminent services; £242,740 have been spent in providing a range on which to carry on artillery experiments; £300,000 have been allotted to German subjects expelled from France, while smaller sums have been appropriated to recompense railway companies for the damage done to their rolling-stock; to improve the military, telegraphic and postal services; to compensate German ship-owners for losses sustained during the war; to extend the military topographical department; to enlarge the artillery workshops at Strasburg; to provide commemorative medals, and to construct a building for the Reichstag.—Pall Mall Gazette.

England's Zulu War.

England has seldom engaged in a war in which there was less glory, or in which her people had less heart, than that which seems to be about to close in South Africa. Neither the Kaffirs of early Cape struggles nor the redoubtable Maoris of later New Zealand warfare possessed fighting qualities comparable to those which have been displayed by the Zulus, and certainly neither were attacked on pretexts so flimsy as those which were the occasion of the long campaign against Cetywayo. From the surprise at Isandula to the killing of young Napoleon, the war in Zululand has been prolific in incidents calculated to shake British confidence both in the capacity of the officers and the steadiness of the rank and file of the army. Not even the enormous advances made in the use of arms of precision could compensate for the growing physical incapacity and the prevailing lack of training among British soldiers. The disasters in South Africa may help England to avert future disasters in a more important struggle; but they have been grave enough to obscure the luster of any victory however brilliant, and to make the concession of terms of peace as much like a surrender as a triumph.—New York Times.

The Jablochkoff Electric Light.

In whatever way the argument over electric light may be run, the Jablochkoff shareholders have no right to complain. The net receipts of the European Company for the nine months of 1878 were 1,423,000 francs, including 1,230,000 francs obtained by the sale of the Russian patent. The directors, who are cautious men, applied over 700,000 francs in balancing the expenses incurred at the beginning of their operations. The general expenses of the nine months were 260,000 francs, and the net balance of 400,000 francs passed to the shareholders.

About Macaroni.

The first stanza of the old song entitled "Yankee Doodle" runs:

> "Yankee Doodle came to town
> Upon a little pony;
> He stuck a feather in his hat,
> And called it Macaroni."

It is about this expression, "Macaroni," I wish to write what I have found out by asking questions and reading in books.

In England, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, most of the dandified things of that time—such as table-forks, etc.—came from Italy, and were called "macaroni," which in Italian, derived from a Greek word meaning "very dainty."

About the time of Oliver Cromwell, appeared a verse which some have thought was meant to make fun of him. The verse runs:

> "Yankee Doodle came to town,
> Upon a Kentish pony;
> He stuck a feather in his hat,
> And called it macaroni."

But history says Cromwell came from Huntingdon; and I think he was not the kind of a man to wear feathers and brag of them. He was stout, red-faced, and rather rough; not slim and foppish.

In Sheridan's play, "The School for Scandal," are these lines:

> "Sure, never were seen two such beautiful ponies;
> Other horses are clowns, but these, macaronis.
> To give them this title, I'm sure can't be wrong.
> Their legs are so slim, and their tails are so long."

Washington Irving tells us that, in the war of the revolution, some Maryland regiments, who wore very gay uniforms, were known as "The Macaronis;" and he adds that "they showed their game spirit." So, it seems, they could fight well, besides dressing well.

Another author says: "A hundred years ago, the slang for a certain sort of fop was 'macaroni.' He was distinguished chiefly by the strange way in which he dressed his head; and he wore feathers in his hat."

This is all I have been able to find out about the word "Macaroni," used in the song "Yankee Doodle;" and it seems to mean some thing or body very dainty or finical, and to have very little to do with the food called "macaroni," although that also comes from Italy.—St. Nicholas.

American Competition.

The London Globe says the United States may justly claim to be "going ahead" in their export business, whatever may be thought of their boasted progress in other directions. Unhappily for us, this form of prosperity chances to be the very one most likely to be secured at our expense. For, while our transatlantic cousins are sending us largely-increased quantities of their goods every year, they show less and less inclination to return the favor by taking our commodities. From some valuable statistics, published in the Manchester Courier, it appears that while the value of the total exports from the United States was only £56,122,895 in 1868, it had reached £141,814,430 in 1878, being an increase of £85,692,335, or at the rate of about £8,500,000 per annum. In the last year, however, of this decennial period the increase was close on £19,000,000—a strong indication that the competition our manufacturers encounter from this quarter is likely to become more and more embarrassing. On the other hand, the net imports of merchandise have fallen off steadily since 1873, although the population must now be considerably larger than it was at the former date, and the demand for European goods ought, therefore, to be so much the greater. The natural inference to be drawn from these suggestive statistics seems to be that, while American manufacturers are gradually monopolizing the whole of their own markets, and thus ousting from them our merchants, they are also attacking, with not a little success, the chief centers of demand in Europe.

An Actor at His Prayers.

It is scarcely credible, but nevertheless true, that on the morning of the day on which he is to appear in a new piece, M. Lafontaine goes to offer up a prayer that he may be successful. Some years ago, when he belonged to the Comedie Francaise, a friend met him and his accomplished wife coming out of the same edifice. "The Francaise," said the actor explanatorily, "revives 'Tartuffe' this evening." "What?" exclaimed the friend, "ask God to aid you in playing a part which the clergy hold to be inimical to religion?" "Gently," replied M. Lafontaine; "we prayed that we might be protected this evening, but we did not say that it was for 'Tartuffe.'—The Theater.

Salaries of the Past.

An old Boston merchant says in the Commercial Bulletin: "Speaking of salaries, the highest one I ever knew paid to a salesman was $30,000 a year. This was paid in war times to a dry-goods man, and he used to boast that he and the President of the United States were the only persons in the country receiving so much for their services. I know a man who for years received annually $17,000 for his labors as a salesman. I think it would puzzle him to-day to pay his board bill regularly. Within a few days I saw a man who received at one time a salary of $10,000. He was well up in his trade, but to-day he is simply a beer-drinker."

Land-Owners in Germany.

In a recent German debate, Herr Tiedemann stated that there were in Germany 7,000,000 landed proprietors, 2,000,000 of whom were untaxed as having incomes under $105 a year. Out of the actual taxpayers there were not more than 150,000 whose incomes exceed $750 a year. Forced sales of lands and farms are of daily occurrence, and general distress prevails.

A PHYSICIAN at Salem, Ind., was addicted to opium eating, and his neighbors tried to cure him by tying him to a tree, whipping him severely, and making him take a vow of reformation.

FARM NOTES.

Hints for the Work of the Month.

[From the American Agriculturist for August.]

Rye.—Where the soil is not good enough for wheat, rye will be sown; but, as a general thing, soil that will make a good crop of rye can be made sufficiently rich for wheat by careful preparation, and the use of 250 or 300 pounds of artificial fertilizer.

Drains.—Cut these while the ground is dry. If they have been marked, or laid out previously, the work can be done now, at half the cost of doing it when the ground is full of water. This season is better than any other for reclaiming swamp meadows.

Wheat requires a fine and mellow soil, it is best if compact below and roughish on the top. If there are any clods, these should be brought up from below by repeated harrowings, and broken by the roller or the disk harrow. If they can not be broken up completely they are better on the top than below the surface. A roller will break many.

Liming Land.—Lime is an old-fashioned fertilizer, but it should not for that reason be neglected. It is cheap, and rarely fails to pay well for its use when land is to be seeded to grass and clover. Forty bushels per acre of air-slaked lime is usually spread from the wagon with a long-handled shovel upon the plowed ground, and harrowed in with the seed. It will do no harm to put on the lime immediately after the manure, if it is harrowed in at once.

The Stubbles are now idle upon most farms. This is not desirable; dry weather at this season seriously interferes with plowing, and the work cannot be well done if it is delayed. As soon as the oats have been removed the ground should be plowed, and, if the weather continues dry, it should be cultivated or worked with the harrow. The disk or wheel harrow is excellent for this purpose. Otherwise a cross plowing should be given before the ground becomes hard. The loosened surface will keep the bottom from drying out.

Swamp Lands.—No better time than the present offers for the clearing of swamp lands. To cut off sedges, and burn these on a dry, windy day, will leave the surface clear, while it is dry enough to plow or break up. We find a disk harrow, such as the Nishwitz, or new modifications of the old but excellent idea of sharp steel disks, to be very effective for such work. The ground, when cut up fine, may be seeded to grass at once, with a good chance for a successful catch. On swamp lands, a good dressing of lime will be found useful.

Gas Lime can often be procured for the taking away, at any gas works. It is at least worth the cost of carting a moderate distance. But it should not be used while it is fresh. If hauled now it may be laid in heaps on land to be plowed in next spring or on land to be fall plowed, and spread either in the fall or spring. A few months' exposure is needed to free it from injurious gases, which pass off in time. After three or four months it becomes carbonate of lime, or mild lime, with a considerable portion of sulphate of lime (gypsum) mixed with it.

Kitchen and Market Garden.—It is now that the well-planted and kept kitchen garden makes its value felt in abundant supplies of vegetables for the table. Though most vegetables are beyond serious injury from weeds, the various weeding implements should be kept at work in the garden. A weed going to seed now means many hundred-fold of its kind for next year. If there is nothing on a strip where an early crop has been removed, let the cultivator run over it every few days, but it is better to sow such places, and keep all the ground in cultivation. Spinach may be sown, and turnips sown now will make a good crop.

Drilling Wheat.—Many farmers are testing the practice of cultivating wheat. We hear of frequent experiments in this direction, and these have generally turned out satisfactorily. Cultivating or hoeing is easily done by drilling the wheat in sixteen-inch rows, by stopping every alternate sprout. It is not difficult to construct a simple cultivator that will work the spaces between the drills. There are two different wheat hoes in the market that do the work effectively. Wheat that is sown broadcast can not be cultivated. This fact, and the better condition of drilled wheat, should be sufficient inducement to use the drill, if the great saving of seed and the lessening of labor are not.

Oyster Shells are frequently to be procured for a small price, and may be burned very cheaply. To burn them, make a heap of shells and small wood; brush wood can be used if chopped into small lengths and packed close. Wood and shells are packed in layers, and the heap is covered with chips and small wood or brush. As it burns down, more brush is thrown upon the heap, and it may be left to smolder for two days, when the fire will be burned out. A few barrels of water may be thrown upon a heap of 300 or 400 bushels, and it will shake into fine powder; when it may be spread upon the field. In shaking the lime, the water should be thrown on gradually, lest too much be used and the lime become pasty.

An Elevator Muzzled.

On yesterday afternoon the large elevator in the Chamber of Commerce fell from the upper floor to the bottom of the elevator passage. It contained at the time two young men, neither of whom was injured, or even jarred. One of them held a glass of water, but little of which was spilled. On the floor of the cab was a basket of eggs and glassware, but not an egg-shell or tumbler was broken. The occasion of the fall was the testing of a device for preventing elevator accidents. The device is to make the bottom of the elevator passage, for a couple of feet, say, an air tank. A falling elevator cab compresses the air in this tank and the violence of the fall is gently, but completely, arrested. The air escapes around the sides of the elevator, but not so fast as to allow the elevator to strike the bottom with any jar. The young men who came down said their descent seemed more like jumping into a haymow than anything else. The rush of air caused by the falling elevator created a most appalling noise, but did no harm. The elevator, which weighs 4,000 pounds, was then loaded with 5,000 pounds of pig-iron and hauled up to the upper floor, from which it was again allowed to drop. This time the rush of air broke out a transom over the lower door, and sprung the door so that there was difficulty in opening it, but the globes in the gas-chandelier were all right, and eggs lying loose on the floor among the pigs of iron were unbroken. It seems as if the deadly elevator had been robbed of its terrors.—Chicago Times.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

A LITTLE ginger put into sausage meat improves the flavor.

IF your coal fire is low, throw on a table-spoonful of salt, and it will help it very much.

TO CLEAN ZINC.—Scour with sifted coal-ashes; afterward rub with kerosine. Kerosine also gives a new look to oil-cloths.

IN boiling meat for soup, use cold water to extract the juices. If the meat is wanted for itself alone, plunge in boiling water at once.

THE skin of a boiled egg is the most efficacious remedy that can be applied to a boil. Peel it carefully, wet and apply it to the part affected. It will draw off the matter, and relieve the soreness in a few hours.

ONION SAUCE.—Boil some onions in milk, with pepper, salt and nutmeg. When quite done, pass them through a sieve. Put some butter and flour into a saucepan; when the butter is melted, and well mixed with the flour, put in the pulp of the onions and add either milk or cream, stirring the sauce on the fire until it is of the desired consistency.

RIPE CURRANT PIE.—Line a pie-tin with a good crust, and fill with a mixture of one cup of crushed ripe currants, one of sugar, two spoonfuls of water, one of flour mixed smooth with the beaten yolks of two eggs; bake; then cover with a merangue made of the whipped whites and two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar; return to the oven to brown.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—One heaping coffee-cupful each of Indian, rye and Graham meal; sift and beat together with two cupfuls of molasses, two cupfuls of sweet milk and one of sour, adding a table-spoonful of cream; one dessert-spoonful of soda and a little salt. Beat thoroughly and pour into a tin form; steam four hours and then place in the oven to brown.

STRAWBERRY BLANC-MANGE.—Stew nice, ripe strawberries, strain off the juice, and sweeten to taste; place over the fire, and when it boils stir in corn-starch wet with cold water—two table-spoonfuls of corn-starch for each pint of juice; stir until sufficiently cooked; pour into molds wet in cold water, and set aside to cool. To be eaten when very cold with cream and sugar. Raspberries may be substituted for the strawberries, although the blanc-mange does not look as nicely.

CHICKEN PIE.—Cut up a large chicken; if it is tough, parboil it. Place your crust in a deep, well-buttered pudding-dish; then a layer of thin salt pork, and on that a layer of chicken; pepper it; chop up two or three hard-boiled eggs, and sprinkle some over the chicken; then more pork, chicken and egg, until the chicken and half-pound of pork is used up; pour in enough of the water in which it was parboiled to make a gravy; cover with a crust; ornament it a little; bake an hour, or longer if the pie is very large.

TO PICKLE EGGS.—Sixteen eggs, one quart of vinegar, half ounce black pepper, half ounce Jamaica pepper, half ounce ginger. Boil the eggs for twelve minutes, then dip them in cold water, and take off the shell. Put the vinegar with the pepper and ginger, into a stewpan, and let it simmer for ten minutes. Now place the eggs in a jar, pour over them the vinegar, etc., boiling hot, and when cold tie them down with a bladder to exclude the air. This pickle will be ready for use in a month.

RICE SOUP WITH GREEN PEAS.—Pick over and wash quarter of a pound of rice, put it into a quart of boiling water containing a tablespoonful of salt, and boil it for ten minutes. Then drain it, put it into two quarts of broth, or meat stock seasoned with pepper and salt, and boil it gently until the grains begin to crack open. Meantime boil a pint of green peas in boiling water and salt until they are tender, wash them well with cold water as soon as they are done, drain them, and put them into the soup-tureen. As soon as the rice is tender pour the soup into the tureen on the peas and serve at once.

The Chinese Question in California.

The people of California propose to show the unanimity of sentiment in that State on the Chinese question at the coming election in September. Ballots are to be furnished to the electors, pursuant to a law passed by the Legislature at its last session, bearing the words "For Chinese Immigration" or "Against Chinese Immigration," and by these they are to signify their respective opinions on the subject. A memorial setting forth the result is to be prepared by the Governor, and properly attested copies are to be sent to Messrs. Hayes and Wheeler, to each member of the Cabinet, to the Senators and members of the House of Representatives, and to the Governor of every State and Territory.

One Hundred and Nine Years Old.

George Pintler, of Whitelake, N. Y., died on July 6 at the ripe age of 109 years and 6 months. He was born in Newton, N. J., Dec. 28, 1769. His father was a soldier in the Revolution. George voted for Washington in 1792 in his native State. He has voted at every Presidential election since. His brother, Peter S. Pintler, died in February last, 99 years of age.—New York World.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

MILK AS A VEHICLE FOR QUININE.—Milk is a good solvent, and effectually disguises the bitterness of this drug. One grain of quinine dissolved in an ounce of milk scarcely makes it bitter. An ounce of milk, indeed, will dissolve two grains of quinine without imparting much bitterness to the taste. When five grains are dissolved in a tumblerful of milk, all bitterness disappears.

SICKNESS.—When going to sit up with a sick neighbor, take your night lunch with you, that you may not make any more trouble for the already tired and overworked family. In many cases I have found that it would ease the patient to bathe in strong vinegar with a little warm water and then wrap in soft flannel. Put the lights out of the room, and, if possible, lie down yourself on a couch; it may induce sleep to the sufferer.—Mrs. C. F. Reynolds.

MILK AS A PREVENTIVE OF LEAD-POISONING.—The Journal de Medecine reports in a recent issue a remarkable instance of the regular consumption of milk in white-lead factories. It was noticed in some French lead mills that among a large number of workmen two who daily consumed a large quantity of milk remained free from the injurious effects of the lead, which made themselves visible in many of the other hands. A daily ration of a quart of milk was then given to each of the workmen, and lead colic soon became unknown. From 1868 to 1871 no case of colic occurred in these factories. A preventive of painter's colic, so simple and so efficacious, demands a fair trial in our own white-lead factories.

THREE RECIPES TO CURE CORNS.—(1) Bathe the corn with strong borax-water; then shave it closely, but be careful not to make it bleed. Place over the corn a white felt corn plaster and wear it constantly until the corn has disappeared. Every night and morning wet the small cavity over the corn (and in the plaster) with a little borax-water, or, if preferable, the pulp of a lemon. The corn plasters can be procured at any druggists. (2) Keep the feet clean by frequent ablutions with warm water, and wear easy, soft boots or shoes. Without the latter precaution, corns will generally return, even after they appear to have been perfectly removed. After soaking the feet in warm water for a few minutes, pare the corns as close as possible with a sharp knife, taking care not to make them bleed. Place upon the part affected a small circular piece of leather or buckskin, spread with some emollient plaster, and having a hole in the center corresponding to the size of the corns. They may now be touched with nitric acid, by means of a small glass rod or wood toothpick, due care being taken not to allow the liquid to come in contact with the neighboring parts. Repeat this process daily until the offender be sufficiently softened to admit of removal.

WATER FOR BABIES.—A few days ago I was called upon to visit a sick little one in a family residing near my office. The babe I found in apparent good health, but crying and struggling in its mother's arms as though suffering excruciating pain. The mother informed me that the child seemed desirous of nursing continually; and that, to quiet it, she had given it the breast as often as the crying commenced. When this did not soothe the little one, a dose of Mother Somebody's cordial had been administered.

"My good woman," I inquired, "when did you give your child a drink of water?"

"I don't remember," replied the lady; "I seldom let him drink water; does he need it?"

"Need it? Why should he not need it as much as you? This child is suffering from thirst—nothing more."

I called for cold water, gave the infant a few teaspoonfuls, and it was relieved of all its troubles, stopped crying, and sank peacefully to sleep in its mother's arms.

Let this be a reminder to mothers and nurses. Infants who nurse at breast may often suffer as much from want of water as adults who eat more solid food. Often when a child cries it is thirst alone which causes it. Do not, then, dose it with the poisonous soothing sirups or nursing cordials, or press it to the breast, which it will eagerly grasp, thinking to satiate its burning thirst; but, filled to the brim with its natural food, it cries on harder than ever. Use a little discretion. The poor little one cannot tell its wants; if it could it would often cry, "Water! water!"—O. Frankinburg, M. D.

A Great Man Who Swore and One Who Didn't.

We were talking about the profanity of a very distinguished American statesman not now living. Mr. Sumner (who never swore himself) said: "Well, I have heard him swear severely; but, as as a rule, nobody swears in my presence. The greatest mortification I ever received in my life in this way was when I was at a breakfast abroad with Lord Brougham. We had sat down at the breakfast-table when somebody brought a newspaper to Lord Brougham. It contained a personal attack upon him. The article was marked, and he read it through. When he had completed it he began a volley of the most scathing oaths that I ever heard fall from the lips of a man. There was no limit to the curses he rained upon the head of the author of this piece. I was shocked and stricken dumb," said Mr. Sumner. "The only other occupant of the table, except Lord Brougham and myself, was Brougham's mother. She sat at the head, opposite her son, a venerable and courtly lady, with an elegance and grace of manner that I never saw excelled. I dared not look at her for some moments, but when I ventured to turn my eyes in that direction I found not a muscle of her face was moved. She was as calmly unconscious of what her son had been saying as if he was talking in Arabic. The breeze soon blew over, and we had a very enjoyable breakfast."—Boston Cor. Hartford Courant.

Troublesome Children.

I have not married. My brother has. And got into difficulties? Not so; but he had a family, indeed, why mince matters? he has a large family still. The "little dears" have all gone safely and irreproachably through the dangers of measles, whooping-cough, mumps, etc., and there is no diminution in their numbers; on the contrary, an increase. Now comes my first grievance. At first it was pleasant enough to visit at my brother Henry's house; my sister-in-law was always glad to see me, and made me very welcome; and it became quite the regular thing for me to spend Sunday with them. This was a very agreeable arrangement to all parties when it was first made; but now I regret daily more and more having made it at all, and my regret is caused by the continually increasing number of my nephews and nieces. Here I perceive a misunderstanding likely to arise, unless I knock it on the head. I see it will be supposed, especially when the manner in which I disposed of childish ailments is taken into account, that I am a churlish, ill-tempered, ill-natured, cross-grained curmudgeon of a bachelor uncle. Nothing of the sort. In respect to my nephews and nieces I possess all the virtues contrary to those selfish vices, to excess, I may say. As nephews and nieces, as children, I look upon them as the most delightful of human beings. It is when they come before me in the light of infant taxes that I feel my heart hardened against them, and I began to look on my Sunday visit as anything but a pleasure, and upon that day of rest as the most hardest and most trying of the seven.

A short account of my welcome at Rose Cottage may, perhaps, best illustrate my meaning. I walk to the street door, rather nervously, and usually before my nervous "rat-tat" can be heard, I hear a confused sound of struggling inside, mixed with subdued cries of "there's Uncle John!"

"I'll let him in!"

"Oh! Polly, you selfish thing, you shan't; you let him in last time."

"No I didn't."

"Oh, you did."

"I'll let him in; get away girls."

Increased scuffling, during which I knock again, and hear sundry bumps inside, as if some of these affectionate children were knocking the heads of the others against the panels in their anxiety for first kiss.

At last the door is wrenched open, and out flows the stream of boys and girls, all around me, dancing on the steps, twining around my legs, hanging on to my coat tails, catching at my hands, diving into my pockets, and usually ending by knocking my hat off, keeping up an incessant shout and dance the whole time. Flushed and panting, we all struggle in at the doorway, and fall promiscuously forward into the sitting-room, nearly knocking over the papa who is hospitably coming forward to greet me at the door, and extending in unruly waves of mixed-up boys and girls and uncle almost up to the chair in which sits mamma with the baby.

"Oh! how dy'e do, John?" she says, with a sweet smile of welcome; "I am so glad you have come. What spirits the children have, haven't they? They know you spoil them, you naughty uncle."

"There, be quiet, children," says Henry, very mildly, who contributes this unheeded request to the general uproar about twice in every minute and a half. "Let your uncle sit down and rest himself."

"I'll get Uncle John a chair," screams an urchin, and a general melee ensues, during which somebody gets hurt, and lets us know it.

However I am used to all this, and hardly notice it now. I get seated somehow, with half a dozen on and over me, and the business of the day begins. This consists of a vigorous search into all my pockets, conducted on principles that would make a custom-house officer's hair stand on end, and a general a appropriation by the elder children of things they like, and a cackling of the younger over things that are left, while I am nearly suffocated, and all but overturn the mother and baby, in trying to launch a toy of some description into her lap, suited to babyhood. Then I am deserted for a time and the various offerings are inspected by the terriby sharp child, yes of the nineteenth century.

If I have any room for reflection, I probably here think how few toys I had as a child, and what an awe-inspiring cerememony the presentation of a new one was, accompanied with a deep conviction that it was of priceless value.

My nephews and nieces are, at present, ten in number, and the task of making them some trifling present every Sunday, and presents of more solid and important character on all birthdays and at Christmas, is weekly and yearly becoming more onerous. I am quite aware that this grievance is partly, if not wholly, of my own bringing about. I began the system when the children were young in years, and few in number, and it would be stingy to leave it off now they are older, and their numbers are greater. All the same, this is a tax, and although I may not mend this matter, I may at least grumble about it. Every week, when I lay in my stock of presents, my mind gets more uneasy upon the subject. While the children were still in their babyhood my task was comparatively easy. Very small babies have only one idea—to put everything into their mouths. This prevailing habit reduces presents, from a rational being, to a class of things that may safely be put into the mouth, and, as I said before, my task was easy, my presents were inexpensive, and accepted without hesitation, and with cooing satisfaction. Even when the children were a little bigger there was nothing to alarm any one in India-rubber tumblers, rag dolls, balls, popguns, or indestructible toy-books. Now, however, when Johnny—my godson, bless him!—"is breeched," when Polly is getting "too old," as her mamma says, "to have her hair down her back," but has it plaited in a thick clump like the cart horses, and tied with straw—I mean ribbon—and countless others are coming up in regular gradation, the choosing and offering of a present becomes a matter of serious, not to say nervous, consideration. I feel already the children look upon me as a sort of walking box, out of which dimes and dollars may be taken without the protracted process of shaking them out at the slit. What will it be when they are older?"

STYLES.

For the Ladies to Read.

—Lace fans are always in fashion.

—Dress sleeves are becoming shorter and shorter.

—Tortoise-shell sticks are very handsome for black fans.

—Handsome satin parasols are embroidered in pale and wood shades.

—Brocade and pekin fans, according to quality range in price from $3 to $12.

—The skirts of dresses are nearly all short, and are becoming shorter and shorter.

—There is nothing new in the chains used for suspending the fan from the vest.

—Very excellent British Balbriggan stockings, in mottled colors, are selling at twenty-five cents per pair.

—Among eccentric trimmings should be mentioned the open-work galloons and deep fringes made of pack-thread.

—Pretty little picture-frames are in the shape of a horse-shoe and are black, hand-painted in dainty floral designs.

—The latest long coin purses are of knitted silk, in pekin stripes, unbeaded, and mounted with silver rings and drops.

—A dress piped in a different color should always have the button-holes worked with silk of the same color as the pipings.

—Late handkerchiefs are round, finished with French needlework, and trimmed with closely plaited Valenciennes lace.

—Linen fans are of navy blue shades, with stars crescents and polka dots of white; these open in a circle and cost fifty cents.

—For very elegant toilets, fringes and embroideries entirely composed of jet beads are adopted by ladies most noted for their good taste.

—The fans most in vogue are eleven inches long from the handle outward—a more graceful size than the large heavy fans lately in use.

—Colored grenadine and barege made over silk and trimmed with satin are the first choice for thin costumes to be worn during the summer.

—The present fureur is for Chantilly lace mittens. Some of these are held at $25 per pair, but very handsome gloves can be bought at $6 per pair.

Bracelets with lead pencils attached are among the latest fancies. These pencils are run through a ring attached to the bracelet when not in use.

—It must be admitted that the polonaise, repeatedly abandoned, is re-appearing under a new form but under a different name from that by which it has so long been known.

—While Breton lace pleatings trim the pale blue bareges worn by fair young girls, and there are jabot clusters of lace, with forked ends or loops of blue satin ribbon in each curve.

—Pretty little purses for gold are of knitted silk, in pekin stripes, mounted with silver and nickel-plated metal, in the ordinary clasp, or the new twisted clasp. Price from $1 50 to $5.

—A factory girl at Waterville, Me. has a wonderful head of hair, its length being six feet three inches. When she allows it to fall unrestrained upon the floor it exceeds her height by eleven inches.

—Handsome large driving parasols are in both the Japanese and French styles, of dark wine color, navy-blue, cardinal-red, brown-and-black, covered with rich Irish tetting lace, and mounted on a polished orange-wood stick.

—At a costume ball given in London the other day one of the most admired dresses was that worn by a young lady who chose to array herself as an orphan from the Foundling Hospital, and wore brown serge and white linen.

—White tarlatane and French organdy evening dresses have the flounces and other effective appliances headed with embroidered gauze ribbon, in mille fleurs patterns and colors, and garnishing of satin ribbons of several colors.

—The plain colored sashes are of the richest satin ribbon, about seven inches wide, and there are also twilled soft silk sashes of single color. These are very simply arranged either directly on on the back of the dress or else just in front.

—The latest imported parasols have the canopytop. They are of medium size, of rich brocade silk, lined with a plain color trimmed with deep fringe, and mounted on an orange-wood stick, with the bark left on the handle and polished.

—Breton lace divides public favor with flowers. There is no longer a toilet, however simple it may be, with which a small spray of flowers is not worn. Even parasols are trimmed with flowers, in which case a large pink rose is always preferred.

The Women of Rome.

The women of Rome have complexions like white wax, which are very lovely by gaslight but unhealthy-looking by day. See one Roman face and you see them all. The same waxen face, the same nose, the same large black eyes, the same long black hair, the same opulence of flesh, and the same walk, dangling from side to side like poor lame ducks. Whatever the season may be Roman woman walk more ungracefully than any other women under God's firmament, and they wear the ugliest shoes, and they have the largest feet I ever saw on women, not excepting the Dutch, who cover a considerable spread of ground also. The way a Roman girl bows to you, also, is very funny. She shrugs her left shoulder to her left ear, and, turning her face over this left shoulder nods to you. This is the latest fashion in bowing in Roman high life.—Roman Letter.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE PILES.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE FEVER AND AGUE.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE BILIOUS COLIC.
TUTT'S PILLS Cure KIDNEY Complaint.
TUTT'S PILLS CURE TORPID LIVER.
TUTT'S PILLS IMPART APPETITE.

Dr. Tutt has succeeded in combining in these pills the heretofore antagonistic qualities of a Strengthening Purgative, and a Purifying Tonic.

Their first apparent effect is to increase the appetite by causing the food to properly assimilate. Thus the system is nourished, and by their tonic action on the digestive organs, regular and healthy evacuations are produced.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE ON FLESH while under the influence of these Pills, indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, melancholy, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system. Sold everywhere.

A MAINE BOY'S MEMORY.

Extraordinary Powers of a Lad of Ten Years.

(Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

There is in this city one of the most remarkable boys in the world, probably. He is a son of Colonel Fuller, ex-postmaster of Bangor, and is now ten years of age. His intellect is perfectly wonderful, and almost goes beyond belief. The first that his friends noticed of his precocity was about a year ago, when they accidentally discovered that he was almost infallible on any date he had ever seen or heard. He was out west with his parents at the time, and as he was walking in company with some relatives, in a cemetery they observed that he would look at a tombstone, read the date of the death recorded, and the exact age of the person buried there, and then glance up and tell what day of the week the dead person was born on. This happened on several occasions, and but little attention was paid to it. Finally, however, one of his relatives took the pains to look into an old almanac covering some of the dates he had mentioned, and found that the day of the week had been given correctly in every instance. This caused them to ask him questions, when it was discovered that he could almost instantly tell the day of the week on which any date within the last seventy-five years fell. Only yesterday the writer gave the lad dates from 1812 to 1840, and in ever case Charlie (that is his given name) gave the day of the week corresponding to the date, and gave it correctly. The longest time occupied in any one case was eight seconds, and the shortest was three seconds, the average being about five seconds. It should be remembered that while he answered, there was no book or any article near him from which he could get any aid.

If he has once heard the date of birth marriage or death of any of his friends, he remembers it, and, of course, from what has been said above, knows on what day of the week the date fell. If one calls his attention to any person and informs him that the individual was born on a certain day of the week and month he will, on seeing that person months afterward, speak up and say that that man's birthday falls on a certain day, which is the date he was casually told so long before. Not a great while ago he walked up to one of his relatives and informed him that it was So-and-so's birthday, the date of the person's birth having been told him long ago. For curiosity, the relative took Charlie by the hand and walked to the place of business of the friend mentioned. "Charlie," remarked the relative to the friend, "says this is your birthday; is it?" "Well, I didn't think of it before," replied the friend, "but he is right; this is my birthday."

He never forgets a date that he has once fixed in his memory, and is almost invaluable as a statistician. He remembers when every president of the United States was born, when inaugurated as president, and how long he served, and when he died. Any of these dates he gives with scarcely a second thought, as well as hundreds of others of a like nature. Once in a while he makes a momentary mistake, but corrects himself almost instantly, never proceeding till he is absolutely certain of what he has already said.

A still more remarkable fact is that he recollects every thing that he does, remembers on what day he did it, where he was at the time, and what were the circumstances that led him to do it. For instance, he will tell you where he was on any day within the past two years, and what he was doing. Further, he remembers and can tell every thing that his friends have done, providing he has seen them do it, and can tell on what date and on what day of the week they did it.

In mathematics, it would be difficult to find a boy of nearly twice his age that can equal him. He computes the most difficult fractions in his head, and will add, subtract, multiply, or divide them without difficulty. This is all the more wonderful, considering that he has never been taught anything except how to read. One evening about tea time he was informed that the double of two is four. He was informed that the process of getting that result was called multiplication, and that it was all given in the arithmetic. He immediately got an arithmetic into his hands, found the multiplication table, and had all of it by heart at the breakfast table the next morning.

The most remarkable test to which his memory has yet been put is on the Bible. He repeats the name of every book in the Old and New Testaments, in regular order, beginning with Genesis; tells how many chapters each book contains, and how many verses each chapter in several of the books; and on any portion of the Bible he has read—and he has read nearly if not quite all—will tell the subject of any particular verse in any chapter of any particular book. He tells at once where any particular event is described in the Bible, also where the name of any character mentioned in the Scriptures can be found. He not only knows the Bible thoroughly, but can tell without hesitation on what page any particular hymn in Watts' or Moody and Sankey's hymn-books can be found.

Not long ago he greatly amused some of his friends by correcting an almanac. A lady wished to try him on the days of the week on which certain dates, many years ago, fell. She gave him a date and ask him on what day it fell. He promptly informed her. She looked at the almanac for that year, month and day. Alas for Charlie! thought she, as this answer did not agree with the almanac. Charlie wouldn't give up, however, but declared that he knew the almanac was wrong. "Haven't you another almanac of that year?" inquired one of Charlie's confidential friends. "I have," replied the lady, and produced it. On comparing the two almanacs it was discovered that the first one was wrong, and that Charlie was right, a mistake having been made by the party who compiled the almanac.

His habits are peculiar. He never plays with other boys, but is continually busy in reading. Often times he takes an Unabridged Dictionary and studies it hour after hour, never seeming to consider it any thing but a pleasure to do it. In fact, he takes no comfort unless busying his brain about something. If there is any thing he does not understand he keeps at it till he does understand it; then it is next to impossible for him to forget it. One would naturally suppose that a child with such unusual power would gradually fail and fade away, but, singularly enough, he is constantly growing stronger and more healthy.

Very many will think, perhaps, that his ability in giving the day of the week, etc., on which a day falls, is an act of memory merely, and that he has learned what day of the week each date for several years past has fallen on. This is not so, however. He does it by some mathematical process, as he as readily answers about dates the days of the week of which he has never seen. What this process is he himself cannot explain.

Scarcely any of the above will seem creditable, but we assure the readers of the Commercial that it is true in every particular, as scores of those acquainted with the circumstances can testify. The lad is, we repeat, one of the most wonderful in the world, and his career will be watched with interest.

Washington's Sporting Tastes.

One of the longest accounts in the book is with "Cards and other Play." On one page cards, &c., are debited with his losses and on the other side credited with his winnings. He pursued these games of chance pretty regularly for the three years through which the account runs. His play was marked by very much the same carefulness and economy that characterized his household expenditures. He never lost nor won large sums, and he kept his winnings and losings pretty evenly balanced. In the three years covered by the account he won £72 2s. 6d. and lost £78 6s. 9d., leaving a balance against "Cards and Other Play" of £6 8s. 3d. Much of this gambling was done at Williamsburg while he was attending the stormy sessions of the House of Burgesses when it was indulging in its fierce contentions with the Earl of Dunmore. Sometimes he had a game with some old friend when he went over to Fredericksburg to visit his mother, and there is a long line of credit to cards for winnings at Mount Vernon. His fellow-legislators seem to have been better gamesters than Washington, for he generally lost at Williamsburg, where on two occasions he lost his largest amounts, each time the modest sum of £6 10s. His heaviest winnings were made at the Annapolis races in October, 1772. The balance in his favor after two days' play was £13 7s. He was a constant contributor, too, to the neighboring "clubs," of which there were a great many, a rubber of whist seeming to have established its place even then among the Virginia gentry, a place which it holds to this day, as every one familiar with Virginia country life knows.

Washington, evidently from this account book, used to go up to the annual Annapolis races in a grand way, and while there used to spend his money like a "gentleman." He bet on the horses and bet on cards. He went to the theater and took his friends with him, and he apparently enjoyed himself to the full, while Mrs. Washington stayed at home and dutifully looked after her domestic concerns. The following is a transcript of his account of expenses at the races in October, 1772:

Traveling expenses	2	10	11
Servants in trip	0	17	0
Sundry tickets to the plays there	1	0	0
Sundry tickets to the ball there	0	12	0
Two boxes of claret, £25 in Maryland currency	20	14	0
Horse, £50 in Maryland currency	40	0	0
Charity	2	3	0
Cash lost on the races	1	6	0
Cash paid for a hall (sic) for Miss Custis	4	4	0
Cash to Mrs. Custis at Annapolis	2	14	0

This was an extraordinarily large amount of money for Washington to spend, even after the £13 won at cards were deducted. The next year the races took place two weeks earlier, and Washington was promptly on hand with his retinue of servants, and with money to spend, though with not so large an amount as he scattered about the year before. His account this year stood:

	£	s.	d.
For traveling expenses	4	16	10
Sundry play-tickets	5	16	0
Ticket to the ball	0	6	0
Cards and racing	3	16	0
Servants	1	15	3

He was probably restrained by the presence of young Mr. Custis, who made his first appearance at the races, and whose expenses amounted to £3, not itemized. The only other mention of gaming in any way is a charge to profit and loss for the chances in a raffle for an encyclopædia.

Spencerville.

(Last week)

—Threshing wheat is in order.

—Fales & Son have just completed an addition to their furniture store.

—Zimmerman Bros. & McGilvery are diligently engaged in lathing and plastering Cahil's hardward store and Masonic hall.

—Mr. Gerorge Miller is dead and buried. Funeral sevices were held at the Lutheran church by the Rev. Kelso. A post-mortem examination was held, and the examination revealed that he died of a cancer at the head of the pancreas.

—It is now nearly time for the election of teachers for the Spencerville school. Rumor announces Prof. Weits, of Butler, for the principalship, and Miss Amelia Bickhart, of Maysville, for the intermediate or primary. Both are experienced teachers of excellent reputation, and their election would place our school far above its present condition.

—Misses Bessie and Carrie Kinsey have closed their schools, and will remain in Spencerville for some time.

—Rumor says that the M. E. Sunday school will give a concert next Sunday evening at the M. E. church, but we cannot tell with certainty.

—Quarterly meeting on last Sabbath at the M. E. church, with Revs. Marine, Hollopeter and Woherton officiating.

—Mrs. Hiram Wilson and Miss Kelso are on the sick list.

—Mr. J. H. Nichols, one of Spencerville's favorite reporters, is now in New Jersey visiting relatives and friends.

—The Lutheran Sunday-school is now practicing for an intended concert.

—Visitors at Spencerville are Mr. M. Bishop, St. Joe; Miss Wilson, Fort Wayne; Mr. Leon Rhodes, Newville; Mr. C. E. Emanuel, Auburn; Mr. W. Leighty and lady, St. Joe; Mr. C. C. Taylor and lady, St. Louis; Miss Ewing, Ohio; Mr. Dewers, Leo; Dr. Moore and lady, Hicksville; Miss Etta Ootz, Tiffin; Dr. Bowman, Newville; Mr. Snively and Miss Hutchinson, Cedarville; Prof. Allen and lady, Maysville; Mr. S. Harr, St. Joe; Mr. Wilson, Chicago; Mr. F. Zimmerman, Leo; Mr. Tustison, St. Joe; Dr. Mitchell and lady, Newville; Mr. Beechler, Butler; Mr. Morey, Chicago.

—Certainly, Mr. Sancho Panza, you are at liberty to mention the "Orangeville affair," and even to give its most minute particulars if you choose, always provided that you tell the truth. If you do not, we shall be compelled to give you a column lecture on the importance of telling the truth, similar to the one with which you threatened us, when we were reporting the "Newville Grand Opera." We forbear to censure you this time, notwithstanding the fact that you have caused to be published a reckless and irreliable rumor, the falsity of which you might easily have ascertained by consulting the lady in question, who would have contradicted every word of it. We are well aware that a full explanation would satisfy your curiosity and that of our readers, but such a course would compromise our dignity, as well as the lady's. Scribbler's affairs are not the property of the public, and we do not intend to make them so. Nevertheless we cannot but feel highly complimented at being noticed by so able a correspondent as Mr. Panza, as well as pleased at the diligence with which you attend to your reportorial duties, reporting everything of interest to the general reader. But, Sancho, "those who live in glass houses should never throw stones." Had you shown mercy to us we might have spared you, but now, alas! In our mind's eye we can see your blushes as you read this week's COURIER. We would respectfully inform you that your lady-love at this place has two or three "other fellows," to one of whom rumor, says, she is engaged. We feel confident that you may as well hang yourself at once as there is no hope for you. Also, we have that flask which some of the boys stole from you, and it still contains at least a part of the original fluid extract of corn. We have taken good care of it for you, and will be pleased to restore it if you will but call.

SCRIBBLER.

From another Correspondent.

—A. H. Bittinger, wife and daughter were in town on Saturday.

—G. W. Miller, residing south east of this place, died Thursday evening, of cancer in the stomach. A post mortem was held by Drs. Murphy and Emannel.

—When persons go up stairs to play euchre for the soda, they ought to guard their pockets, especially when near lamp chimneys and pea-nuts. If they call and settle soon they will save an exposure.

—Some of the cows belonging to town made a square meal off of Gus. Kinsey's garden, Saturday evening.

—It looks rather suspicious for two young men to be stealthily gliding around the streets in the small hours of night.

—Mart E. Olds and wife, of Newville, were in town Saturday and Sunday attending quarterly meeting at the M. E. church.

—Levi Shutt, of Michigan, visited friends near town last week.

A GERMAN FAGIN.

Educating Boys to Support Him by Theft.

A German Fagin has just been brought to justice in Berlin. His name is Krause. He was a mason by trade, but got tired of working hard for a living, and fell into the profession which ended in his standing in the criminal court as the adult head of a band of juvenile Jack Shepards. His followers are all the children of respectable parents, whom he induced to leave their homes and learn the fine art of thieving under his tuition. The depth of depravity to which the wretch had dragged his unfortunate victims is incredible. All are said to be bright, clever children. The oldest of them, a boy of fifteen, is described by the German papers as a perfect artful dodger. He has already served two sentences for robbery. He was the first victim Krause found. After systematically depraving him, the scoundrel lured him as a stool pigeon to lure other boys from their homes. Gifts and promises of a pleasant life were the baits. By them a band of twenty-four was got together. Out of the material thus provided Krause found a band of thieves, whose organization and skill amazed the police, whom they had baffled for months.

The band was divided into sections of four. One of each section acted as a commander. He was called the "Master," and had the right to operate independently, using his own judgment as to what to do. He held his position by virtue—or, rather, vice—of his being the most skillful thief of the section.

Some of the feats of criminal ingenuity performed by the boys read like jugglers' tricks. They haunted the restaurants, theaters and markets. They picked pockets, tapped tills, filched stray articles, and whenever the chance offered were ready for a burglary or a bit of highway robbery.

In their parties of four they would waylay and rob people in the open road. At the end of each week Krause organized the most obscene orgies. Naked harlots and drink fired the young senses of his followers. Every license was allowed them, and all are said to be tainted with shameful disorders. They clung all the faster to their villainous mentor after each debauch. His word was law, and they ventured any risk to please him. Some idea of the extent of their operations may be obtained from the fact that from December 22d to December 24th they committed twenty-three extensive thefts.

In the face of these circumstances, Krause had the nerve to swear that he had done his best not to debauch but to reform his victims, and lead them back to the path of virtue. Justice was prejudiced, however. She gave him five years penal servitude. The boys received various sentences.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A PHILADELPHIA telegram says "the enormous demand for rails, both iron and steel, has stiffened the iron market. There has been more active inquiry during the last six months than in the last six years, and more orders have been filled in the last quarter than since the panic. The result has been that purchasers no longer dicker as to price. The only question is, 'When can the rails be delivered?' The mills are full, and are declining further orders."

AT Lewiston, Me., a train ran into a team containing Pierre Gondreau and two ladies, Rose Martin and Celina Morin. All were instantly killed. They were returning from a wedding excursion.

CHARLES ALBERT FECHTER, the greatest melodramatic actor of the present generation, died a few days ago at his place in Richland Center, Pa. Paralysis is said to have been the immediate cause of his death. Mr. Fechter was an Englishman by birth, his father being a German, and his mother an Englishwoman. He was born in 1823. He came to this country in 1870.

AN engine in the round-house of the Boston and Albany railroad at Albany, N. Y., exploded with deadly effect a few days ago. Frank Murphy and Thomas Smith, machinists, and Thomas McIntyre, fireman, were instantly killed. Five men were slightly injured.

AT Newport, Pa., W. K. Miller, of Harrisburg, was shot dead, by Samuel E. Albright, of Montgomery's Ferry. Both were paying attentions to the same young woman, and met at her house.

THE WEST.

THE cholera-morbus-malignant-dysentery-epidemic scare at Center Point, Iowa, has quieted down. The disease is attributed to a pond of stagnant water on the outskirts of the town, the malaria from which polluted the air and caused most of the sickness. At Walker, seven miles north of Center Point, the epidemic is quite prevalent, and many deaths have occurred. Dubuque reports more cases of cholera morbus and dysentery than have been known any summer for years.

TWO DRUNKEN roustabouts met in a Chicago saloon located on the bank of the river, and got into a dispute as to which was the better man. To settle the question they engaged in a fierce rough-and-tumble fight, in the course of which they tumbled into the river, and both were drowned.

THREE of Brigham Young's executors—Cannon, Carrington and Brigham Young, Jr., are in the Salt Lake penitentiary for contempt of court in refusing to obey the order to turn over the property in their possession.

A FORT BUFORD dispatch says Sitting Bull was present and directed the fight with Miles on the 15th of July, and one of his brothers was killed.

A WHOLE family, consisting of E. P. Lesueur, wife, and two children, were recently struck by lightning and killed, at Rochester, Minn.

SOLOMON SENN, proprietor of an iron foundry in Chicago, quarreled with Conrad Engleman, one of his workmen, and the latter called his employer a liar. Senn became greatly enraged, drew a pistol and shot Engleman through the head, killing him. The murderer then drew a knife from his pocket, and, plunging the sharp blade into his neck, severed the jugular vein, and died almost instantly. Both men were Germans.

LATE advices from Gen. Miles give an account of a visit to his camp by Maj. Walsh, of the Dominion mounted police, with Long Dog, one of Sitting Bull's chiefs. The visitors assured Miles that the whole of the hostiles, numbering from 5,000 to 8,000, have moved to a point about eighty miles north of the boundary, and intend to make a permanent settlement there. They promise to remain at peace, return stolen property, and abstain from hunting buffalo on this side of the line, unless they are authorized to do so under the supervision of American officers.

BY the falling of a scaffolding at the new Music Hall in course of construction at the corner of State and Randolph sts., Chicago, five workmen were precipitated from the top of the structure to the ground floor, a distance of sixty feet. The unfortunate men were bruised and battered in a shocking manner, and two of them died shortly after the accident. Another is fatally injured, and a fourth received wounds of a very serious nature. The fifth, strange to say, was but slightly hurt. Two other workmen, who were on the scaffold when it began to totter, miraculously saved themselves by leaping for and clinging to the walls of the building.

THE colored men of Indiana held a convention at Terre Haute last week. Among other resolutions adopted was one urging the negroes of the South to leave that region and emigrate to the Northern States, and promising to assist in the exodus and to find homes and employment in Indiana.

THE SOUTH.

THERE were four deaths from yellow fever and seventeen new cases of the disease at Memphis on the 1st inst. At New Orleans there was one death, but no new cases.

CHEVALLIER JUTHONVILLE, more than thirty years cashier of the Canal Bank, of New Orleans, is a defaulter to the amount of $20,000.

FOR the forty-eight hours ending on the evening of Aug. 3 there were 26 new cases of fever and 8 deaths at Memphis. For the week ending on that date there were 26 deaths from the disease, against 24 deaths from the same cause in the preceding week. Most of the fatal cases were in last year's haunts of the disease, and many cases are known to have originated from infected bedding and clothing. One young lady had been attacked eight miles in the country, in a house where the fever existed last year. She had not been to the city for a month, and had been in no way exposed to the infection. One man in the city had died from a second attack of the disease—a rare occurrence.

THE Comptroller of Georgia has been impeached by the State House of Representatives, and is now undergoing trial. He is charged with being interested in the operations of a great land ring, bribing a member of the Legislature and other bits of crookedness.... It is reported that the Texas Pacific railroad is being pushed vigorously beyond Fort Worth, and will be completed to Weatherford by October. The country so far penetrated by this road will produce 250,000 bales of cotton this year, most of which will find its way North and East.

THERE were thirty-three deaths from yellow fever and six new cases, at Memphis, for the forty-eight hours ending on the evening of the 5th inst. The city was remarkably dull and quiet. No new cases had appeared at New Orleans for six days, and physicians were of the opinion that the fever had run its course there for the summer.

AT Memphis, for the forty-eight hours ending on the evening of Aug. 7, there were forty new cases of yellow fever and five deaths. The New Orleans Board of Health report not a single case of yellow fever in city or its environs. The St. Louis Board of Health adopted an order that no steamboats that shall have landed at the port of Memphis subsequent to the 1st of August shall be allowed to land at the wharf in that city, or discharge freight or passengers within the limits of St. Louis, without a permit from the Health Commissioner.

WASHINGTON.

FOLLOWING is the statement of coinage executed at the mints last month:

Denomination.	Pieces.
Gold double-eagles	169,790
Gold eagles	19,000
Gold half-eagles	21,700
Silver dollars	1,650,000
Minor coins, cents	811,000
Total coinage	2,654,455
Value	$4,851,610

During July there was paid for arrears of pensions $8,694,699, which exhausts the special fund held for the redemption of fractional currency. The increase of the debt for the month is $6,086,344, showing there would have been a decrease of $2,008,355.86 if no arrears of pension had been paid.

A WASHINGTON correspondent says "the consideration which the administration has given to the questions of the fishery award since its payment has served to strengthen the conviction which most of our officials who had given any attention to the subject held at the time of the award, that it was in every respect excessive and unjust. Very close and earnest consideration is now being given to every branch of the subject, and there is little doubt but that all future correspondence of this Government with England in regard to the matter will be of a character to satisfy those who hold even the most extreme views in regard to unfair discrimination or interpretation of the Treaty of Washington against the United States."

THE monthly debt statement, issued Aug. 1, is as follows:

Six per cent. bonds	$283,681,350
Five per cent. bonds	508,440,350

INFORMATION is received by the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, at Washington, that photographic $5 notes on the Globe National Bank, of Boston, Mass. (letter C), and Dedham National Bank, of Dedham, Mass. (letter D), have made their appearance at San Francisco.

IT is stated in a Washington dispatch that "the President and Secretary of State are firmly convinced that no exigency is likely to arise through the Darien canal project which can cause disquietude or make it necessary for this Government to take steps for the protection of American interests. They believe that De Lesseps and the Paris Congress have selected an impracticable route, and that the scheme will eventually fail through a lack of financial support and American co-operation."

POLITICAL.

REPUBLICAN State Conventions have been called in Nebraska for Oct. 1, in Minnesota Sept. 2, and in Massachusetts Sept. 16.

KENTUCKY voted for State officers on Monday, Aug. 4. The entire Democratic ticket, headed by Dr. Luke P. Blackburn for Governor, was elected. The vote was about 50,000 less than that cast for President in 1876. The Legislature is largely Democratic. The call for a constitutional convention failed for want of a constitutional majority in its favor.

THE Democratic State Convention of Maryland, held at Baltimore, on the 7th inst., nominated William T. Hamilton, of Washington county, for Governor; C. J. M. Gwinn for Attorney General; Thomas J. Keating for Comptroller; Spencer Jones, of Montgomery, for Clerk of the Court of Appeals.

GENERAL.

THE New York Herald's Washington correspondent telegraphs that "the progress of events in the political world of Mexico during the ensuing few months will be well worth watching. Indeed, some very important news may be expected from that country at any moment. According to the tenor of advices received by officials in the War Department from army officers and others on the Texas frontier, who have been closely observing the development of matters in our sister republic, a formidable revolt against the Government of President Diaz is likely to manifest itself before the close of the year."

MUCH excitement has been caused in Canada by the failure of the Consolidated Bank, of Toronto. The stock of the suspended bank is spread from one end of the Dominion to the other, and is also held in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Newfoundland, France, and even a few shares in India. The loss to stockholders and depositors is about $1,500,000.... Hamilton, Ont., has been visited by a disastrous conflagration, in which a large number of valuable buildings and contents were destroyed, the loss being set down at $1,500,000.

THE city of Volcano, W. Va., has been almost literally swept out of existence by fire.

THERE were 137 deaths from yellow fever in the city of Havana, Cuba, for the week ending Aug. 4, an increase of twenty-four over the preceding week. There were 537 deaths from the disease during the month of July, against 504 in the same period last year.

A MONTREAL dispatch announces the failure of the Exchange Bank of Canada, with liabilities of upward of $1,000,000. It had many branches in Canada, and the failure causes no little excitement.

FOREIGN.

A TELEGRAM from India states that cholera is raging among the troops returning from Afghanistan. The Tenth Hussars lost 40 men in one day and the Seventeenth Foot 191 men.... Peace has been formally declared between Germany and the Vatican.

ADVICES from Yokohama, Japan, report that "the Grant reception in Tokio was unprecedented in Japanese history. In addition to the Government demonstrations, citizens have given lavish entertainments on a sumptuous scale every day and night, with fresh novelties for his diversion. The sole obstacle to this harmony was caused by the demeanor of the English officials, who persistently keep aloof from Gen. Grant, and decline to give him salutes or recognition. It is not clearly understood whether this is in consequence of orders from home or otherwise."

THE Japanese budget has been published for the fiscal year, from July, 1879, to July, 1880. The total estimated revenue is 55,651,000 yens, or dollars. The estimated expenditures are the same. Increase of revenue and expenditures over last year, 4 per cent. The financial condition is shown to be thoroughly healthy.... It is stated that Serinagur, the capital of Cashmere, ordinarily containing 300,000 inhabitants, has only 30,000 since the famine.... Lord Chelmsford, lately commanding the British forces in Zululand, has resigned.

ENGLAND has been visited by another destructive storm, causing great damage to crops and other valuable property. The storm was attended by a fall of hailstones, some of them being five inches in circumference. The damage to glass around London amounted to thousands of pounds sterling. The damages to the crops in England by rain hail and inundations are irreparable this season.... A dispatch from Cape Town, South Africa, says that "King Cetewayo, when leaving the battlefield of Ulundi, told his chiefs to look to their own safety, and seek terms of peace as best they could. His army is broken up, his nation dispersed, and the King a fugitive. Zululand will probably be divided into three or four separate principalities, each under the rule of independent nobles. Cetewayo's brother, Oham, will receive his own territory under this arrangement."

THE projector of the English channel bridge will shortly begin operations..... The steamship Louis David, from Antwerp to Naples, was wrecked during a fog off Ushant, France, and twenty-seven persons were drowned..... The London Times publishes a review of agricultural prospects. The hay and other fodder crops throughout England and Wales are many millions of pounds short of the average value. The worth of the barley is nearer £5 to £6 less than the pounds per acre of average value in other years.

A ROME dispatch says Signor Gioja, engineer, has explained the Panama canal scheme to his Holiness the Pope, who bestowed the Pontifical blessing on the project. His Holiness said he hoped the canal would prove morally even more than materially a bond between the Old and New Worlds.

A RENEWAL of the war between Egypt and Abyssinia is threatened. The King of the latter country, encouraged, doubtless, by news of Ismail's removal, has ordered an army to occupy the frontier districts heretofore in dispute, and which are but slenderly garrisoned by the Egyptians. Col. Gordon, with a considerable force, is moving from Khartoom, the capital of Nubia, to the relief of the endangered points.....According to advices from Copenhagen, the announcement that Nordenskjold's Arctic expedition had passed Behring's straits was premature. A letter from Nordenskjold, dated in February, at the entrance of the straits, says: "I hope to be free from ice in June."

Origin of Lawn Tennis.

This game, which is played at a season when the world appears at its best, combines a most perfect exercise for all the muscles with a singular charm for girls as well as boys, for men and for women. Tennis is a very old game, for Galen—an old Greek medical gentleman—has written of it to the effect that it was in his time a healthy exercise and quite nice.

All of us, who enjoy playing ball-games, would like to know who had wit enough to invent them. Herodotus thinks they were first played by the Lydians, in the reign of King Atyx, many years before Christ was born, in order to make the people forget their hunger at a time when they were suffering from a dreadful famine. The game does not seem to have that effect now.

Tennis, as it is now played in the tennis courts of England, France and Italy, was perfected and played, substantially as now, 200 or 300 years ago.

It has been called both the "King of Games" and the "Game of Kings." This last name was given it because it was a favorite amusement with Princes and nobles, and both in England and France edicts were published forbidding the common people to play it. Henri II. is considered to have been the best tennis player of all the French Kings. Henri of Navarre rose at daylight, after the cruel massacre of St. Bartholomew, to continue a game of tennis. Henry VIII., of England, was passionately fond of it until he became too stout, and you may think it would have been better for him if he had kept up his interest in it and given less attention to matrimony. Edward Halle, the historian, who probably never went to a spelling school, says of him: "The Kynge thys tyme was moche entysed to playe at tennes and at dice, which appetite certayn craftie persones about hym perceyninge, brought in Frenchmen and Lombardes to make wagers with hym and so lost much money; but when he perceyued their crafte, he eschuyd their compaignie"—which was a very proper thing for him to do.

Tennis was originally, and still is, played in halls, or courts, built for the purpose at great cost; but the more modern game of lawn tennis, which is now rapidly becoming popular in this country, can be arranged for a comparatively small cost. Dealers will supply a very good set for $15, which will furnish amusement for a club of ten or fifteen persons during several seasons. More expensive and much better sets can, of course, be had, and it may be said of this, as of most other out-of-door sports, that the enjoyment is somewhat in proportion to the excellence of the materials. The only material absolutely necessary, however, to enable four persons to play an enjoyable game, are four racquets, an India-rubber ball, and a cord suspended between two posts. These can be had, of very good quality, for but little more than half the cost of a "set."—W. H. Boardman, in St. Nicholas.

The Fortified Sub-Treasury.

Our venerable Uncle Sam keeps many millions of dollars in the New York sub-treasury, and it becomes him to guard well that immense hoard of bullion, coin and notes. The building is being turned into an impregnable fortress. Beside the iron shutters at the windows, they have recently been inclosed with steel bars, upright and crosswise. The shutters are pierced with loopholes for rifles, and from these points of vantage, the New York Commercial Advertiser says, "the riflemen can sweep the streets in almost every direction." Protection has been made also in the topmost story "for men who may be engaged in the work of throwing hand-grenades." Three steel turrets have been erected on the roof with special provision for the use of Gatling guns. In the draft riots of 1863 the mob attempted to sack the building, but was kept off by a section of artillery from Governor's island. If another attack should be made upon it the employes are expected to make a defense with the means that are afforded them by the fortification device.—Baltimore American.

ALL SORTS.

THERE is an establishment in New Haven which manufactured 22,424,772 fish-hooks last year.

HARD speech between those who have loved is hideous in the memory, like the sight of greatness and beauty sunk into vice and rage.

THERE is a bottle of wine over 1,800 years old that will be opened shortly on the anniversary of the destruction of Pompeii. It was dug out of the ruins, where it has lain since the year 79. At the cheapest possible price, the cost of it, if invested at compound interest, would by this time exceed our national debt.

THE tenant-farmers of England pay rentals to the amount of $335,000,000 per year to the land-owners; those of Ireland, $68,000,000; and of Scotland, $70,000,000. But little of the land in that country is occupied or cultivated by the owners, being leased out to tenants, who do the hard work, and the aristocratic owners reap the profits. The hard times in England are causing deep agitation on this subject of rentals, and a demand for revolutionary measures is growing up.

CANADA is talking of a canal project—an enterprise for a ship-canal between Lakes Huron and Ontario. Such a canal would make a saving in distance between Chicago and Liverpool compared with the route through the Erie canal of 834 miles, and of 320 miles as compared with the Welland canal, while the estimated reduction in the cost of carrying freight would be $3 a ton. A good many Canadians think it would prove a better investment to construct such a canal than to carry through the scheme of building the Canada Pacific railway through a wilderness at a cost of $100,000,000.

THE drink-maddened young King of Burmah is not content with endangering his relations with the British Government, but is doing his best to weaken the allegiance of his own people. The taxation imposed by this Government is so excessive as to have become unbearable, and the result is that at Bhamo, an important town on the Irrawaddy, a popular rising has taken place against the Government. As there are no royal troops in the place, it is not improbable that the rising may make considerable headway before measures can be taken to suppress it, and that the example thus set may be followed in other places.

PERSIA is a good place for intelligent foreigners. Some time ago a Count Monteforte, a resident of Vienna, renounced Austrian allegiance and went to Teheran, where he received a position on the police force. Displaying some skill and industry, he was rapidly advanced, and now has been appointed by the Shah to an office equivalent to that of Mayor of the city, with a handsome salary and residence. He is also the chief judicial officer of the city, with unrestricted power to sentence to imprisonment and corporal punishment. The Count Monteforte is a much more considerable personage than he was in Vienna.

DIANA POWELLSON, of Rosedale, Kan., has frequent death-like trances, lasting half an hour or longer, during which she shows no signs of life. She thinks that she really dies, going to heaven and then returning to earth. She says that she meets spirits, who tell her that they had to repent of their sins before they could advance, and were unhappy until they did so. But afterward they are engaged in learning and growing brighter, and are taught by spirits brighter than the rest. The spirits have no wings, but wear flowing robes, and are ordinary men and women; some bright and beautiful, and others lean and miserable. They have no voice, but their thoughts can be read.

A RESOLUTION has been introduced into the Chamber of Deputies of France to raze the ruins of the Tuilleries, once the most famous palace in Europe, and the scene of some of the most dramatic events in history. Its name originated from the fact that it is located on ground occupied in 1517 by tile works. Before its complete destruction by the Commune of 1871, there had been over three centuries given to its construction and adornment. The sans culottes liked it, because, when they were engaged in a revolution, it was the place they always sacked with the greatest gusto, and the most profit in blood and treasure. As there is nothing venerable about the rubbish left, France can gain nothing by keeping it on hand.

THE Atlantic Coast Pilot, published by the United States Coast Survey, explains the origin of the deep holes along the New Jersey coast, some distance out at sea. Of these "mud holes," as they are termed, nine are known to navigators, the deepest and the furthest out being the 145-fathom hole, eighty-three miles southeast of Sandy Hook lightship. The remarkable depressions, as the Pilot pointed out, have the look of having been originally a continuation seaward of the Hudson river valley. They were in all probability scooped out by the river being forced to run through narrow gorges. Several of these gorges can still be traced running parallel with the New Jersey coast. In fact, the soundings along the coast would seem to indicate that the whole coast line ages ago was many miles seaward of its position to-day; that then the Hudson river entered the ocean at least 100 miles southeast of its present mouth, and that the whole continent has since subsided, the sea encroaching further and further inland, as the country gradually sank.

THE Hartford Times tells a beautiful story of a man whose umbrella was stolen at church, and who, therefore, put an advertisement in the local papers, as follows:

> If the man who was seen to take an umbrella from the vestibule of the —— Church, last Sunday evening, does not wish to get into trouble and have a stain cast upon the Christian character which he values so highly he will return it to No. —— San Fernando street. He is well known.

The Hartford Times thereon adds that next morning the resident of San Fernando street found his porch and front yard covered with umbrellas, restored under cover of the friendly night.

—But how different was the response to a Chicago man's advertisement of a lost umbrella. The Chicago man lost his umbrella under similar circumstances; he put in a similar advertisement, and next morning while he was at breakfast there came a thundering ring at the door-bell, and the postman gave him the following letter:

> You lie, you villain, you lie, and you know it. If I were well known you would have sent a fly cop after me. All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, and is hotter than St. Louis in midwinter. What are you giving me, eh? I will bet you $250 to $50 that you don't know who I am. Put up or shut up. Money speaks. If you have such a dead-sure thing, and want to gamble upon it, I am your peppermint-drop.

No Remarks About Weather.

It was hot yesterday. It was hotter at noon. It was so hot that passengers on the streets took off their hats, mopped their brows, and fiercely declared that they knew all the time that we'd catch it about the 1st of July. The Rome saloon had just one chair left, and this was taken by a red-whiskered man, adown whose cheeks the perspiration fairly ran. His clothes stuck to the small of his back, his big, red hands were wet to the finger-nails, and it was evident that the sun had been trying to corner him. Seven or eight men were making ready to tell him that it was a warm day, when the stranger drew a big revolver, laid it on his knee, and, looking up and down the room, slowly remarked: "Gentlemen, I'm a stranger here, but I've bought a house and lot up the street, and shall pass here six times a day. This is my day for opening the season."

Every man looked at him in a wondering way; and, gently caressing the weapon of death, the stranger added:

"It is hot weather. Even a fool knows that it's going to be hotter. Two weeks hence it will be regular old frying-pan weather. Now, then, while I shall realize it as forcibly as any one, I'll shoot the first man that says weather to me. I won't have a word about it or hear to it. I am willing to be broiled, baked or roasted, but I don't want to talk about it. Now, let some one remark that it's a hot day—bad for grass—looks like too little rain—awful dusty, or beautiful breezes, and I'll begin shooting."

Not a lisp was heard. If any one imagined that there might be frost at night in the Lower Picketwire region, he kept his thoughts to himself.—Trinidad (Col.) News.

The Profits of Farming.

It is now estimated that the wheat crop of Indiana for this year will be from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 bushels, and will bring into the State and add to the invested wealth from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000. No such sum has ever been added to the wealth of a State with as little risk or as great profit upon the capital and labor invested. It is not an unusual or exceptional thing for the product to be equal to one-half the value of the soil that produced it. Thousands of acres of land in the State have, in two years, produced wheat equal in value to the land producing it. The product of corn has been very little behind that of wheat in point of profit. This, of course, is not a common or even an average result, taking one year with another. The past three have been favored years with the farmers, and the farmer who has not done well during that period may reasonably conclude that there is something wrong in his case demanding investigation. We make no reference here to indebtedness and embarrassments from that cause, under which thousands of farmers are laboring in common with all other classes. Such indebtedness in nine cases out of ten is the result of some other cause than following their agricultural pursuit. Considering, therefore, the profit of the business as it is pursued by the average Western farmer, what may it be made when, by diligent research and experience, it is brought to that degree of perfection which has been attained in England and in some of the New England States?—Indianapolis Journal.

Treed by a Bear.

Lucy Kirkham, aged 11 years, of Brooklyn, N. Y., but spending the summer with her uncle two miles northwest of this place, had a very narrow escape from being killed by a bear on Sunday last. Miss Kirkham was driving her uncle's cows out in the woods to pasture, and as she was about to return home she heard a noise in the thicket. She stopped, and looking in the direction of the noise, her eyes beheld a large black bear coming toward her. She uttered a scream and started to run. Bruin gained on her, and, seeing no chance for escape, the terrified girl climbed a small sapling, which, owing to its small circumference, the bear was unable to ascend. The girl screamed at the top of her voice, while the animal remained at the foot of the tree growling and clawing. The cries of the girl were heard by two hunters who were passing near by, who came to her rescue. When within shooting distance, both loaded their guns, and at a given word fired. The bear fell dead. The hunters then bade the frightened girl to come down from the tree, and they accompanied her home. The bear weighed 210 pounds.—Porter's Lake (Pa.) Cor. New York Sun.

The Negro Exodus.

From conversation with colored men recently arrived here from several of the Southern States, your correspondent learns that the exodus toward Kansas this spring is nothing compared to the wholesale movement which will set in this fall. It is learned that the blacks in no Southern State are exempt from the exodus fever, but that they have it in the greatest degree in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, and South Carolina. In Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, and Virginia there are fewer symptoms of the fever. The determination to go seems almost universal in the former States named, but where to go is now the question. The time for the movement is this fall, after the crops are gathered and sold. November will be the prime exodus month, during which it is expected that fully 100,000 will leave the States named. The blacks in one district in Alabama are now having two "investigating committees" in Kansas looking over the ground. It is not likely, however, that the movement will be confined to Kansas. Illinois, Indiana, Nebraska, and Wisconsin are also considered—Wisconsin especially, as there is plenty of timber in that State, and the blacks who have gone there are reported to have done well.—Washington Correspondence.

Advantages of "Plain Living."

Faith Rochester says there are many good reasons for living on plain, simply-cooked but nourishing food. Variety is necessary; that is a judicious mingling of dishes of grains, vegetables, fruits and meats. There need be but few kinds at one meal if the family are agreed in their tastes. The larger the family, as a general rule, the more need of variety at each meal, that each one may follow natural instinct in selection, as far as can be done with due deference to the rights of others. Plain living reduces not only our expenses, but our labor in the kitchen.

Another important thing I have been taught by both reason and experience; plain living reduces our liability to diseases of all kinds. As I said recently, there has been but one case of absolute sickness (down sick in bed, undressed all day) in our little family of four children during the more than dozen years since the eldest was born. I think this is due to care in regard to the general rule of health, as no preventive or curative medicines—not even catnip tea or camphor—have been used.

Yesterday a daughter complained of slight sore throat—a very unusual complaint here—and I felt some little uneasiness, as diphtheria is abroad in this part of the country. But I felt condemned for the dinner of the day before—hot bread pancakes, upon which I knew the little girl was eating quite too much butter in a melting condition, followed by pumpkin pie, which disgraced me because it was too sweet and spicy for health. She had the good sense (or the cultivated instinct) to go without supper last night, and a wet cloth on her throat during sleep, covered by a dry one, perfected a cure of all sore throat.

Children who live habitually on plain fare show evil effects from rich food much more quickly than those who live regularly on the latter, and some suppose this proves that their stomachs are weaker on account of plain living, but I think it is because they have a more correct or healthy tone.

A Diver's Terrible Fate.

James K. Jenkins, one of the most daring divers of the country, left his home this morning to recover an anchor lying seventy-five feet under water at the bottom of the ship channel between Governor's and Ellis islands. Hugh Bowan, assistant, reminded the diver that there were one or two weak-looking places in the rubber air-tube of his diving-suit. "Yes, I know," replied Jenkins, "and as soon as this job is over I'll fix it." The party, consisting of the diver, Bogan, John Reardon, a veteran in the grappling business, Edward Netticutt, Joseph Westhall, and Peter Connolly, left the Battery in two large row-boats, and an hour later Jenkins went down the ladder at the stern of one of the boats and disappeared under the water. "He had not had more than time to reach bottom," says Bogan, "when there came a sudden sharp report, and I knew that the air-tube had burst. There was a 75 feet slack of this pipe, which is 150 feet long, coiled in the bottom of the boat. 'Keep the pump going!' I shouted to Connolly, and then, telling Netticut to hold his hands tight over the break in the pipe, Reardon, Wetherell, and I began to pull the man up. The man was down seventy-five feet, and he had 250 pounds of metal on him, besides being himself a solid man. We didn't feel the weight. As his head came above water I saw through the glass of the helmet that he was bleeding at the nose and ears. I smashed in the glass, but it was no use. I think he was alive at this moment, for his foot felt for the round of the ladder, but the next instant his head fell forward, and when we got him into the boat he was dead."—New York Sun.

THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

OPENING SPEECH OF GEN. THOMAS L. EWING,

Democratic Candidate for Governor.

Delivered at Lancaster, Ohio.

MY NEIGHBORS AND FRIENDS: I acknowledge with peculiar pleasure and gratitude this cordial welcome home. It would be insincere in me to say that I do not regard it as intended in part as a personal compliment; but its significance is that in this great citadel of Democracy, the Upper Hocking valley, the garrison is early astir with preparations for the impending conflict.

The two chief parties which claim the suffrages of the people of Ohio this fall fairly represent the national parties of which they are important divisions. The Republicans, though not as outspoken, perhaps, here in Ohio on the questions of finance and free elections as in the Eastern States, reflect the average sentiment of the whole party; and the Ohio Democracy represents the sentiment of the overwhelming majority of the party throughout the country, as is shown by every vote in both the Senate and House on every phase of those questions. The struggle, therefore, in Ohio this year is one between the dominating ideas of the two great opposing parties on the uppermost questions of the day; and chiefly to this fact is due the great momentum of influence which is everywhere conceded to it.

The Republican party enters the canvass claiming to have administered the Government economically, reduced the interest on the public debt, and established specie payments; and confidently demands a new lease of power as a public benefactor.

Let us see which of the two great parties is most entitled to credit for economy in public expenditures. The Democracy for four years past has held the House of Representatives, which controls the appropriations of public money; and in that time the appropriations for the expenses of the Government, exclusive of interest on the public debt, have been $604,619,000. For the four years preceding, during which the Republican party controlled appropriations, the same expenses amounted to $699,339,000, so that the control of one branch of Congress by the Democracy for these four years has saved the people $84,720,000, being an average of over $21,000,000 a year. Since June 30, 1866, the people have paid $4,311,000,000 in Federal taxes, and out of that vast sum but $528,000,000 have been applied to the principal of the public debt. If the Republicans had been as economical during the nine years preceding 1875 as the Democrats have forced them to be since then, the public debt would have been reduced $345,000,000 more, without imposing one dollar of additional taxes on the people. The $21,000,000 a year saved since 1875 by the Democratic House have been saved in spite of the most vehement and determined resistance of the administration and Senate; and it never would have been saved at all had not the people at last disregarded the howls about the alleged treasonable purposes of the Democracy which have formed the campaign arguments of the Republicans since the war.

We have here an illustration, fellow-citizens, of the necessity of frequent changes of administration. Reform of extravagance and abuses can only be secured by such changes. In the flush times of Grant and Boss Shepherd, the Hon. Proctor Knott asked leave to introduce a bill to pay salaries to the cast-iron boys, which are the hitching posts along the avenues, saying they were the only fellows in the District not salaried. The constant tendency of every branch, and twig, and leaflet of the public service is toward growth of patronage and power. Every subordinate finds need of some subordinate under him, every division is struggling to become a bureau, every bureau to become a department. This tendency, stimulated by the enormous revenues of the Government during the prosperous times following the war, unchecked by formidable opposition, encouraged by the desire of the Republican party to magnify the General Government which it seemed to hold under a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, has been only in part arrested by the election of a Democratic Congress. Neither the House nor the Senate can enforce thorough economy on the public service in opposition to the Executive Departments, and a complete change of administration is therefore indispensable to cut down public expenditures to the limits of economical efficiency. The annual expenses of the Federal Government in 1877, for all purposes except public debt and pensions, were $114,000,000—nearly twice as great as for the year 1860, when they were but $59,000,000. It is true the population of the country increased in that seventeen years nearly 50 per cent.; but, admitting—which is not the fact—that the expenses of the Government must increase in the ratio of the increase of population, those expenses for 1877 were $27,000,000 greater than they should have been in the ratio of the expenses of 1860, and this, too, after the Democratic Congress had made every reduction which the heads of departments could be driven to. A change of administration will demonstrate that a further very large reduction can be made, to the relief of tax-payers and the purification of the public service.

Mr. Sherman claims great credit for having successfully funded $847,000,000 of the public debt into 5, 4½ and 4-per-cent. bonds since March 4, 1877, reducing the interest paid by the Government about $10,000,000 a year. It appears, however, by the finance report, that the interest on the public debt paid in 1877 was $97,124,000, and last year $102,500,000, and this year $105,000,000. In other words, in 1878 and 1879 over $13,000,000 more of interest on the debt has been paid than when Mr. Sherman took charge of the funding operation. That large sum is what the operation cost. It is made up of bonuses in the shape of double interest, and of commissions paid to the Syndicate. Meantime Mr. Sherman has increased the principal of the bonded debt $86,000,000. It will take the savings of interest by refunding for eight or ten years to pay off this increased bonded debt, and the bonuses and double interest, and get even on the entire operation.

Why have American capitalists bought the 4-per-cent. bonds? It is because they are practically 6½-per-cent. bonds, being exempt from about 2½ per cent. of taxes which other property pays, and because the industries of the country have been so broken down that capital had better get 6½ per cent., assured by the Government, than risk an investment in almost any industrial pursuit. Is it a great achievement to have industries perish for want of money, in order that it may go into untaxed Government bonds? I admit the desirability of having our debt held at home, so far as prosperous business leaves a surplus for investment; but the readiness with which hundreds of millions of money, heretofore employed in industrial pursuits, has been turned into these bonds is only a symptom of the industrial congestion which has drawn the life-blood of business from the extremities to the heart and refused to send it back to give strength to the body. Suppose Mithoff and Whiley, here in Lancaster, should close their shops and turn out of employment several hundred men and invest their capital in untaxable bonds. Would you feel that to be an evidence of public prosperity? Would you throw up your hat for Mr. Sherman and his funding scheme? Yet that is just what has been done all over the United States. Silent mills, fireless furnaces, scanty wages, want of work, swarms of tramps, all attest the success of Mr. Sherman in so shrinking and diminishing the business of the country, the wages of workingmen, and the profits of capitalists engaged in productive industry, that money, accumulating in hordes and fearful of all other investments, was eager to take the 6½ per cent. of interest and exemption offered by the Government rather than embark on the dead sea of industry. I venture to say that the people of the United States have lost in aggregate wealth in the past five years, through the prostration of industries, brought about by the Republican finance policy, 300 or 400 times more than the nominal annual saving of interest which Mr. Sherman will accomplish by his boasted funding.

Furthermore, fellow-citizens, I assert, and am able to prove, that after all of the $4,300,000,000 of taxes paid by the people since 1866; after the nominal reduction of the public debt, $525,000,000, and after the refunding so far accomplished, the public debt of the United States to-day is a far greater effective burden on the people than it was before the first dollar of it was paid. Measure it by the things which have to be sold to pay it—by pork, corn, wheat, beef, horses, labor. It takes 50 per cent. more of labor or land or products to pay the interest to-day than it took five years ago.

How is the country benefited by a nominal reduction of $10,000,000 of interest, when the reduction has been accomplished only by adding 50 per cent. to the amount of labor or property which it takes to pay it?

The next great achievement of the Republican party has been the accomplishment of gold resumption.

Do you recollect, my friends, what Mr. Sherman promised you a year ago here on Wheeling street as the result of resumption? That gold would flow out in circulation, and that we would have a fuller volume of money actually current, and consequently a general restoration of prosperity?

Well, we have had gold resumption for over six months past. We have had, moreover, for three years past, two unparalleled favorable coincidences—enormous crops at home and a great foreign demand for our surplus. The Republican party did not give us these two blessings. A kind Providence, looking down in pity on the industrial distress inflicted by the ingenuity of theorists and usurers, relieved its asperity by bounteous harvests at home and eager markets abroad. But for our self-inflicted troubles, these great crops would have flushed our country with exuberant prosperity. But in spite of these good providences, in contradiction of all the pledges of gold resumption, which led the people to a patient but longing endurance of their trials, the promised prosperity has not come. The paper dollar is equal to the gold dollar, but the gold dollar is ingeniously kept hoarded in the treasury. The money actually current is no greater now, if as great, as it was one or two years ago. Every little debt you owe still nettles you. Every large debt still threatens you with the loss of your home, your farm, your factory, or your store. Every tax you pay calls for more labor or product than before. Wages do not increase, laborers still hunt for employers instead of employers seeking laborers, and it is at last becoming apparent that the condition of things last year and the year before is to become the permanent condition under established gold prices of labor and property.

Fellow-citizens, when the Republican party started to lead the people by contraction to the promised land of specie payments it never talked about gold prices and gold resumption, but only of "specie payments," which meant resumption in silver and gold—each equally the dollar, the unit, the full legal tender. Contraction of currency and shrinkage of values were not thought by any body below the bi-metallic level. But the demonetization of silver in Germany and the United States, and the initial steps of demonetization of the states of the Latin Union, practically destroyed the chief part of the silver half of the currency of the great nations, and caused such increased demand for the gold half that the purchasing power of gold rose between 1874 and December, 1878, a little over 50 per cent. throughout the commercial world. In other words, the gold prices of land, labor, and property throughout the world sunk over 34 per cent. Our people, therefore, were not led back by the resumptionists to the bi-metallic level of prices, but in place of the double standard the single gold standard was set up and that so increased in value that it cost any man 50 per cent. more in land, or labor, or product to pay in gold a debt of $100 in December, 1878, than it would have cost in 1874. That is, 50 per cent. was added by the demonetization of silver to all the debts and all the taxes payable to the people of the United States. I do not make this statement at random, but from tables of prices elaborately prepared each year by the New York Public, the highest authority in the United States on prices of commodities. I have made the same statement twice on the floor of Congress, and no man has questioned its accuracy.

Now, consider, fellow-citizens, the effect of adding 50 per cent. to the burden of all the debts and taxes in the United States. I have shown, in a speech made in Congress on the 23d of February last, that the public and private debts of the United States which have been carried over since 1874, and still remain unpaid, amount to little less than $10,000,000,000. This demonetization of silver and consequent enhancement of gold has added, therefore, in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000 to the debt burdens of the people; and, as our taxes for national and local government amount to about $800,000,000 a year, it has also added $400,000,000 a year, in practical effect, to the tax burdens of the people.

Do you wonder that every man who is in debt at all, and every man who has to pay taxes groans under the weight of these increased obligations? When you sell your pork at $2.25 a hundred, your labor at 90 cents a day, and other things in like proportion, to pay debts and taxes, you are enjoying the blessings of silver demonetization. Republicans of Ohio, debtors and tax-payers, employers and workingmen, farmers and tradesmen, now throw up your hats if you will for Sherman, Foster, and gold prices. Vote for the Republican party. Vote against the restoration of the old metallic level of prices through the unlimited coinage of silver; but do not growl at hard times, low wages, want of employment, pressure of debts and taxes, because that is what you vote for; and because by so voting you declare your willingness to bankrupt yourselves and impoverish your families merely to keep the office-holders of your party fattening at the public crib.

These are the financial achievements of the Republicans for which they demand a renewal of their already-unparalleled lease of power. They claim indorsement for their economy when the reductions of expenses actually effected by the Democratic House show that they have wasted at least $21,000,000 a year in profligate expenditures, and when it is apparent that they are still wasting at least $27,000,000 a year. They ask credit for reducing the public debt when they have for seven years past largely increased it. They boast of a refunding accomplished by squandering $13,000,000 of the public treasure in commissions and double interest, by largely increasing the principal of the public debt, and by a general massacre of business through contraction of values to reach the gold level of prices abnormally sunk by the destruction of half of the metallic money. They demand the grateful approval of the people for having accomplished gold resumption, regardless of the fact that all their pledges of renewed prosperity are falsified, and that the four years' march to it is strewn with more wrecks of the fortunes, hopes and happiness of the people than marked the four years of our tremendous civil war.

Finally, the Republicans claim popular indorsement because of their avowed purpose to have no further change in the financial legislation of the country. They tell us to let the finances alone, that agitation will only produce mischief, and that everything is lovely as the law now stands.

Fellow-citizens, it is idle to talk about either party letting the finance question alone. The Republican party does not intend to do it. Did it favor the present law providing for even a very limited coinage of the old silver dollar? No, the great mass of the party resisted it to the utmost. Their President vetoed it, and it was only carried through a persistent popular agitation by the Western and Southern Democracy and the Nationals, before which a portion of the Republican party weakened and voted for the bill.

Mr. Sherman says in his last annual report that the present law providing for the coinage of $2,000,000 a month cannot stand without in time overthrowing the exclusive gold standard. He has prevented that result heretofore by hoarding the coined silver as a resumption fund; but he knows there is a limit to the amount of money which the people will suffer to remain piled up in the treasury, and that the day will come when they will demand that a very large proportion of that hoarded silver shall be applied to the extinguishment of the bonded debt, and in that way the country will be forced from the gold level of prices to a bi-metallic level. Therefore, he says that the time will soon come when this coinage of the old silver dollar must cease. Neither he nor his party has any intention to permit values to rise above the low gold level. Hence the question must yet be settled whether we are to have and maintain the gold standard only, or restore the bi-metallic standard by the unlimited coinage of silver.

The two great parties are squarely at issue on this question. The Warner bill, which gave the whole profit of the coinage to the Government, but provided for placing silver exactly on a par with gold in respect of unlimited coinage, and of the issue of certificates for silver bullion, passed the House after an intense and protracted struggle, every Democrat but seven voting for the bill and every Republican but four voting against it. That bill will pass the Senate next December in spite of the opposition of half a dozen national bank and gold-standard Democrats. The almost complete unity of the Republican party in the Senate and House against the bill, with Mr. Sherman's known hostility to it, assures a veto of that great measure of relief. The contemptible cowardice of the Republican party of Ohio in failing to say a word on this great question is at once an evidence that the people demand the relief and that the Republican party are determined not to grant it.

If that measure were passed almost all the product of our silver mines will at once be poured into the channels of circulation. Certificates of denominations of $10 and upward, redeemable in coin and represented by the silver deposited, will enlarge our circulating medium and cause a wholesome rise of prices, stimulating industry, increasing production, lightening the burden of debts and taxes, and giving us a prompt and generous impulse toward renewed prosperity.

The other great finance issue not considered settled by either party is the question, Who will make and issue the paper money—the Government or the national banks? The Democratic party in Congress has always favored the substitution of treasury notes for bank notes. The Ohio Democracy this year, true to its past avowals, declares for the gradual withdrawal of national-bank notes, and the substitution therefor of treasury notes, which, in the language of the platform, shall be "receivable for all debts, and a legal tender equally with coin, * * * such Government issues to be regulated upon principles established by legislation or organic law so as to secure the greatest possible stability of values."

The Republican party intended by the Resumption law, and still intends, to take up and destroy every dollar of the greenback money. Secretaries Bristow and Morrill, in their official reports, declared that such was the purpose and effect of the law, and Mr. Sherman, its author, admitted it on the floor of the Senate. It was the agitation against the total destruction of the greenbacks by the Western and Southern Democracy and the Nationals which, against the determined opposition of the great mass of the Republican party, established the greenbacks now in circulation as part of the permanent circulation of the country. But the money power regards the costless greenback as a standing menace to its partial control of the currency, and an obstacle to that complete control which it desires and intends to secure. The paper currency will not be left half costless and half subsidized—half issued by the Government and half by private corporations. It should and will be issued wholly by one power or the other. Give the Republican party a new indorsement, dominated and controlled as it is by the national banks, and you will find that either through a contrived judicial decision or directly by legislation your greenbacks will be wiped out, and the money power will give you just as much or as little paper money for your business as it pleases, and will regulate the value of your labor and property to suit itself.

Our experience has demonstrated that, no matter how plentiful may be the supply of gold and silver, the greater part of the money actually current will always be paper. On the volume of money actually current depends the prices of labor and commodities. As that volume rises prices go up, and as it falls they go down. The whole volume of money current has rarely been over a fiftieth part of the aggregate value of the property of the country; yet, when the money in actual circulation is reduced $100,000,000, that reduction shrinks the value of labor and property to fifty times the sum of the currency reduction; and so, when the current money is increased $100,000,000 it adds fifty times that sum to the aggregate selling value of other property. So, too, when the volume of currency diminishes, and prices consequently fall, all business becomes unprosperous; while when the currency is being increased values rise and business becomes good again. The power to control the volume of currency, affecting as it does so profoundly the general prosperity, is in its nature a sovereign power. The welfare of the people demands that this power to expand or contract the currency, to raise and lower values, to give prosperity or inflict distress, shall not be committed to the hands of private individuals or corporations, and, least of all, to corporations representing the holders of public and private debts, whose wealth is increased by every fall of prices and is diminished by every rise. It should be exercised by the Government alone, in such manner as shall give to the debtors, tax-payers and industrial classes the assurance of justly-established and stable values. If 2,000 or 3,000 private corporations acting, as they always do, in the interest of the holders of money securities are permitted to control the volume of currency at their pleasure, there is no limit to the injury and loss they may inflict upon the people, or to the wealth they may themselves accumulate by hidden and concerted measures of expansion and contraction of values. It was precisely this danger which led Jefferson to resist the incorporation of the first Bank of the United States under Washington's administration, and to oppose the renewal of its charter under Madison, and which led Old Hickory to make his grand and successful fight against the recharter of the bank.

Aside from this reason against giving private corporations control of the volume of currency, it is to be borne in mind that the substitution of legal-tender treasury notes for bank notes will, even since refunding, save to the people at least $10,000,000 per annum. With the treasury notes so issued in place of national-bank notes, United States bonds can be bought in the market and canceled, and the interest thereby stopped; while the Government will lose nothing whatever in taxes by such substitution, except only the 1-per cent. tax on circulation, that being the only tax which national banks pay that is not paid by all other banks of deposit, discount and exchange.

Had the Republican party desired to diminish as rapidly as possible the public debt, it would, when the war ended, have prohibited the incorporation of any more banks of issue, and gradually substituted treasury notes for bank notes—the power to make such substitution having been reserved in the National Bank law. If they had thus promptly given the people an exclusive Government currency in place of bank notes, our bonded debt would now be at least $700,000,000 less than it is. No reason which will bear a moment's consideration can be given why this thing should not have been done. Nobody pretends that the greenback which redeems the national-bank notes is not better than the thing it redeems. There is but one reason why it failed to thus reduce the debt, and that is this: that these 2,000 national banks were needed by the party as a breakwater against the people. Hence, since the close of the war the people have been practically robbed of about $700,000,000 to prevent them exercising their free choice of their own servants.

Another bad feature of the national-bank note system is that its perpetuation makes necessary the perpetuation of the public debt, because bank notes are secured only by the bonds of the United States. Any reduction of the bonds outstanding trenches on the means of expansion of the system, while the payment of the whole debt would destroy it. Hence, the Republican party, as the faithful servant of the money power, has shown no eagerness to reduce the debt, but alacrity to increase it; while on the other hand the interest of the people demands, in the language of the Ohio Democratic platform, "that the further increase of the bonded debt in time of peace be stopped, and that it be put in process of extinction."

I have thus hurriedly discussed the claims made by the Republican party in behalf of its finance measures, and the position taken by the Democracy of Ohio in its latest platform respecting them. I am quite willing to submit to the decision of the people on these issues. I am sure that an overwhelming majority of the voters of Ohio think that the Republican party should be expelled from power; that justice and sound policy demand the restoration of silver to its old equality with gold as a money metal; that the General Government should issue all the currency, whether paper or metallic; and that our great national debt should not be increased, but, as soon as practicable, paid off according to the letter and spirit of the contract. The Democratic party of Ohio, and five-sixths of that party throughout the republic, stand united on these propositions; while the Republican party stands solid against them.

Now, why should the men of Ohio, who agree on these great fundamental measures of relief, divide in to two parties and thus defeat them? "I can't vote the Democratic ticket," says A, "because the platform doesn't declare for an income tax." "I won't vote it," says B, "because it doesn't go for an increased volume of paper money." "I shan't," says C, "because it doesn't declare that the legal tenders issued in place of bank notes shall be redeemable in coin." "Nor I," says D, "because it doesn't say that they shan't be redeemable in coin." "Nor I," says E, "because it doesn't go for a protective tariff." "Nor I," says F, "because it doesn't go against a protective tariff." But all these gentlemen, from A to F, admit and recognize the overwhelming importance of the three great financial propositions which the platform does declare, and admit that these propositions deserve to be made the prime and immediate objects of effort. Is it not, therefore, the part of wisdom to drop or postpone the less exigent questions on which we differ, and win a decisive victory on the great instant issues on which we agree?

The question of free elections has assumed a prominence never before given it, although the statutes out of which it arises have been long in force, and the Democracy have heretofore repeatedly attempted to repeal them. I may as well tell you plainly the reason the Democracy forced the issue now, though only six members of Congress are to be chosen this year. The people were swindled out of their choice for President in 1876. That fraud was accomplished by the audacious and revolutionary threat of the leaders of the Republican party, that when the election returns came to be counted the Senate and House of Representatives should not count them as contemplated by the constitution, and as practiced from the foundation of our Government, but that Mr. Ferry, of Michigan, who happened to be President pro tempore of the Senate, should himself exercise the power of determining all questions arising in the count. This threat, backed up by President Grant with a show of bringing troops to Washington and sending iron-clads to New York, was successful in accomplishing the swindle by the indirect method of the Eight-to-Seven Commission. It needed no gift of prophecy to tell that a party which was ready to disregard the constitution and all precedents in ascertaining the result of a Presidential election in 1876 would resort to any measure, however unjust or violent, to win a second victory in 1880. The army had been used to terrorize voters at the South and to pack and disperse Legislatures. Why would it not be used again if the law permitting this remained on the statute books? Supervisors and Marshals have been appointed by the thousands at each Congressional election in the large cities, made up chiefly of bummers, and paid out of the public treasury $5 a day, many of them ten days at a stretch, to force the election of Republican members of Congress against the will of the people. Hundreds of men in the South had been indicted for alleged interference with Supervisors and Marshals, and were being tried under a law for impaneling juries which packed them with partisans pre-determined to convict, making the jury trial an odious and shameful mockery of justice. Was it right to leave this party with the lawful authority to spend millions of the people's money in hiring bullies to threaten, arrest and imprison State electors and State judges and clerks of election? We determined to make the issue on these laws now, in the year preceding the great contest in which we feared they would be employed to thwart the will of the people.

The result of the struggle so far is the total repeal of the odious system of packing juries, the prohibition of the payment of money to send or maintain troops at the polls and the withholding of appropriations for fees of Marshall until Congress can see what the fees are to be paid for. We have appealed from the President to the people. You have to decide the controversy. If you want to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars each Congressional election to have bayonets around the polls and Marshals and spies to inspect and control State election officers, vote the Republican ticket, for the Democracy will never spend a dollar, or that service.

You all know, fellow-citizens, that we have in the United States a form of Government hitherto unknown among men. It is partly the result of the fact that the thirteen colonies were each separate organizations of government under distinct charters, and that they confederated as States, and declared their independence, calling themselves the United States of America. Several years after their independence was achieved, a constitution was adopted which created a central government, with certain powers therein set forth, which constitution provides as follows:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people."

These reserved powers are the great mass of the powers of government. You are protected in almost all of your rights of person and property by the State sovereignty alone. Our whole code of laws defining the rights of persons and property, and providing remedies and punishments for wrong, which make up the very body of our civilization, is adopted or created and enforced by the States, and not by the General Government. Outside of the scope of this State sovereignty lie the powers specially delegated to the other sovereign—the whole people of the United States operating through the General Government. These two sovereigns, the republic and the State, have distributed between them by the decree of partition, the constitution of the United States, all of the powers regarded by the people as safe to be intrusted to any government.

Now, by the constitution of the United States, the whole power to provide for and regulate election of members of Congress was left with the respective States; but, for fear any of them might fail altogether to provide for such elections, Congress was given power to itself, by law, to provide for them. If Ohio should refuse to pass a law to elect members of Congress, the United States might pass such a law, and provide for the times, places and manner of holding such elections and the appointment of all the election officers. But none of the States ever did refuse or fail to pass such laws; and, from the foundation of our Government down until 1871, the elections were conducted without any interference whatever by Federal officers. In 1871 the Republicans enacted this Federal Election law. It did not pretend to repeal, alter or amend any of the State laws providing for the appointment of State officers to conduct those elections or prescribing their duties, but it gave the Federal courts and Marshals the power to appoint Supervisors and Deputies to inspect and direct the action of State officers in the performance of their duties under State election laws. From the very nature of our Government—from the separate character and powers of the General and State Government—it is just as unconstitutional to subject State officers while performing duties under valid State laws to the supervision or control of Federal officers as it is to subject Federal officers to the supervision or control of State officers. That sort of interference is organized anarchy. If submitted to in respect of this subject by the States there are no duties which State officers are called on to perform which the Federal Government may not supervise or control. Mr. Foster says that "the great question is whether the State or the nation is supreme." I say the great question is whether the republic and the State are co-ordinate agencies of government, each supreme in its sphere as defined by the Federal constitution; or whether the State can exercise no powers of Government not subject to Federal supervision and control.

This assumption of sole supreme power of the Federal Government illustrates the fact that the pendulum is swinging from the extreme of secession on the one side to an equally dangerous extreme of consolidation on the other. Secession held that the Union might be divided whenever any State believed that the constitution had been violated. On that theory the republic was but a rope of sand. Consolidation demands that the Federal Government shall exercise all powers which the dominant party think expedient. On that theory all the boundaries of Federal power so carefully marked by our forefathers will be obliterated, and we shall have one great Imperial Government, to which the States will have the same relations that the counties and townships now have to the States. Secession would have broken up the Union into petty, but free, republics; consolidation would swallow up the States and sink liberty in an empire.

Fellow-citizens, I was not brought up in the school of strictest construction of the constitution, and far less in the school known as "States' rights." My venerated father, under and about whose roof you are assembled tonight, who gave a large part of his life to the study of our complex form of Government, taught his sons to learn from the constitution, as expounded by the fathers and the courts, that the General Government is supreme only within the scope of its limited and defined powers, and the States and the people thereof also supreme in the exercise of all powers not granted to the Federal Government. He taught them that it was equally the duty of the patriot to maintain in full vigor all the powers granted to the General Government, and all the powers reserved to the States respectively, or to the people; so that our dual form of Government might not be lost through either the centripetal or the centrifugal forces of the system. He willingly saw his sons go forth to battle for the constitutional powers of the Federal Government; and now, were he yet among us, he would, I believe, approve their effort to resist, by peaceful methods, the attempt to impair the distinctive feature of our system of government on which depends the perpetuation of popular liberty.

My friends, all the policies of the Republican party I have discussed this evening, though apparently differing widely in character, are in fact closely related in purpose and effect. I believe them all to be part of a general tendency of the classes which control that party to practically subvert popular government. The steps are first to destroy the independence of the masses by immensely increasing the burdens of debts and taxes, and by cutting off the opportunities and rewards of labor, and by the same act swell the wealth and power of the favored classes; and then, by allying the money power to the illimitable forces of Government patronage and plunder, to control elections by bribery and force, and practically subvert the free rule of the ballot. Look at the powers which may be brought to bear to effect this result! See the vast growth of corporations, some of which already rule with an iron hand the greatest States of the republic; look at the 2,000 national banks, holding almost every business interest and business man in their grasp; see the veteran corps of 100,000 active partisans paid from the public treasury; and tell me whether, if the policy which has impoverished the mass of the people, and piled up the vast fortunes which have risen as rapidly as cloud mountains in the sky, shall be permitted to go on; these powers, backed by the army and the navy, may not soon be strong enough to make the rule by ballot as completely a farce as it was in the republic of the bogus Napoleon. Neither the great wealth-holding powers of this republic, nor the party which represents them, can be trusted with the preservation of the sacred fire of liberty. They have not sufficient interest in preserving it. They are at least as safe under a corrupt and aristocratic rule. They want privilege, exemption, aristocracy—not equal rights, equal taxation and the ballot. It may be long before they strike at the mere form of our Government, but they have struck and are striking at its spirit. I speak not of individuals, but of classes; for among the wealthiest men are many of both parties who love and are faithful to our democratic system of government. But it is the mass of the people, the farmers, the owners of small industries, and those whose dependence and hope for themselves and their children is in well-paid labor—who have the profoundest interest in the preservation of every part of this most perfect form of government, in which is set the jewel of popular liberty. They have it in their keeping—in the free ballot, held by independent men—and, if they would hand it down to their children, they must protect themselves from impoverishment by insidious finance legislation, and prevent the ballot-box from being wrested from the control of their home government.

Too Good.

A very good and pious-looking young man applied for a position in a well-known store last week. After he had introduced himself and made known his wants, the proprietor informed him that he would like to have a clerk, if he could get one that would suit him.

"I suppose you go to church, eh?" he commented.

"Yes, sir."

"Do you drink?" continued the merchant, eying him sharply.

"Never!"

"Do you use tobacco in any form?"

Here the young man pushed the quid into the roof of his mouth, and replied with a smile that was childlike and bland:

"I never use the weed, and never did. I consider it the lowest and most shocking habit that a man can be addicted to."

"Do you frequent the policy shops?"

"No, sir, never."

"Do you go to the National Theater, dog fights or boxing exhibitions?"

"Never was in any in my life," was the emphatic reply.

"Can you tell the ace of diamonds from the king of clubs?"

"I know nothing whatever of cards!"

"Do you ever bet?"

"No, sir, I don't!"

"Suppose," said the merchant, "a man should offer to bet $1,000 to $10 that a three-legged goat could outrun a greyhound, would you take him?"

"No, sir!"

"Then you won't do for this establishment, we don't want you—we never hire fools!"

That youth won't be so good next time.

A Great Discovery in Bridge Building.

"We have made one great discovery, which every railroad or bridge builder in the West ought to know about," said the engineer. "What is it?" I asked. "Well, we used to try to drive the piles, but we discovered that we could sink them better by hydraulics. That is, we now place a steel hose on the lower end of the pile, then start the engine, and the stream of water tears up the sand and gravel, and the pile drops of its own weight fifteen feet into the ground. Once there, nothing can move it. Now, this is the way to place piles in the lakes and rivers out West. Why, with this discovery I can bridge a river as cheaply as I can make the same distance of elevated railroad. No more suspension bridges, except over high streams, after this; no more Howe-truss bridges, either. Why I can bridge the Mississippi for $100,000 with a bridge that will look like piece of iron lace hanging in the air.—New York Correspondence.

A Burglar's Ruse.

The Bill Sikes fraternity, in following out their profession of house-breaking, sometimes give evidence of an amount of ingenuity worthy of a better cause. A burglar concealed under the bed of a married couple, by some incautious movement, almost betrayed his presence, the noise he made being sufficient to make the wife call her husband's attention to the sound. "It's only one of the dogs," was the sleepy answer, and, snapping his fingers, he called by its name one of his favorites which was supposed to be present. The thief's presence of mind did not desert him, though on the brink of discovery; for, divining the situation at once, he immediately licked the extended hand, in the hope of confirming the gentleman's surmise. This clever ruse was not, however, we believe, successful, though one might say it deserved to be for its boldness and ingenuity.—Chambers' Journal.

State Items.

THE Board of Health of Madison has officially declared Madison to be quarantined against Memphis.

HON. JAMES S. HESTER, Judge of the Ninth judicial district, died the other day at his home in Rushville, of congestion of the brain.

WM. H. OTT, a farmer and prominent citizen of Bartholomew county, has died after a long illness. He was a soldier in the Mexican war.

HYATT's flouring mills, together with 4,000 bushels of wheat, at Washington, were burned, the other night. Loss, $16,000; insured for $9,000.

THE First National Bank, of Bedford, is making arrangements to wind up. The stockholders will continue business as a private banking firm.

THE wife of Thomas Brown, an old lady living five miles west of Cloverdale, was seized with a fit of coughing, and died in about fifteen minutes.

A FRIGHTFUL accident, involving the loss of a locomotive and seventeen freight cars, loaded with coal and flour, all valued at $30,000, occurred at Plainfield, owing to some obstruction having been placed across the track, nearly in front of the depot.

THE Knox sugar refinery and starch works, at Vincennes, valued at $250,000, were destroyed by fire, one day last week. The works were owned by James H. and James A. Cunningham. They had just been rebuilt, the new buildings being of brick, with slate roofs. The cooper shops and warehouses, both frame buildings, surrounded on all sides by burning buildings, escaped. The fire originated in a spark from a passing locomotive falling into a corn-bin, a few minutes after 12, while the men were at dinner. About 3,000 bushels of corn were consumed. Ninety men are thrown out of employment.

A Brass Parasol Top in a Child's Throat.

A little child of Mr. George Minton spit from his mouth, after severe spell of coughing, one day last week, a brass top off the handle of a parasol. It had been exactly three years and ten months since the child had, as was supposed, swallowed it. During all this time the little fellow had been a constant but patient sufferer, as the brass top, which was something in the shape of a ring, was closely fitted over the wind-pipe. The child is now perfectly relieved.—Sparta (Ga.) Independent.

The New York Tammanyites recently met and adopted resolutions declaring that under no circumstances would the democracy of New York city vote for Robison for governor. Robison is for Tilden, and Tilden is for Robison. Tammany is opposed to both of them. Indiana is solid for Hendricks; is New York solid for Tilden?

* * *

The Indiana wheat crop of this year is estimated at 55,000,000 bushels, of that amount DeKalb county is credited with 456,000 bushels. Upon that basis the money value of the wheat crop in this county, at 90 cents per bushel, would be $410,400 for a single year, which amount will be a great relief to the business interests of our people, and will no doubt stimulate enterprise and encourage improvement.

* * *

The new editors of the Decatur Democrat, (just in from Ohio) take the Indianapolis Sentinel to task for favoring Mr. Hendricks for president, rather than Tilden. The Democrat urges that "Tilden is not a coward, and that he is 'the most formidable candidate spoken of." It will be some time before our Ohio friends succeed in convincing Indiana democrats that they don't know NEARLY as much about Mr. Tilden as the average Buckeye.

* * *

The democratic party of New York seems to be worse divided than ever. Judge Church is likely to be a candidate for governor at the democratic state convention, against Robinson, (Tilden's man) in order to forestall Tilden's nomination for the presidency. In the event that Church is nominated, and elected governor, New York will present his name to the national convention for president. Then we hope to see Church favor Hendricks, as Hendricks favored Tilden—take the second place.

Amos Walters, the popular boss of the Fort Wayne mail-carriers, resumed his duties a week or so since, after an extended trip to the far west, somewhere in the neighborhood of the setting sun. He had well earned his furlough, too, having been a faithful attache to the postoffice department and one of the oldest carriers since the system was adopted. We may add, however, that there isn't a better disciplined, better behaved, or better looking gang of mail carriers, as a whole, than the Fort Wayne corps—take it from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Dominion of Canada to the gulf of Mexico.

To the Democrats of DeKalb County.

The increasing discussion of national and state politics so long before the campaign of 1880, admonishes us that thorough organization will be expected of the democrats in every county in the state of Indiana. The democrats of DeKalb county must not be caught napping while other counties are organizing for the great fight of '80. We make these few suggestions, thus far in advance, that our county central committee may be prepared to act promptly when called upon. In the meantime would it not be advisable to consider the propriety of changing the manner of making nominations for county officers? We realize the fact that the time when delegate conventions gave satisfaction is past, and in order to have harmony and strength for a county ticket, some other system must, or ought to be adopted by the democracy of this county. We believe that a primary election is the only sure and safe guarantee against log-rolling and combinations; and with a view to the adoption of the primary system, we shall from time to time make such suggestions as seem to us advisable, and hope the matter will be carefully considered by each and every democrat in the county.

The yellow fever at Memphis is still on the increase. It is supposed that the whole number of cases up to this date will reach 500, of which about 100 have proved fatal.

* * *

A democrat of this city, and who is not now and never has been, a candidate for any office, a few days ago subscribed for twenty-five copies of the Union to be sent to his friends in different localities in the county. He believes he can serve the democratic cause in no other way better than by increasing the circulation of the home organ.—Warsaw Union.

Model man! model democrat! A friend of knowledge, a lover of democracy. Such men deserve unbounded praise from the press of any party.

In a paragraph relating to the withdrawal of Mr. R. H. Weamer from the editorial department of the Adams county Union, which position he had assumed but a few weeks ago, the Decatur Democrat says:

"Mr. Weamer informs us that he has taken charge of the Auburn Republican, and will begin business at once. That he will give the people of DeKalb county a first-class paper in every respect there is no doubt."

Mr. Weamer should stick to it this time, as he has doubtless ascertained that the people of DeKalb county are about as "white" and fair-minded as can be found in other portions of the state.

A Deserving Institution.

We received last week, a copy of the first annual review of the Miami Valley College, which is situated, as its name indicates, in the Miami Valley, at Springboro', Warren Co., Ohio, about sixteen miles from Dayton. This issue, being the first, partakes somewhat of the nature of a catalogue, as it contains a brief history of the college, together with its special aims for the future; hereafter, however, it is intended that the pamphlet shall be prepared by the students, as "a sort of intermediate link between present students and former ones." This college, in many respects, is superior to any in the northwestern states, as it offers numerous special advantages which others cannot give. We speak from personal knowledge and not hearsay, as the writer was five years ago one of its number of students and passed one of the pleasantest periods of his life underneath its roof, leaving there in June, 1874; and to parents who contemplate sending their children away to school, desiring to give them a thorough, practical and common-sense education, we can heartily recommend the Miami Valley College, and would advise all such to write for catalogues and circulars to Eugene H. Foster, president, or S. J. Heston, secretary.

Special Session of Commissioner's Court.

The board of commissioners met in special session at the court house, in Auburn, on Monday, the 11th inst., and transacted the following business to-wit:

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by Samuel Goodwin et. al, in Union township, whereupon Wm. H. Lens files his petition for damages, in the sum of $200. Review ordered and cause continued.

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by Geo. W. Feagler, et. al, in Richland township. Report dismissed on motion of E. S. McDowell, by his attorney, H. C. Peterson. Review ordered and cause continued.

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by Hugh Watt, et. al, in Richland township. Report dismissed on motion of E. S. McDowell, by his attorney, H. C. Peterson. Messrs. Wm. Whetsel, Joseph Shryock and Wesley I. Work appointed reviewers, and cause continued.

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by C. Rosenberry, in Troy township, whereupon John Casebeer files his petition for damages. Cause continued for further evidence.

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by C. Sheets, in Richland township. C. A. Mead files his motion to dismiss; motion overruled; whereupon said Mead petitions for damages. Review ordered.

Viewers report on ditch petitioned for by J. W. Lawhead, in Franklin township. After hearing evidence the ditch was declared located and established.

The trustee of Newville township was authorized by the board of commissioners to contract an indebtedness of $1,000, for the purpose of erecting a school-house in district No. 5, in said township.

The board then proceeded to contract with an expert for the return of unlisted personal property. Below we give a copy of the record, and full text of contract:

WHEREAS, The board find it of indispensable public necessity to employ an expert to investigate and furnish proofs to the proper officer, of the failure to list for taxation, moneys, credits and other property liable to taxation and

WHEREAS, it is believed by the board that large sums of money and credits escape taxation by reason of failure to list the same, and the concealment thereof, and said property should contribute its just proportion of taxes, but cannot be made to do so except a thorough investigation be made.

THEREFORE, the board has this day employed W. J. Cunningham to perform such service and executed with him the following contract, to-wit:

We, the undersigned commissioners of DeKalb county, Indiana, hereby authorize and employ W. J. Cunningham to look up and furnish proofs to the proper officers of said county, of the omission of any moneys, credits or other property from the tax duplicate of said county for the year A. D. 1879 and previous years, the same being liable for taxation under the laws of the state of Indiana. Said proofs must be sufficient in each case to compel payment of the tax that may be due on the moneys, credits and property thus omitted from assessment. Said Cunningham shall be allowed for his services, eighteen (18) per cent of all the taxes collected by said county, from the moneys, credits and other property that has been thus omitted, and which shall have been listed and assessed as the immediate result of the labor of said Cunningham. And it is further agreed that the said eighteen per cent. of the taxes thus collected shall be payment in full for all services rendered and money expended by said Cunningham in the prosecution of said business. It is further agreed that said Cunningham shall not receive any remuneration or percentage of taxes collected from the assessment of said property after the collection of the taxes on said property for the year 1879.

The New York Tribune, in speaking of the south, says: "The people of the north do not believe that the free will of the section has been expressed in any recent election. They believe that one-third of the electoral votes of this country, one third of the seats in congress, and more than one-third of the states, are controlled by a law-defying mobocracy, the most infamous kind of government known among men." The people of the north as well as the south, believe that Hayes occupies the government mansion through the fraud and treachery of the republican party. They believe that the republican party stole the presidency, and that it is now stealing the government poor, through the agency of John Sherman. They believe that the WHOLE GOVERNMENT, under Hayes and his horde is "controlled by a law-defying mobocracy, the most infamous kind of government known among men." They believe that the republican party ought to be hamstrung and quartered, and they propose to perform the operation in 1880.

Again the Tribune says: "It seems to the people of the north high time that those who refuse to govern themselves with decency, fairness and respect for law, should cease to have any hand in governing the United States." A frank confession that the republican party desires to disfranchise the people of the south,—niggers and all,—only because the southern states are all democratic. It would not be long, if the south should not be permitted to "have any hand in governing the United States," until the same demand would be made of the north, and a centralized government would be the result. Such is modern republicanism.

ISAAC HAGUE'S

NEW SHOE STORE!

A NEW STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES

Arriving daily, for spring and summer trade. Fine goods for ladies a specialty. A full line of men's and boy's shoes, of the lates styles, at low prices. Our facilities for buying are such as to enable us to buy at manufacturers prices, thereby saving our customers one or more profits. Call and examine our stock and satisfy yourselves that what we say is true.

MR. CHARLES RAUT

Is associated with me, and as we are both experienced workmen, we are prepared to do custom work, either sewed or pegged, on short notice and at reasonable rates. Repairing promptly attended to. Remember the place,— first door east of McQuiston & Ralston's double store, north of the court house, Auburn, Ind.

16-tf. ISAAC HAGUE

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the clerk of the DeKalb circuit court of the state of Indiana, administrator of the estate of Hiram Lontzenheizer, deceased, late of said county. Said estate is supposed to be insolvent.

HENRY HINES, Adm'r.
Attest G. H. K. Moss, Clerk. 30-1.

$300 A MONTH guaranteed. $12 a day at home made by the industrious. Capital not required; we will start you. Men, women, boys and girls make money faster at work for us than at anything else. The work is light and pleasant, and such as anyone can go right at. Those who are wise who see this notice will send us their address at once and see for themselves. Costly outfit and terms free. Now is the time. Those already at work are laying up large sums of money. Address, TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 23-1y

Commissioners' Sale of Land.

Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the DeKalb circuit court, in the case of Mariah Dixon and others, against Sebastian Testison, I, as the Commissioner in said cause, will on the premises herein described, on

Saturday, July 26th, 1879,

at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale the following real estate to-wit:

The east fraction of the south west quarter in section fourteen, (14), in township thirty-three, (33), north of range fourteen, (14), east, (except the right of way of the Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Chicago railroad company,) also the south fraction of the north west quarter of the same section, containing one hundred and thirty and 75-100 acres more or less. For any sum not less than two-thirds of the appraised value, on the following terms, to wit: One third of the purchase in hand, and the balance in three equal annual payments, with six per cent. interest, waiving valuation laws.

J. D. LEIGHTY, Com'r.

The above sale is postponed until Saturday, the 23rd day of August, 1879, at the same hour and place.

J. D. LEIGHTY, Com'r.

July 26, 1879.

—"When did you get back?"

—The excursion crop is immense.

—Kiblinger & Co. sell wood and iron pumps.

—Several Auburnites are at Hillsdale to-day.

—Did any one ever see a horse fly or a saw buck?

—Choice roast and steak, at Houston's meat market.

—Cooking stoves by the train load, at Kiblinger & Co.'s

—Waterloo fair, Oct. 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, 1879. Get ready for it.

—Go to the C. O. D. store for fancy notions and fine dress goods.

—New stock of bird-cages received this week, by Kiblinger & Co.

—Price groceries at the C. O. D. store and you will find them very low.

—Fourteenth of August! Great Cæsar! Will summer never come?

—Houston's meat market is always supplied with choice meats of all kinds.

—The Garland base-heating coal stove, a beauty, sold only by Kiblinger & Co.

—Kiblinger's intelligent white "dorg" doesn't notice Coop. Ralston on the street.

—The invalid finds in Dr. Lindsey's Blood Searcher nature's great restorer. It is wonderful.

—When you want a stove call on Kiblinger and Co.; they are always at the bottom, in prices.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. Swihart left last Tuesday for Washington, Mo., to be absent several weeks.

—The only large stock, and full assortment of hats in Auburn, is that of Schaab, Beugnot & Co.

—S. U. Tarney, the west-side meat furnisher, made a voyage to Ft. Wayne Mondy last, to see—his cousin.

—If you want to buy a suit of clothes dirt cheap, go to Upmeyer's C. O. D. store, in Odd Fellows' building.

—Hon. A. P. Edgerton was in town a short time Friday, on his way to his summer residence in Hicksville.

—After purchasing a "Traveler's Guide," the amateur tourist discovers exactly how travelers are guyed.

—Sellers' liver pills are the secret to perfect health, long life and absolute happiness. Sold by all druggists.

—Miss Bell, one of Auburn's charming belles, is visiting with Celia Rank this week.—Butler Record, Aug. 7.

—Do not invest a dollar in drygoods or clothing until you have examined the stock of Schaab, Beugnot & Co.

—Miss Kate Clugston and Miss Lillie Compton, of Larwill, visited the family of the senior editor this week.

—A large and select gang of the boys from Fort Wayne went through yesterday noon, on their way to the Hillsdale regatta.

—Mr. Rummel supplies the market with choice vegetables of all kinds. He will please accept our thanks for a fine assortment.

—Duplex corsets for $1.00, other corsets at from 30c. to $1.00. Back combs from 10c. to 25c. at McQuiston & Ralston's. 30-6w.

—The new C. O. D. store, in the Odd Fellows' building, is having a nice trade. Give the boys a chance when you want a bill of goods.

—From all appearances, we wouldn't be at all surprised to see Jay Eastman, of the C. O. D. store, come back in double harness.

—Old soldiers from all the neighboring counties in this state and a number from Ohio, will be in attendance at the coming re-union.

—Farmers, remember that Schaab, Beugnot & Co., are paying the highest market price for wheat. Be sure and see them before selling.

—One of our doctors tells us that green corn and cucumbers are now telling their little tales. Beware of them, for they are liable to W up.

—The hay in the court-house yard has finally been made while the sun shone, and a man can now go safely through without danger of losing himself.

—Contentment is said to be better than riches, but it doesn't answer the purpose half so well when the tailor sends in his bill for that last pair of pants.

—Call at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's. and see the immense stock of goods now on hand. Don't be backward about asking prices, whether you want to buy or not.

—The constitutional right to bare arms is guaranteed to every pretty woman.—Ex. But the slender maiden, though she may be pretty, can't bear to bare them.

—Miss Mollie Sprott left yesterday for Jackson, where she will spend a few days visiting the family of Dr. J. J. Littlefield. Miss Sadie Hare didn't go this time.

—Auburn has several fine church choirs that furnish excellent music, but there are persons who prefer congregational singing, and we advise them to visit the German Methodist church, if they want to listen to genuine soul-stirring music.

—In a few more months Ft. Wayne will be the liveliest town in the state.—Ft. Wayne News.

It may be four years, and it may be four-ever.

—The best place in town to buy a handsome present for your wife or daughter, is at the store of Schaab, Beugnot & Co. Goods are being offered terrible low.

—Jay Eastman left yesterday to attend the regatta at Baw Beese lake, Mich., and will be home to-day. Go steady, Jay, and bet your lucre on the winning crew.

—C. C. Shaffer's new brick house on Van Buren street is getting up into the air slowly, but with much certainty, and it will be a handsome residence when completed.

—Rev. W. J. Norris went down to Ft. Wayne on business Tuesday afternoon, and we are indebted to him for acting in the capacity of mail-carrier, pro. tem., for us.

—Large posters and handbills will be out in a few days, calling attention to the soldiers' re-union at this place. Sept. 19th and 20th are the days fixed for a grand old time.

—Some of the large property holders of DeKalb county will find some interesting reading matter in the report of the proceedings of the commissioners, in another column.

—If you want to sign a petition of any kind, step into Sherm. Hollister's restaurant; he has them of all sizes, ages and colors, and you can pay your toll and take your choice.

—"A colored woman at Granbury, Texas," says an exchange, "has given birth to twins, one of whom is black and the other white." We've got our opinion of the white one.

—Rob. McClellan bought Lute Wright's bay mare last week for $115, and Messrs. Howard Griswold and I. N. Cool sold their little sorrel mare to County Clerk Moss for $125.

—Popular utensils—Fans and mosquito-bars.—Republican. "Utensils" is a real good word, but we had never learned that "fans and mosquito-bars" belonged to the culinary department.

—The liberal premiums offered by the N. E. Indiana Agricultural Association are attracting attention everywhere. Both Ohio and Michigan will be represented in the live-stock departments.

—The entire COURIER establishment has a "weakness" for apples, and if somebody will turn in a couple of bushels on subscription, we will stow them away; but don't all come at once.

The Lagrange Standard prints a very good recipe for breaking up a town, under the caption of "How to kill a town;" but the most effective method we know of is to drop a case of yellow fever into it.

—Our job department is crowded this week. We can do more if we have to.—Republican. Ah, yes, quite likely; but suppose'n you "don't 'have to'?" We opine that it didn't "crowd" you out of the office.

—John Beard leaves to-morrow to accept a job of teaming on a farm near Waterloo; he says he wants to be a granger and with the grangers stand,—some hay-seed in his boot legs, and a pitch-fork in his hand.

—James Gilliland, who has for two years past dealt out edibles to the patrons of Hollister's restaurant, has severed his connection therewith, and is now taking a rest. He has been faithful to his charge.

—A couple of expert safe-crackers got their work in at Fred. Hake's saloon, at Fort Wayne, last Thursday morning. They blew open the safe and skipped out with two watches and about $100 in money.

—Second quarterly meeting at the M. E. church, next Saturday and Sunday. Rev. A. Marine will occupy the pulpit; those who never heard his eloquence should attend. Those who have heard him will be glad to hear him again.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co have commenced buying wheat at the Saginaw elevators, and we think it will be to the interest of all those having wheat to sell, to call and see them, as they will pay as much as you can get anywhere.

—Geo. Grund went down to Fort Wayne last Monday, and it was reported that he had gone "for keeps;" the fellow that said so, though, is "another," as George may still be found, razor in hand, behind his old chair in Sam. Pommert's tonsorial room.

—Tice has said that this will be the hottest summer for 200 years, but we think that he is a "durned old ignoramus," besides being unreliable; and he'd think so himself if he had been here a few days ago, in the middle of August, without his overcoat.

—A young man named Henry Errick, living on a farm near Huntertown, was most horribly cut to pieces, Wednesday morning of last week, by falling in front of the knives of a reaper which he was operating. He was fearfully mangled, and died almost instantly.

—The Auburn boys, or any other boys, cannot learn to play ball without practice, and their last two defeats may be attributed to the fact that they only play together when they play a match game. This will never win—hardly always; better practice some or withdraw.

—Mr. Chas. Klotz is now the authorized agent for the improved light-running Domestic sewing machine, the best in the world. He also sells the New Home, another first-class machine. Examine his machines before you buy.

—The senior editor acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to meet with his old comrades at the fourth annual re-union of the Holmes county soldiers' association, at Millersburg, Ohio, on the 31st inst.

—They were out driving. Said Theodore, "What tree, Angelina, bears the most precious fruit?" Angelina—"Oh, Dorry, I can't tell, unless it is a cherry tree!" Theodore looked unutterable sweetness as he gazed into Angelina's eyes and said, "The axle-tree, darling!"

—John Potts, a thrifty farmer living near Sedan, gave us a pleasant call last Friday and renewed his subscription to the COURIER. He reports general health good in that neighborhood and says that oats and wheat are fine, the latter yielding from 25 to 30 bushels an acre.

—A woman with two heads has just arrived from Europe. Eight bonnets a year—only think of it!—Goshen Independent.

Yes, and just think of her husband undergoing two tongue-lashings at once!—Warsaw Indianian.

And buying powder for two faces!

—Having engaged in a partnership in business, for the future, we desire speedily to close up all past accounts. Those knowing themselves indebted to either of us on open account will please call and settle the same, either by cash or note. And oblige, T. G. MATHENY,
32-tf J. B. CASEBEER.

—A basket meeting will be held in McCagne's grove, near Sedan, next Sabbath, August 17, under the management of the Lutheran church. Rev. D. F. Kain, of Decatur, will assist the pastor; services to begin at half past ten a. m. Everybody is cordially invited to attend and bring baskets well filled with eatables.

—The inimitable and irrepressible "Tom" Mays writes to the Journal that he is coming to Logansport in a few days with a first-class Pinafore troupe. He vouches for the excellence of the performance, and refers to its successes at Crawfordsville, Danville, Ills., etc., as a confirmation of his judgment.—Logansport Journal.

—Max G. Lade, proprietor of the sportsmens' emporium at Fort Wayne, was in town last week, having brought up a $100 shot-gun to S. Swihart. Any of our people visiting Fort Wayne, even though they may not intend to purchase, will be amply repaid by looking into Mr. Lade's establishment on east Main street.

—The DeKalb county annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ will be held at the church at Cedar Lake, Smithfield tp, commencing Friday 22nd inst, and continuing until Monday following. Day meetings in a grove near the church. Elders Bartell of Ohio, and Treat, of Ind., are expected to be present, beside the resident ministers of the county and adjacent regions.

—Who could have been mean enough to send us that overgrown cigarette last week? We always did hanker after a good cigar, but can't use cigarettes cooked in any style—to say nothing of their being wrapped up in a yellow hand-bill and filled with half a cart-load of vile tobacco that would make a man pick his own pockets if he smoked it. No, thank you; we just smoked.

—Messrs. Wm. Sheffer and S. H. Rush have formed a copartnership, under the firm name of Sheffer & Rush, in the harness, saddle and carriage-trimming business. A full stock of light and heavy harness, saddles, collars, whips, &c, &c, always on hand. Carriages and buggies trimmed in first-class style, at low rates. Give the boys a call, at the old stand of G. Rhodenbaugh.

—The Wabash railway is doing an immense freight business at this time, as may be inferred from the statement that, while the writer was making a trip from Fort Wayne to Toledo, a week or two since, the passenger train side-tracked at Defiance for six freight trains, averaging—as the baggageman informed us, forty-two cars each. As for their inducements to passengers, read the advertisement on our eighth page, headed "Saved."

—Misses Anna Wood and Effie Wunderlich lent their presence to the Rome City excursion last Thursday. They spent a few days very pleasantly at the depot in LaOtto, waiting for the train, also visiting the public library and art gallery, where they entirely lost themselves in ancient literature and relics of the olden time. They are now in Auburn, and will be pleased to relate their romantic adventures to any inquiring friends.

—The announcement that a medical student of Lafayette is wearing a pair of slippers made from the skin of a deceased Cincinnati belle, has stirred up considerable excitement, and the names of the student and the belle or that of the liar are demanded for publication.—Exchange.

If true, that's the first case on record where a belle ever got down to a medical student's feet.

—Thos. J. Chamberlain, of Detroit, traveling salesman for the firm of Buhl, Ducharme & Co., extensive wholesale hardware dealers, was in town Tuesday. Tom is a jolly boy, and a pushing, go-ahead-ative fellow, whom we have known from the blissful days of childhood; and we note with pleasure that he is destined to make a success of life.

—'Smatter with Brother Starr, of the Hicksville News? It came to us last week in folio form, and was so little that Postmaster Rainier put two in the COURIER box, thinking they were only one. We separated them, though, and "whacked up" with the Republican. Nothing small about us—except our income.

—The "Silent Night" was broken in upon Tuesday by a party of serenaders, who sang several so-lows that were, without an exception, good. Not being a graduate in music ourself, our wife tells us they were bass solos, which we think they were, as they were so low we could hardly hear them; but you have our thanks, just the same.

—The COURIER says that cholera infantum which proved such a scourge there two years ago, is again prevailing at Auburn.—Ligonier Banner.

We hear almost everything the COURIER says, and we can't be made to believe that it has made any such unfounded remark this year. If cholera infantum is "again prevailing in Auburn," will somebody please tell us whose "infantums" have been "collared?"

—The fellows who made away with a lot of tobacco, peaches, etc., at the junction Friday night, have been just about as well as caught, one of the number, a mere boy of sixteen, who lives at St. Joe, having been easily entrapped and arrested. The boy, whose name is Freemont Young, gave the others "dead away," and will appear against them, though he has been released on a fifty-dollar bond; he claims to have been led on by them, and, as it is his first offense, he will doubtless go free.

—As Mr. Upmeyer, of the C. O. D. store, was coming up from Garrett last Thursday evening, with a single horse and buggy, and when near the junction depot, the horse suddenly became frightened and ran away, throwing Mr. Upmeyer and a lady who accompanied him out upon the ground. Fortunately they received no injury, but the horse and buggy were pretty badly demoralized; that is, the horse was, and the buggy was demolished.

—Fred. Boltz, the Fort Wayne boatist, passed through town Monday noon, on his way to Hillsdale, Mich., where he will participate in the regatta. He showed us three elegantly modeled badges, one of which he took at Toledo a year ago, and the other two at the same place last month. All were won in single scull races, and were awarded by the Northwestern Amateur Rowing Association. We hope he may lug back another this time.

—Jimmy McGill, who left this city two weeks ago for Colorado, has been heard from. He is at Como, a station 30 miles this side of Leadville, bill clerk for the Denver, South Park & Pacific R. R. Co. Jimmy says it is grand, and likes it first-rate. He says he feels 10,000 feet above us if he aint any bigger.—Fort Wayne News.

Jim occupied a similar position in the Ft. W., J. & S. freight-house at Jackson, not long since, and he knows all about it. If he stays right with it, he'll doubtless soon be president of the whole outfit.

—A very enjoyable social gathering took place at Mr. Clark's residence, on Seventh street, last Friday evening, it being a party given by Fred., in honor of Misses Minnie and Anna Prichard, of Janesville, Wis., who are visiting at his home. Music and dancing were the principal features of the evening's entertainment, together with—well, yes,—a bountiful supply of refreshing refreshments at about 12 o'clock, after which the "mazy" was resumed for an hour or so and enjoyed by all to the fullest extent. Everybody had a good time, and we hope Fred's friends may come thick and fast.

—A party of base-ballists from Waterloo, whom for convenience we will call the "Beat 'Ems," came down last Thursday to play our home boys—whom for further convenience we will designate as the "Bunged Ups"—and they went back with the chromo; score, 23 to 24. But this is not all. Our boys, galled and stung by the Waterloo defeat, rushed over to Concord on the following Saturday, eager for "sweet revenge," blood or anything; but again they were ignominiously beaten, Concord carrying off the cake by a score of 13 to 21. The Auburnites came home tired, sadder and wiser.

—John Clair, (his name must be Clair because he said so himself), a thoroughbred walking pirate, vulgarly called a tramp, was given quarters in the county refrigerator last Friday evening, for having robbed the house of Jacob Geinder, a farmer living about eight miles east of here on the Butler road. Mr. Geinder was away at the time, though other members of the family had left the house alone but about one hour, and it was in this interval that the gentleman of leisure got his work in, carrying off finances to the amount of $111 in greenbacks and about $7 in silver, all of which has been recovered. The tramp gave himself away very badly, besides losing his wealth and his reputation,—"und sdill he don't vas habby."

—A dam-sell who has been laboring in Billy Rainier's culinary apartment for a short time past, and who left there by request a few days since, got slightly "off her ker-base" last Friday. After procuring five or four bowls of corn extract, she proceeded to Mr. Cool's livery-stable and ordered a rig, saying that she fain would go to Garrett; and while Frank Griswold was back in the barn getting out a team, the maiden tapped his vest, which was hanging near by, and abstracted therefrom a silver watch. Frank discovered it when he returned, however, and demanded the light-fingered dame to "produce," at the same time demonstrating his earnestness by closing in on her majesty's windpipe. She was sober enough to understand that something was wrong, and so handed over the ticker, after which she took a bee line for Garrett, where she now is, probably,—drunk.

THE OLD SCHOOL HOUSE.

BY HATTIE E. A. CRESSY.

Still stands the old red school house,
In the craggy willows' shade,
Close beside the noisy brook,
That runs along the glade.

Within are rude, long benches,
With counters strung behind,
With shelves beneath for books,
Which 'twere difficult to find.

Then there's the huge white table,
And the old cane-bottomed chair,
Where sat the [illegible] school-marm,
With mind o'erstrung with care.

Many a long, long year ago,
One sultry August day,
One little maiden stayed within,
While the others were at play.

With bowed head the culprit stood,
Tears raining on the floor,
While shouts of joyous laughter,
Drifted through the open door.

Rising from his seat, a boy,
With boldness in his face,
Marched up to the girl and said,
"Please, marm, I'll take her place!"

"You can keep her company,"
Was the teacher's smart reply,
And, there they stood, he looking bold,
And she reserved and shy.

Night came, and the scholars left,
But these two were detained,
And before they were released,
How fearfully it rained.

The thunder roared, the lightning flashed,
More noisy grew the brook,
And the teacher viewed her charge
With a more gentle look.

'Twas growing dark, the storm increased—
The children lived a mile away;
So, hand in hand, they started on,
Saying, "We'll be home at close of day."

There were many streams to cross,
And they were now growing high,
But the gallant little boy
Resolved to ford them all or die.

So, taking Bessie in his arms,
He hastened on at hunter's speed,
Knowing, if he bore her safely home,
He would perform a noble deed.

But they had not gone half way
When a bridge they'd nearly crossed
Was swept with fury down the stream,
And the children both were lost.

No one heard their dying shrieks,
But in the morning they were found
Wrapped closely in each other's arms,
Lying on the storm-washed ground.

Then the grief that fell that day
O'er the homestead and the school;
The parents' heads in sorrow bowed,
The scholars heeding not a rule.

And a little tablet still,
With the dead ones' names thereon,
Perched above the writing desk,
For the school to look upon.

But the walls are crumbling fast,
The house is going to decay,
And soon the tablet, walls and all
Will have passed from sight away.

WAY DOWN SOUTH.

The Mountains and Lowlands—Different Kinds of Hospitality.

BY W. W.

If there is any convertible term in the English language that should be made to do duty upon occasion when the purpose is to draw the lines betwixt motives and their fruition in relation to the every-day walks of life, it is that term "hospitality"—when it is applied to society in widely-separated and strongly-marked sections of our common country.

While, with the people of the mountain districts of the South, it generally meant freely sharing for a night, upon occasion, what slender and crude resources they had in possession, in the richer country below it meant, in certain cases, days or weeks of luxurious entertainment, comprised in fine dinners, boating or fishing excursions, and whatever else could be devised to enable the guest to have a good time of it generally.

But right here comes in the scripture distinction—while poverty in the mountain region gave of its all, even if but a "mite," wealth below gave of its abundance; and sometimes, in reflecting upon the primitive and scant means of living in wild and out-of-the-way places, a person is led to wonder whether people more largely advanced in wealth and comfort, in all that appertains to life in an old and prosperous community—whether such really appreciate their immunity from many of the evils and discomforts to which those referred to as dwelling in remoter regions and humbler walks of life are subject.

On one occasion, being detained by business in a locality where my only shelter and boarding-place among the mountains, was an old log-cabin, half the time, perhaps, for three weeks of bad weather, alternating with sunshine, was I routed out of my bed by a thunder-storm at night, and left no alternative but to ensconse myself on a spare feather-bed on the floor under it, glad to make the upper one my tent, as it were.

And the poor woman who presided over the household arrangements of that unthrifty establishment—shall I ever forget the entire patience with which, the next bit of sunshine that came, she would proceed to hang upon the fence close by the soaked articles she valued so highly, and for which she had, on the premises, no adequate shelter from the rain. And when the good-natured, easy-going, pipe-smoking husband was from time to time appealed to to repair the leaky roof, and promised again and again that he would do so when such and such a task was accomplished, was it not something to wonder at, if not admire, the patience of the poor woman with her oft-repeated disappointments?

The result, indeed, of my sojourn under that persistently-leaky and sieve-like "oak-board" roof was that, for more weeks than I stayed there, after I left I could not get over the habit, even under the tight roofs of the city, of expecting, whenever it set in for a heavy rain, a shower right down upon myself almost any night. Indeed, I got to slightly wondering how roofs could be made tight at all, incredulous from habit and being so often victimized, so far as a good ducking might be in the case.

As a contrast to this kind of entertainment, was that within the power of the wealthy when one got out from among the hills. Before the war, it must be noted, "hospitality"—so called—cost very little, comparatively, to the rich or well-to-do entertainer; little of money to the host, and little of trouble to the household. The produce raised and the dinner resulting was almost entirely the work of servants. And how this was looked upon by the average Virginia planter, when the war so greatly interfered with the old arrangements, was well exemplified by a conversation in a street-car in one of our cities where all the passengers were compelled to be listeners.

"I am told you have given up the old place in Virginia?" was the query of a friend, apparently, to a portly, substantial-looking old gentleman who had just stepped aboard.

"Yes," was the reply; "my wife and myself could not stand the country any longer. You see," he continued, "that in olden times we had no trouble, because when the girls came home from church with their beaux there was somebody—Jake or Jim—to take their horses, while dinner was all ready to put on the table. Since the war, the servants have left, or gotten things their own way, and so I found I had to take the horses, and the old lady she had to get the dinner! No, we couldn't stand it any longer, so I just sold out and came to the city; and, although I don't like it, I couldn't stand the new way of doing things."

Now it would be difficult to state the whole case more succinctly and strikingly than as it was given in this little chance episode at the accidental meeting of two old friends. While the "hospitality" cost little trouble, it was freely indulged; but, when it bore hardly on the entertainers in person, it was as soon as possible abandoned altogether, and, when not abandoned as in the case given, there is no doubt, if reports received from all over the South are true, but that the wholesale entertainments of the olden time in the richer sections have been modified and curtailed to a degree such as stamps them as widely different from the so-called "hospitality" of the past. And this, too, while, as it can hardly be doubted, the scant although hearty hospitality of the hill country is largely what it was of old, excepting so far as it may have been changed a trifle by the events of the war.

None can doubt but that with the Southern people, as a whole, there was always less of cold calculation, less of anxious looking out for the future, such as stamps lines of care in the face in a modern business community, than was apparent elsewhere. With life presenting but few chances for varying greatly the business pursuits of a country, the determination in a majority of cases was to make the most of what was immediately before them, and, generally with no more difficult problem to solve than to get to Texas or Missouri when the producing power of the land might fail them where they were, they perplexed themselves very little about what might possibly happen in the far-off future. And for the rest, they took it out in fishing or hunting, or in the entertainments at one another's houses, as occasion might serve; varied with pursuits which came of much leisure, and especially a study of political matters such as made it at all times a pervading subject with that section of the nationality. But whether profitable to themselves in the end, that is another question.

Again, from their eminently-social instincts and characteristics, growing out of the favorable conditions for entertaining one another whether in the highlands or lowlands, it resulted thus from their camp-meetings and many political gatherings, whole counties and even much larger communities came to be known one to another with a minuteness of detail hardly to be imagined elsewhere. So it was, then, that from this peculiar condition of affairs individuals and families came to have a warm and abiding interest in each other, shown whenever any of the ordinary afflictions or vicissitudes of life called for sympathy; and thus when the war was adroitly initiated by the politicians, largely as a fierce and dominating sentiment, it was next to impossible but that, if one State or section enlisted in the conflict, the rest must do so, too. In all this, it was—we repeat—perhaps more a feeling of devoted fellowship, of strong brotherhood, than of recognized and true expediency or wisdom.

The institution adverted to above, the camp-meeting, which brought so many together periodically in many sections, was one great auxiliary to fellowship, I repeat. It was with vast numbers the one great event of the year; and, although the institution peculiarly of one denomination, it was so generally participated in that there were few people of any community who did not make it the occasion of a visit and a renewal of kindly expressions and feelings, such as in merely commercial or trading communities there has been hitherto much less chance for expression.

Then, again, with a considerable denomination down there, there was another institution or custom, which, although not of extended usage, could only mean a closeness of religious fellowship, hardly known in other sections of the Union. I refer to the "feet-washing" ceremonial or usage among the Baptists, in literal and presumed-needful obedience of the divine command, "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet!"

Not, as intimated already, very extensively entered into, it is yet the sign and exponent of an earnest religious fellowship, and a sincere determination to obey the written injunction, such as must command respect even from those who question on other grounds the necessity and propriety of it as a church or religious ordinance.

"Wife, to-morrow is foot-washing Sunday!" used to be the announcement and intimation made on Saturday night by a devout old gentleman of that denomination, as a signal for requiring the warm water and other appurtenances for putting his feet in good condition to be a second time washed in the church and congregation; and when is added that, without doubt, others were in the same manner careful to have the ceremony performed so as to be excepted to as little as possible, the women publicly washing each other's feet, the men performing the same office for one another, so as to provoke no caviling, it may be easily understood that those who might attend on the occasion to secretly mock or to smile would see but little cause for either.

These, then, were some of the sympathetic causes which, beginning with "hospitable" usages and customs, have resulted in giving the people of the South a very fierceness of fellowship not always appreciated or understood by the world at large, and made them sensitive, especially when their warmth of feeling, their generosity or hospitality are thoughtlessly impugned.

And out of all this, let me further say, has grown a readiness to "stand by a friend," in whatever trouble, that has had many a tragic manifestation and illustration in the desperate family feuds and fights in many places, only paralleled by the savage vendettas of the Italian communities. This, on one occasion—although I might indicate numerous other cases—was rather queerly, although fortunately only ludicrously illustrated, during a night-ride I once took in a stage-coach in East Tennessee.

Before reaching a leading cross-road and stage-station, and during the afternoon being alone in the coach, I was joined by a remarkably sturdy-looking individual, whose bristling, coarse, red hair, bull neck and generally strong build, although not very tall, might have marked him as fitted, at least, to be a professional prize-fighter. He was very talkative, and, as sunset and twilight drew on, we were joined at the cross-roads by another individual—a tall, long-haired, cadaverous-looking man, wearing a broad-brimmed, white, slouched hat. The last-mentioned personage occupied the front seat of the coach; the red-headed man the back seat, while I had the middle seat between the two.

It was not long after the new-comer joined us before the red-headed man began to descant upon the conduct of a toll-gate keeper in the vicinity, who, he alleged, "tried to cheat him;" and he proceeded at some length to abuse him roundly. As it was a matter in which I felt not the least interest, I made no comment or reply whatever. But not so my long-haired, cadaverous neighbor from Missouri—as it seemed—but who had emigrated to the far-away State from that very neighborhood, and who, it also appeared from that circumstance, happened to be an old personal friend to the gate-keeper thus assailed. When the narrative was entirely ended—like myself, not having said a word up to that time—he slowly began, stuttering enough to give terrible emphasis to his spasmodic utterances.

"Listen to me, s-s-stranger! That toll-gate keeper is my friend; and I never sit by and hear a friend abused without ta-ta-taking it up. You acted the cheating scoundrel yourself, sir; and t-t-tried to swindle him out of $5. He told me all about it as I came along, and you deserve hemp for your meanness, and you can't deny what I charge. You've not only t-t-tried to swindle my friend, but you've lied about him, besides. And that's all there is of it."

Well, I had seen the two by daylight and, seated between them there in the deep darkness, I looked for nothing else, for a few moments, but, serving partially as a shield for them alternately, to stop bullets or bowie-knife thrusts; and the close of the emphatic harangue found me quite ready, at the first possible explosion of powder, to vamose by the coach-door on which I was leaning, so that they two might, if so disposed, fight it out comfortably, but nothing of the kind occurred, to my great surprise. The subject of this savage lecture never "chirped," and about a mile from there he left the coach, a good deal to my relief, and I never saw him any more.

And speaking of "standing by a friend!" On another occasion, I happened to be riding out one pleasant summer evening in the suburbs of one of the State capitals, and overtaking a prominent politician whom I knew, indeed I may say a particular friend, I invited him to a seat in my buggy, and we rode onward together, chatting about indifferent matters, until it was not long before he suggested an extension of our ride to a rather secluded locality, "because," he said "he wished to discharge some loaded pistols he had about him." I was at once reminded by this remark that, about a week previously, he had been one of several who had expected to "stand by a friend" in an anticipated street fight, which fortunately did not come off; but, however, after a while we arrived at the spot he was looking for, and then he proceeded to unload his pockets of a small arsenal of revolvers, with which we spent some time shooting at a mark. He had previously been engaged in sundry savage encounters; but no one who had chanced to have fallen in with him, sauntering out for exercise, apparently, on that summer evening, as the bland-looking and eminently polite gentleman he was, would have dreamed of the armory about him, or the use to which those pistols were intended to be put but a few days before. His end was what might have been expected from his antecedents; for he died the violent death at last which he had long sought. As Falstaff put it, "Honor pricked him on!" But a power at last more potent, "pricked him off when he came on!" He was killed in a desperate battle in Kentucky during the late war, as a Confederate General.

Killing a Four-Hundred-Pound Ox with a Pistol-Ball.

A gentleman of this county, last Sunday afternoon, found an ox in his cornfield. In driving him out, and for the purpose of frightening him away from his premises, he shot at him with a common Smith & Wesson repeater; the distance was about seventy-five yards, yet he killed him almost instantly. The ball struck him just in rear of the fore shoulder, broke a rib, and passed almost entirely through his body in the region of the heart. The ox weighed over 400 pounds, and belonged to a neighbor.—Americus (Ga.) Recorder.

A WIFE wanted a husband to sympathize with her in a feminine quarrel; but he refused, saying, "I've lived long enough to know that one woman is as good as another, if not better." "And I," retorted the wife, "have lived long enough to know that one man is as bad as another, if not worse."

HOME DOCTOR.

DYSENTERY.—For dysentery, parch brown a table-spoonful of rice; put into a cup of cold water and let it come to a hard boil; sweeten a little.

NEURALGIA.—For this distressing malady there is a very simple and efficient remedy. We have tried it with uniform success, but we have rarely found a sufferer who would make a thorough use of it. It is so simple that most people prefer to suffer than to properly try it. It is this: Get a piece of the common sal-ammoniac, and every hour or so bite off a piece as big as a pea and swallow it. If more convenient, wash it down with water; or dissolve half a drachm of the sal-ammoniac in an ounce of water, and take a table-spoonful every three minutes or so. An overdose can do no harm, nor is the substance especially disagreeable to take. In from one to three hours relief will be obtained in four-fifths of the cases. Why people won't try this simple remedy, after being told of it by one who has tried it, is to us a wonder; but so it is.—Vox Populi.

A REMEDY FOR WEAK EYES.—A simple remedy for weak eyes is recommended, as follows: Get a 5-cent cake of elder flowers at the druggist's, and steep in one gill of soft water. It must be steeped in bright tin or earthenware; strain nicely, and then add three drops of laudanum; bottle it tight, and keep in a cool place; then use it as a wash, letting some of it get in the eyes. Follow this, and relief is certain. If the eyes are painful or much sore, make small soft compresses, wet in the mixture, and bind over the eyes at night. I can warrant the above harmless and sure, having tried it in a number of cases where other skill and remedies had utterly failed. If the eyes are badly inflamed, use it very freely, and a tea made of elder flowers, and drunk, will help cleanse the blood. Pure rock salt and water will strengthen your eyes if you bathe them daily in it. I would earnestly advise you to avoid mixtures or washes containing mineral or other poisons.—Doctor.

THE PULSE.—Every intelligent person should know how to ascertain the state of the pulse in health; then, by comparing it with what it was when he was ailing, he may have some idea of the case. Parents should know the healthy pulse of each child, as now and then a person is born with a remarkably slow or fast pulse, and the very case in hand may be of that peculiarity. An infant's pulse is 140; a child of 7 years, about eighty; and from 20 to 60 years it is seventy beats a minute, declining to sixty at fourscore. A healthy grown person's pulse beats seventy times a minute. There may be good health down to sixty. But, if the pulse always exceeds seventy, there is disease. The machine is working itself out; there is fever and inflammation somewhere, and the body is feeding on itself, as in consumption, when the pulse is quick—that is, over sixty—gradually increasing with decreased chances of cure, until it reaches 110 or 120, when death comes before many days. When the pulse is over seventy for months, and there is a slight cough, the lungs are most probably somewhat affected.

SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING.—Every little while we read in the papers of some one who has stuck a rusty nail in his foot, or knees or hand, or some other portion of his body, and that lock-jaw resulted therefrom, of which the patient died. If every person was aware of a perfect remedy for all such wounds, and would apply it, then all such reports must cease. But, although we can give the remedy, we cannot enforce its application. Some will not employ it because they think it too simple; others will have no faith in it when they read it; while others think such a wound of small account, and not worth fussing over, until it is too late to do any good. Yet all such wounds can be healed without the fatal consequences which follow them. The remedy is simple, almost always on hand, and can be applied by any one, and, what is better, it is infallible. It is simply to smoke the wound, or any bruise or wound that is inflamed, with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take the pain out of the worst wound; repeated two or three times, it will allay the worst cases of inflammation arising from a wound. People may sneer at "the old man's remedy" as much as they please, but when they are afflicted just let them try it. It has saved many lives and much pain, and is worthy of being printed in letters of gold and put in every home.

The Boy Goethe's Duel.

There was a war at one time between Germany and France, and for two or three years the French had possession of the old town where the Goethes lived. A French Count was placed in their house—billeted on them, as the soldiers say—and, though the boy Goethe was angry with the French for invading his country, he very much liked this Count, who took a fancy to the boy, and had him with him a great deal. The Count was a patron of artists, and bought a great many pictures, and from him Goethe obtained his first knowledge of art. This Frenchman introduced the boy to other French people, and Wolfgang thus learned the language perfectly. He also learned some other things, as the following anecdote will show: He became quite intimate with a French boy, Derones, who pretended to have been engaged in a great many duels—"affairs of honor" he called them. One day, he told young Goethe that he had insulted him, and at once challenged him to a duel. Goethe had heard Derones talk so much about these "affairs" that he was eager to engage in one. So you can imagine the little lad, aged 12, arrayed in a boy's dress of that day, with shoes and silver buckles, fine woolen stockings, dark serge breeches, green coat with gold facings, a waistcoat of gold cloth cut out of his father's wedding waistcoat, his hair curled and powdered, his hat under his arm, and a little sword with silk sword-knot. He stood opposite Derones, swords clashed, and the thrusts came quick upon each other; when finally, Derones managed to get the point of his weapon into Goethe's sword-knot, and that ended the combat. Then the two boys embraced each other, and retired to a restaurant to refresh themselves with a glass of almond milk.—St. Nicholas.

That "Theory" Business.

The murder of Mrs. Hull has developed a fact which some people didn't know before—that every detective has from one to half a dozen theories to chase every criminal with. A farmer out beyond Springwells had probably posted himself on this fact before visiting the Central Station yesterday to give notice that some one had stolen his only hog.

"My theory," he said, after leaving the item, "is that the thief took that hog from the pen about midnight, run him to the stock-yards, hung around till daylight, and then sold him to a butcher, but, of course, you police can work on any line you see fit."

He went away to look into several butcher shops, and in about an hour returned and said:

"Say, I've got a different theory in that hog case. I've been thinking it all over, and I've concluded that the hog was chloroformed, put on a wheelbarrow, and taken down and dumped into the river by some one who wanted revenge on me. Yes, I believe that's the correct theory, but if you police don't think so you can go ahead as you like."

He went away again, and this time he had a talk with a stall-owner on the Central Market. The result was a third visit to the station, and the farmer said:

"See here, I've got one more theory about that hog. I believe two of my neighbors down there stole him and butchered him and divided the meat, and I'm going home and get out a search-warrant."

He departed for home, and the station took a rest till about sundown, when lo! the man drove up in a buggy. When asked if he had any further news, he replied:

"I rather guess I have! I guess I've got another theory about that hog. My fourth theory is that he got out of the pen last night and rooted his way into the oat-field across the road. That's where I found him when I got home, and you police needn't bother any more about it."—Detroit Free Press.

Five Hundred Millions of Dollars in Gold.

Last week the coin and bullion held by the Bank of England reached the sum of £35,143,525, which is the largest amount ever collected at one time in the coffers of the bank. In the same week the cash in the Bank of France was within a few thousand pounds of £90,000,000 sterling, while the coin and bullion held by the Bank of Germany fell only a little short of £28,000,000. Thus the stock of the precious metals held by these three great institutions reached the almost incredible amount of £153,000,000 sterling. Nearly half the stock of the Bank of France is believed to be in silver, while, according to Mr. Goschen, the Bank of Germany has almost £10,000,000 in that metal. In round numbers, therefore, the three banks hold between them about £100,000,000 in gold. To minds not accustomed to consider such matters from the bankers' point of view, these colossal figures may convey the notion of abounding wealth. And in one sense the notion is perfectly correct. The figures prove beyond the possibility of dispute that these great institutions have resources at their immediate disposal more than sufficient to meet any demands that may be conceived likely to be made upon them. But the possession of such a vast amount of gold is the very reverse of profitable. It is an embarrassment to the banks themselves, and as a sign of the state of trade it is the reverse of favorable. It bears testimony to general stagnation.—London Saturday Review.

Doesn't Want to Become a Bad Boy.

A bright-looking boy, 12 years old, who said his name was Tommy McEvoy, went alone into the Jefferson Market Police Court last evening and said to Justice Morgan: "Judge, your Honor, I want to give myself up." "Why, my boy?" asked the court. "Because," replied the lad, "I hain't got no home and I don't want to live in the street and become a bad boy." "Why don't you stay at home?" "I ain't got no home. Father's been dead nine years, and mother died before that." "But where have you been living since?" "With my aunt. She lives in Forty-first street. But she gets drunk. And, she won't let me stay indoors. To-day she chased me out and said if I ever came back she would do something awful to me. I'm afraid of her, and so I've got no home. Nobody will take me in because I ain't got good clothes and don't look nice. I can't get any work, and I can't get anything to eat unless I beg or steal it. Then the cops 'll take me in. I don't want to get arrested. I don't want to steal, nor to be a bad boy. Won't you please send me somewhere where I can learn something and get to be a man? There's places like that, ain't there?" The Justice told the boy there were such places for good boys, and, taking the little fellow under his protection, promised to find him a home in some good institution.—New York paper.

THE NEW MOON.

BY WEBSTER T. [illegible]

To-night I looked at the new moon in the west,
And the more I looked the more I was impressed
With God's infinite power and love.

'Twas crescent shaped and beautiful, and seemed
To have in it something, as on me it beamed,
That turned my thoughts to higher deeds.

It gave me a new hope and planted in my breast
Thoughts which I in earlier times should have possessed;
My life would have been better spent.

Again I looked at the moon and 'twas young
Like the Muse; there it was up among
A host of stars, and I among them.

It smiled serenely on my eyes upturned:
And from its smiles my heart has learned
More of God; and taught me, too,

That I should trust in Him whose love is great;
It seemed to say, "Labor not nor wait
For honors given to men on earth!

"Press on! and labor for Him whose power and love
Will crown thee with honors far above
Those given to mortal man below."

I turned my eyes for a moment to the ground,
When there seemed once more that gentle sound,
And I looked again at the moon.

"Have hope! have hope!" again it seemed to say,
And I bade it good-night and turned away;
But it has given me a hope.

Ultima Veritas.

In the bitter waves of woe,
  Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
  From the desolate shores of doubt—

When the anchors that faith had cast
  Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
  To the things that cannot fail;

I know that right is right;
  That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite,
  And a neighbor than a spy.

I know that passion needs
  The leash of a sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
  Some sure reward will find;

That the rulers must obey;
  That the givers shall increase;
That duty lights the way
  For the beautiful feet of peace;

In the darkest night of the year,
  When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear,
  That faith is truer than doubt;

And fierce though the fiends may fight,
  And long though the angels hide,
I know that truth and right
  Have the universe on their side;

And that somewhere, beyond the stars,
  Is a love that is better than fate;
When the night unlocks her bars
  I shall see Him, and I will wait.

REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

"My Mother's Been Praying."

In February, 1861, a terrible gale raged along the coast of England. In one bay, Hartlepool, it wrecked eighty-one vessels. While the storm was at its height, the Rising Sun, a stout brig, struck on Longrear rock, a reef extending a mile from one side of the bay. She sunk, leaving only her two top-masts above the foaming waves.

The lifeboats were away, rescuing wrecked crews. The only means of saving the men clinging to the swaying masts was the rocket apparatus. Before it could be adjusted, one mast fell. Just as the rocket, bearing the life-line, went booming out of the mortar, the other mast toppled over.

Sadly the rocket-men began to draw in their line, when, suddenly, they felt that something was attached to it, and in a few minutes hauled on to the beach the apparently-lifeless body of a sailor boy. Trained and tender hands worked, and in a short time he became conscious.

With wild amazement, he gazed around on the crowd of kind and sympathizing friends. They raised him to his feet. He looked up into the weather-beaten face of the old fisherman near him, and asked:

"Where am I?"

"Thou art here, my lad."

"Where's the Cap'n?"

"Drowned, my lad."

"The mate, then?"

"He's drowned, too."

"The crew?"

"They are all lost, my lad; thou art the only one saved."

The boy stood, overwhelmed, for a few moments; then he raised both his hands, and cried in a loud voice:

"My mother's been praying for me! My mother's been praying for me!"

And then he dropped on his knees on the wet sand, and hid his sobbing face in his hands.

Hundreds heard that day this tribute to a mother's love, and to God's faithfulness in listening to a mother's prayers.

The little fellow was taken to a house near by, and in a few days he was sent home to his mother's cottage in Northumberland.

The Sailor's Death-Grip.

The words "grip," "lay hold," "tenacity," are expressive of physical force and moral resoluteness. A boy who would be a thorough merchant is told to "lay hold" of correct business habits and principles. He who desires to grow up a good man must "grip" certain moral ideas. The force of these words may be illustrated by an incident.

"I was once sailing by the Island of Cuba," said a sea-Captain, "when I was startled by the cry, 'Man overboard!' A sailor, at work in the forecastle, had fallen into the ocean. Seizing a rope, I threw it to the drowning man just as he passed the ship's stern. He caught it.

"Making a slip-noose, I slid it down to the struggling sailor, directing him to pass it under his arms. He was drawn on board, but such was his death-grip on the rope, caught as the ship was sailing by, that it took two hours before his grasp relaxed so that it could be released from his hands. The strands were imbedded in the flesh."

That sailor's death-grip illustrates Paul's meaning when he bade Timothy "lay hold on eternal life."

Everlasting Consolation.

"Consolation!" There is music in the word. Like David's harp, it charms away the spirit of melancholy. It was a distinguished honor to Barnabas to be called "the son of consolation." Nay, it is one of the illustrious names of a greater than Barnabas, for the Lord Jesus is "the consolation of Israel." "Everlasting consolation." (2 Thes. ii. 16.) Here is the cream of all, the spikenard very precious, for the eternity of comfort is the crown and glory of it.

This makes an estate worth having, when a man may hold its fee simple in perpetuity forever. A man works to make money, and after toiling hard he finds himself the owner of it, and it is a consolation to him; but it is not an everlasting consolation, for he may lose or he may spend all his treasure, or he may be compelled to leave it. It cannot be, at best, more than a temporary consolation.

A man toils hard for knowledge. He acquires it; he becomes an eminent scholar; his name is famous—this is a consolation to him for all his toil. But it cannot last long; for when he feels the headache or the heartache his degrees and his diplomas cannot cheer him. Or should his soul become a prey to despondency, he may turn over many a learned tome before he will find a balm for a broken heart. All earth-born consolations are, in their essence, fleeting, and, in their existence, short-lived. They are brilliant and evanescent as the rainbow hues of a soap bubble. But as to the consolations God gives to His people, they fade not neither do they lose their freshness. They can stand all tests—the shock of trial, the flames of persecution, the lapse of years; nay, they can even endure death itself. What is this "everlasting consolation?" It includes a sense of pardoned sin. A Christian man has received in his heart the witness of the Spirit that his iniquities are put away like a cloud, and his transgressions like a thick cloud. Union to the risen Lord is a consolation of the most abiding order—it is, in fact, "everlasting consolation."—Spurgeon.

How Cain Got His Wife.

A few years ago, says Harper's Magazine, while the Alabama and Chattanooga railroad was in progress of construction, it was a favorable field for colored preachers to labor and take up collections "for de spread ob de gospel." Among these a frequent visitor was old Father Helms, from Tennessee, whose vivid eloquence and practical "spounding ob de Sacred Word" were attentively listened to by large congregations of the sable race, with no small delegation of interested white listeners upon the outskirts. Upon one occasion, assembled in a lovely Alabama grove, he addressed his congregation thus:

"Ladies and gentlemen ob my beloved congregation—Havin' cotched a bad cold de odder evenin', I shan't attempt to preach to yer dis Sabbath mornin', but will read a chapter from de Bible, and spound it as I go along." He then read the fourth chapter of Genesis, after which he continued his remarks: "De odder evenin' I tuk for my tex' de tragedy in de gardin' ob Eden—de killin' ob Abel and de cuss and drivin' out ob Cain. And after de sermon one ob yer smart young darkies—one ob dese yer thin-skinned, saleratus-complexioned niggers—steps up to me, and says he, 'Fader Helms, yer disremembered to tell us who Mr. Cain married down in the land ob Nod; was it his mudder?' Dere was a grinnin' crowd ob no-count, triflin' niggers wid him, and I 'spected at once dat de white folks had sent him up to ax de question. I was so overcome with a sense ob de sinfulness and great 'sumption ob sinners, bofe white and black, dat I could say nuffin. I had nuffin to say. I tuk de question under prayerful consideration, an' de answer were made plain. I'm gwine to spound dat part ob de Scripter to yer. Who Cain's wife was, and whar he got her, is plain to de all-seeing eye ob faith. In the gardin' ob Eden Cain raised right smart ob craps and gardin' truck and sich. But after de slewing ob his Christian brudder Abel, we don't read ob his workin' no mo'. He tuk his gun and dogs and went down into dat sleepy, lazy, no-count section ob Nod, and loafed aroun' dat country; an' havin' lost all ob his self-respec' and pride ob family and state, de nex' we hear ob him he had got so low down an' triflin' dat he married a gal ob one ob dose no-count, poor, white-trash families which de inspired 'postle didn't consider fittin' to mention in de Holy Word."

The reverend "spounder" gazed around upon his admiring congregation with an air of triumph, and a brother struck up the hymn, "Whar, oh whar am de Hebrew chillen?"

Washing Clothes.

If there's any plan by which wash-day can be robbed of its disagreeable belongings, it will be welcome, we are sure. A correspondent of the Portland Transcript gives the following method:

For a family of six, cut into thin shavings one and one-half pounds of good bar soap, and dissolve it in a pail of boiling water. Rather more than half fill two tubs with warm water, and add a pail of hot suds—half each. Put the clothes in for a twenty-four hours' soak—those most soiled in one tub by themselves. The following morning nothing will be necessary but to put them through the wringer, through two waters, the blueing in the last. A neat housekeeper will observe if any specially soiled spots—wristbands, cuffs and the like—need a little chafing with the fingers before going through the wringer.

Clothing washed in this way will come out to the satisfaction of the most fastidious, and all the time usually spent in scrubbing and boiling and filling the house with steam saved, besides—a prime consideration—articles will wear more than twice as long, as it is evident that five minutes' scrubbing will wrench out the garments vastly more than ordinary wear. Flannels may be cleaned in the same manner—white flannels turning out white and soft—except that it is believed that the suds and the rinse water had better be cold for flannels, whatever the process of washing, to prevent shrinking. A little gentle pulling, both ways, when first hung on the line, will prevent flannels shrinking.

An acquaintance of ours, a very particular housekeeper, has done her own family washing in this manner for a year past, without either boiling or scrubbing or fretting, and she declares that washing has lost its old-time terrors.

And her husband says that, instead of a "picked-up dinner," she gets the best dinner of the week on Monday.

The Nihilists.

A striking proof of the thoroughness of the Nihilistic organization in Russia is furnished by a recent incident. A few weeks ago a daring and successful bank-robbery was committed in Kherson, a town in Southern Russia, the amount stolen being very large. The Russian police, being unable to discover the robbers, started the story that they were Nihilists. This drew from the Executive Committee of the Nihilists an indignant denial, which was accompanied by a pledge to discover the true criminals, in proof that they were not Nihilists. They kept their word, and in less then two weeks did what the Russian police with all their facilities had been unable to accomplish—captured the bank-robbers and surrendered them to justice.

EX-GOV. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, still keenly feels the blow of the marriage of his daughter to his coachman, and refuses ever to accept the child back to his social circle. Since her elopement the family has been traveling in Europe, but is at present occupying elegant quarters at Newport. The runaways are somewhere in Canada.

FARM NOTES.

[Rural, Jr., in Chicago Tribune.]

KILL THE BURRS.—It is only by repeated blowing and persistent hoeing that burrs can be killed. Where they infest ground on which small grain has been growing, plow it at once. This will cause others to grow, and kill many of those sprouted. When the second crop is well up, plow the ground again, going a little deeper. Remember that every burr has two lobes, and, until both have sprouted, the seed is not destroyed. The same burr rarely sends forth two sprouts at the same time, and this double lobe is doubtless a wise provision whereby the species may be perpetuated—though why it should be we cannot find out.

ABOUT RYE.—There are many uses to which rye may be put. It may be sown for pasture right away as soon as oats or wheat is stacked, and will, then, next year, produce a good crop. It may be planted for manure, and as such be plowed under either this fall or next spring. It may also be sown late for spring pasture or for manure. In any way in which it is used, provided the green crop is plowed under, it enriches the soil and adds to the value of a farm, instead of detracting from it. The beauty of the grain consists of its being so hardy, and growing under any and all conditions. A poor piece of land may be enriched at little expense, and the fertility of good land be by it still further developed.

A FARMER'S FRIEND.—A number of our farmer-friends have this season purchased oil-stoves, that give the greatest satisfaction. They heat the flat-irons, for ironing, to perfection, and do not heat up the room; they bake as well as any stove, and, as for boiling, they cannot be beaten. Of course, the more surface there is the greater the number of articles that may be cooked at one time. What is called a "two-hole" stove answers all the purposes of an ordinary cook-stove, except for heating water for washing. The expense is only 1 or 2 cents an hour; and, when the cooking is done, the fire is instantly extinguished and the room cool. There is no danger from explosion, unless carelessly used. The bother of building fires and carrying fuel is entirely obviated. The oil-stove is indeed a blessing to the farmer's wife.

FALLEN FRUIT.—The apples that now fall from the trees are mostly infected with larvæ of the coddling-moth, which sooner or later escapes and forms its cocoon under the rough bark of the tree, preparatory to transforming into the perfect or moth state. After mating, the female will deposit an egg in every remaining apple on the tree; hence the matured fruit will also be spoiled. It is, therefore, of especial importance that the larvæ be killed at once. Hogs and sheep will devour the fallen fruit, and with it such larvæ as have not escaped. These latter may be trapped under hay or cloth bands tied around the body of the tree, under which they will seek shelter. Nothing but close attention will keep apples from being wormy; but, to be successful, the work of trapping the larvæ must be systematically followed up. By daily picking up the fallen plums and peaches, the curculio may also be thinned out.

SUNDAY-VISITING.—"O dear!" exclaimed a farmer's wife in our presence, one Sunday: "there come the Joneses to dinner. I was just getting ready to take some comfort, but now I must sweat over a hot stove to get them something to eat." The Jones family is a good one; but they do their visiting on Sunday, and, as they take all the children—six or seven in all—it is quite a task to feed them. As they are never at home on Sunday, the neighbors can't pay them back. They are only the representatives of a large class, and, in vulgar parlance, "had ought to be sat down on." Perhaps a dinner of bread and milk, or bread and butter, applied a few times, might effect a partial reform; at least, that is the way we intend to treat them should they ever visit us. In villages and cities, one never thinks of living off his friends in this manner; but it is a frequent occurrence in the country, and is nothing short of an imposition on the overworked farmers' wives, especially in the heated summer months.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

TUMBLERS that have milk in them should never be put in hot water.

A SPOONFUL of stewed tomatoes in the gravy of either roasted or fried meats is an improvement.

YOU can get a bottle or barrel of oil off any carpet or woolen stuff by applying dry buckwheat plentifully and faithfully. Never put water to such a grease spot, or liquid of any kind.

BROIL steak without salting. Salt draws the juices in cooking; it is desirable to keep these in if possible. Cook over a hot fire, turning frequently; searing on both sides. Place on a platter; salt and pepper to taste.

FRUIT JELLY.—One box of gelatine, rind of a lemon, one pint of cold water; allow this to stand one hour and a half; then add two and a half pints of boiling water, two pounds of granulated sugar, one pint of any fruit sirup; stir gently until the sugar is dissolved, then pour into mold.

SOUP WITHOUT MEAT.—In a pot that holds a gallon put all vegetables that are in season in equal portions; cut up and lay in layers, and sprinkle lightly with salt, and add one ounce and a half of butter, worked into enough flour to amalgamate into a paste, and with pepper and salt, and add a quart of water. Cook for one hour.

TAPIOCA CREAM.—Put two tablespoonfuls of tapioca to soak in cold water; set it on the stove, and, when thoroughly dissolved, pour in a quart of milk. When this begins to boil stir in the yelks of two eggs well beaten, with a cup of sugar. When this boils stir in the whites, beaten to a stiff froth, and take it immediately from the fire. Flavor to taste.

BAKED TOMATOES.—Pour boiling water over them, then in a few minutes the skins can be easily removed. Put them into a baking dish with bread-crumbs, butter, pepper and salt, one onion, if you like it. Sift corn meal over the top of them and bake them slowly. It will take between two and three hours to bake. If they are acid, use sugar instead of salt.

HOW TO MOLD JELLIES.—Uncork the bottle; place it in a saucepan of hot water until the jelly is reduced to a liquid state. Taste it to ascertain whether it is sufficiently flavored, and if not add a little wine. Pour the jelly into molds which have been soaked in water; let it set, and turn it out by placing the molds in hot water for a minute; then wipe the outside, put a dish on the top, and turn it over quickly. The jelly should then slip easily away from the mold and be quite firm. It may be garnished as taste dictates.

BUNS FOR SUMMER TEAS.—Half-spoonful of tartaric acid, same quantity of bicarbonate of soda; rub well into a pound of flour. Then work in two ounces of butter, and add two ounces of broken and sifted loaf sugar, a quarter pound of currants or raisins, and a few caraway seeds. Raise into a bowl-like shape, and pour in half a pint of cold milk, with which an egg has been beaten. Mix quickly, shape into buns, set them on baking tins, see that they are nicely done, and at tea-time ask your friends how they like them.

Mr. Whittier's Poetry.

It is not given to many poets to know what they do best, and the few who possess that knowledge are seldom content to be guided by it. The weakness of modern poets—or one of their weaknesses—is the desire to write long poems, as if poetry were measured by quantity and quality. Another weakness is a studied avoidance of simple every-day themes. Mr. Whittier has mistaken his powers as little as any American poet, but he has not always cultivated them wisely, or he would have written ten narrative poems where he has written one. I use the word narrative in a large sense as covering a class of poems of which story-telling is the chief motive, and which directly appeal to the human sympathies of their readers. Such a poem (to draw an illustration from Mr. Whittier) is the touching ballad of "Cassandra Southwick." Another is "Barclay of Ury." Mr. Whittier is the first American poet, I believe, who was deeply impressed by the inspiration of subjects like these, and they have amply rewarded the poetic pains he has bestowed upon them. I am not sure, indeed, that his fame will not ultimately rest upon some three or four of them. Say upon "Maud Muller," "Skipper Ireson's Ride," and "Telling the Bees." They had no prototypes in American poetry, and, if they had successors, these successors have come from the pen of Mr. Whittier, who is never so much himself as when writing narrative and legendary stories.

Mr. Whittier is one of the few American poets who have succeeded in obtaining the suffrages of the reading public and of the literary class. Men of letters respect his work for its sincerity, simplicity and downright manliness, and average readers of poetry respect it because they can understand it. There is not a grown man and woman in the land who does not readily enter into the aspiration and discontent of "Maud Muller," and into the glowing patriotism of "Barbara Frietchie." Whether the incident which is the inspiration of the latter ever occurred, is more than doubtful; nevertheless, the poem is one that the world will not willingly let die. The reputation of such poems is immediate and permanent, and beyond criticism, favorable or otherwise; the touch of nature in them is beyond all art. I should never think of comparing "Barbara Frietchie" with Bryant's "O Mother of a Mighty Race," but I am sure that it has a thousand readers where Bryant's poem has one. Bryant seldom reached the hearts of his countrymen, but his best poems appealed to what was loftiest in their intellects.—Richard Henry Stoddard, in Scribner.

Yellow Jack's History.

The history of yellow fever in this country shows that it has hardly been the exception when the fever appeared as an epidemic the year following an epidemic. In 1847 there were 2,259 deaths in New Orleans, and 850 in 1848, and 737 in 1849. In 1853 there were 7,970 deaths in the same city, and there were 2,423 deaths in 1854 and 2,670 in 1855. In 1858 there were 3,889 deaths, but none the next year. In 1867 there were 3,093 deaths, and none the following year. In the same proportions the fever appeared in the smaller places in Louisiana and Mississippi in those years. In 1848, when it reappeared in New Orleans, it came in June, while the epidemic of 1847 began in August. The great epidemic of 1858 began in May, and the epidemic of the year following came in July, and in the next year in June. The epidemic in North Carolina in 1862 was followed in 1864, two years afterward, by one of increased mortality, but not in the same cities and towns as a general thing. In 1797 Philadelphia's death list was 1,300; in 1798, 3,500, and in 1799 there were 1,000 deaths. So it was in 1802, when Philadelphia next had the fever as an epidemic. In South Carolina it has been almost invariably the case that the second year brought an epidemic. Memphis and all other points which were infected in 1873 escaped the second year. In that year the fever began in Shreveport first, and did not come until the latter part of August, reaching Memphis Sept. 14. August has been the favorite month for its inception. Last year it began near the 1st of that month in the South.

Fatally Poisoned by Mushrooms.

Four children of Mr. C. C. Dickens, a well-to-do farmer living near High Point, and about eight miles southwest of Springfield, were poisoned on Saturday last from eating mushrooms. Their ages range from 2 to 10 years. The two youngest died on Wednesday from the effects of the poison, and the other two are not expected to live.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

OUR MENAGERIE.

Truthful Stories Culled at Random from Veracious Exchanges.

A MONSTER LIZARD.

The Leadville (Col.) Eclipse contains a correspondence from Cottonwood Springs detailing the killing of a huge saurian, near that place, the lizard said to be eighty-six feet long and seven feet in circumference. William J. Snodgrass says the carcass of the lizard has been taken to the Mahonville post-office, where it can be seen by the curious.

A CURIOUS SPIDER.

[From the Covington (Va.) Tribune.]

A few days ago a spider of a curious nature was brought to town. On its back was the face of a man—plain and distinct, each feature being an exact imitation, and it was said to resemble in a remarkable degree the gentleman who had it. It was sent to the University of Virginia.

PREDICAMENT OF A HORSE.

[From the Hunterdon (N. J.) Journal.]

A horse belonging to S. C. Hoppeck, of Lambertville, a few days ago, got its hind foot fast in its mouth. This may appear to be a strange story, yet the story isn't half as strange as was the predicament that the animal was in. Its shoe got fast in some way under its teeth, and the shoe had to be removed before the horse was relieved.

SAVING HER BACON.

[From the Madison (Ind.) Courier.]

While men were laying a pipe in the street near Mr. Gran Larrabee's shop yesterday, they left the ditch open for a while, and a sow, with a family of eight, in nosing around, got into it. The small pigs could not get out, and the mother tried her best to help them. She would get down in the ditch, grab a pig, and endeavor to throw it up to the top, but could not toss them high enough. Failing in this, she went to the pavement and tried to attract the attention of passers-by by running up to them and squealing, and then going back to her imprisoned family, showing the way. Some boys finally helped them out, and the mother hog grunted her applause and mouthed each youngster fondly as soon as it was safely out.

SINGULAR EFFECT OF A BEE STING.

[From the Indianapolis Journal.]

Esquire Johnson, of Whiteland, Johnson county, attributes his recovery from the effects of the sting of a honey bee to the administering of large doses of stimulants. His symptoms were peculiar and very alarming. He was stung in the jugular vein, and two minutes after a cold tremor ran through his frame; within five minutes he was utterly helpless, his entire body and limbs cold and clammy, breathing labored, extremities cold and his heart beating slowly and faintly. Brandy was frequently poured down his throat in large quantities, and, after remaining unconscious for about twelve hours, he came out of his stupor somewhat suddenly, began to recover, and is now perfectly well again.

SAVED BY A NEWFOUNDLAND DOG.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Whig.]

A lad named Frior, with two companions, were "fooling" in a row boat in the Hudson, near the foot of Washington street, Saturday evening, about 7:30 o'clock, when the boat upset, and the three boys were thrown into the river, the boat covering them. They struggled from under the craft and swam for the shore. Two reached it in safety, but young Frior, becoming exhausted when within a short distance of the dock, sank. A noble Newfoundland dog, which stood on the dock and saw the boy go down, sprung into the water, caught him by the hair and swam with his precious prize into the slip at the foot of the street, where several dock men who witnessed the event rendered assistance and got the lad safely ashore. The noble animal should have a gold collar, and young Frior owes his life to him.

ANOTHER MAN SWALLOWS HIS TEETH.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

Augustus Marsh, of Bangor, Me., recently had the misfortune to swallow his false teeth, which are now in his stomach. He at first tried to hold them in the throat, but did not meet with much success. Soon after swallowing the teeth he spit up a little blood. For some time he was in great pain. Opiates were given him, but it required the strength of several powerful men to keep him quiet. He is now much better, and suffers but little pain. Of course he has a rather unnatural feeling about the stomach. He eats heartily and digests his food well. His diet consists principally of coarse food. What the result will be cannot now be told. Instances are on record where teeth have passed out. It may be necessary to cut through the lining of the stomach and remove them in that way. Again, they may pass down into the intestines and have to be cut out from there. He is able to be up most of the time.

IT WAS THE CAT.

[From the New York Tribune.]

I have always supposed that the story that cats were addicted to the habit of sucking the breath of persons while sleeping, where they could get access to the apartment, was nothing but a nursery fiction with which to frighten children from the practice of taking pet cats to bed with them; but a case in point has just come under my notice, with which I thought it would be well to acquaint your readers, to guard them against a similar occurrence. A young lady of my acquaintance, residing in Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, was awakened last week, during the night, in an almost exhausted and strangling condition, with just sufficient consciousness to throw from her breast cat, whose mouth was thrust far into hers. She had scarcely strength to call for help, and has since been very ill from prostration and ulcerated sore throat. For several mornings previous she had awakened with very peculiar sensations about the throat and chest. The cat was a strange one, as none is kept about the house, and must have gained access to the apartment through a window—which opens on a balcony—near the bed.

NEVER witness a tear with apathy or indifference. Words, looks, actions, may be artificial; but a tear is unequivocal; it comes direct from the heart, and speaks at once the language of truth, nature, and sincerity.

BOB INGERSOLL ON THE JEWS.

An Enthusiastic Eulogy on the Race.

As a matter of course, I am utterly opposed to the oppression of any class, and regard the action of the proprietors of the Manhattan Beach Hotel in reference to the Jews as bigoted, mean and disgraceful. Such action belongs to the dark ages. The persecution of the Jews should bring a blush to every Christian cheek. Nothing is more infamous than the oppression of a class. Each man has the right to be judged upon his own merits. To oppress him or to hold him in contempt on account of religion, race or color is a crime.

Every man should be treated justly and kindly, not because he is or is not a Jew or a Gentile, but because he is a human being, and as such capable of joy and pain. If at any hotel a man fails to act in a decent or becoming manner, let him be put out, not on account of the nation to which he belongs, but on account of his behavior. Any other course is unjust and cruel.

It will not do for the keeper of public houses to brand an entire race as unfit to associate with them.

Some of the leading men of the world are Jews. These wonderful people, although dispersed, despised, and for many ages persecuted in all countries where people loved their enemies and returned good for evil, have contributed to every science and enriched every art. He who has heard the music of Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer, who has studied the grand philosophy of Spinoza, and has seen upon the stage Rachel, mistress of passion, will hardly unite in the condemnation of the race to which these prodigies belonged.

Neither should it be forgotten that the Jews furnished their persecutors with a religion, and that they are the only people, according to the dogmas of the day, with whom the Almighty ever deigned to have any intercourse whatever.

When we remember that God selected a Jewess for His mother, passing by the women of India, Egypt, Athens and Rome, as well as the grandmothers of Mr. Corbin, it is hardly in good taste for the worshipers of that same God to hold the Jews in scorn.

We should also remember that the Jews were the only people inspired. All the "sacred" writers, all the "prophets," were of the race, and, while Christians almost worship Abraham, notwithstanding the affair of Hagar, and his willingness to murder his own son; and while they hold in almost infinite respect David, the murderer, and Solomon, the Mormon, it certainly is not perfectly consistent to denounce men and women of the same race who have committed no crime.

The Christians have always been guilty of this inconsistency with regard to the Jews—they have worshiped the dead and persecuted the living.

I can not forget that during the Revolution the Jews prayed in their synagogues for the success of the colonies. I can not forget that during our civil war thousands of them fought for the preservation of the Union, many of them rising from the ranks to the most important commands. Neither can I forget that many of the Jews are to-day among the foremost advocates of intellectual liberty; that they have outgrown the prejudices of race and creed and believe in the universal brotherhood of man. And in this connection it may not be out of place to speak of your father.

It will not do in this the second century of the United States to insult a gentleman because of his nation.

We are, at least, a great, rich and prosperous people. Greatness should be great. Wealth should be generous and, prosperity should at least beget good manners.

Every American should resent every insult to humanity, for while the rights of the lowest are trampled upon the liberties of the highest are not safe.

While for the ancient myths and fables of that people I have not the respect entertained by Christians, I still hold the rights of Jews to be as sacred as my own.

Exaggerations.

A family while at the breakfast-table one morning pledged to observe the strictest veracity for that day. A member of the family tells the "consequences" in a communication to the Intelligencer:

As a first fruit of the resolve, we asked the one who had suggested it:

"What made you so late at breakfast this morning?"

She hesitated, began with, "Because I couldn't"—and then, true to her compact, said:

"The truth is, I was lazy and didn't hurry, or I might have been down long ago."

Presently another one remarked that she had been very cold, adding:

"I never was so cold in my life."

An inquiring look caused the last speaker to modify this statement instantly with:

"Oh, I don't mean that! Of course I've been much colder many times, and I don't think it was so cold, after all."

A third remark to the effect that "Miss So-and-so was the homeliest girl in the city," was recalled as soon as made, the speaker being compelled to own that Miss So-and-so was only rather plain instead of excessively homely.

So it went on throughout the day, causing much merriment, which was good-naturedly accepted by the subjects, and giving rise to constant corrections in the interest of truth.

One thing became more and more surprising, however, to each one of us, and that was the amount of cutting down which our most careless statements demanded under this new rule.

THE Japanese are not rapid railroad builders. Since 1869, when the railroad from Yeddo to Yokohama was begun, sixty-six and a half miles have been completed.

"THIS can't be beat," as the man said when he bought the porcelain egg.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A FATAL case of yellow fever has occurred in Brooklyn, N. Y. The victim had occasion to go on board a vessel from Havana in the latter part of July, and, as one of the ship's crew died of fever in a New York hospital, it is presumed that the infection was received in that way.

A NEW YORK dispatch says that "the horse Edwin Forrest made the fastest mile that was ever made in the world on the three-quarter-mile track on Mr. Bonner's farm, near Tarrytown. The first quarter was made in 32¼, the half in 1:05½, the three-quarters in 1:38¾, and the full mile in 2:11¾. Edwin Forrest, a year ago, before Mr. Bonner bought him, trotted a mile in public at Hartford in 2:14¾, and it is Mr. Bonner's intention to show him once more in public, so that the people at large can see the great improvement in the horse's speed."

ANOTHER big Fall River defalcation has come to light. Walter T. Paine, the third treasurer of the American Linen Company, is the thief, and his stealings are variously estimated at $100,000 to $175,000. It is the old story of speculation.

AN excursion train of ten coaches, bound from Philadelphia to Atlantic City, N. J., ran into a freight train near Philadelphia with fatal results, five of the train-men being killed and two slightly injured. Gross carelessness of the station officers caused the accident....Tremont Temple, in Boston, has been destroyed by fire. It was owned by the American Bible Society, and the loss is placed at $120,000....Bishop Odenheimer died of Bright's disease, at Burlington, N. J., aged 62 years. He was born in Philadelphia, and made Bishop of New Jersey in 1859.

THE WEST.

A DISPATCH from Gen. Miles' camp on Rocky creek, Montana, states that Maj. Walsh, accompanied by the well-known Sioux war chief, Long Dog, had arrived there from over the line. A few mounted police and another Indian chief came with him. The visit was entirely informal, as Gen. Miles has no authority to enter into any negotiations with the hostiles. About a dozen stolen horses and mules were returned to the American owners. Long Dog, in explanation, said the animals were taken over the line by the Yanktonais and other agency Indians. The Uncpapas had no means of knowing whether they were stolen property or not. Everything bad that has happened on the Missouri he also charged up to the agency Indians. Gen. Miles said there would be no such charges made if the British Indians would only keep on their own side of the line and refuse to receive stock which they couldn't help knowing was stolen. Maj. Walsh said he brought with him the assurance of the Sioux leaders—Spotted Eagle, Broad Tail, Black Moon and others—that they meditated no war against the United States. Although they were poor and starving they would remain on the other side, and move back beyond the Cypress hills if necessary. The Major said the Indians had very little meat left, and most of them were living on wild turnips. The Indian Agent at the Flathead Agency, Montana Territory, reports the massacre of eight Nez Perces by a war party of supposed Gros Ventres.

THE Indianapolis Tile-Works, one of the largest manufacturing establishments of that city, was destroyed by fire last week. Loss, $30,000 to $40,000; insurance, $30,000....The Canadian half-breeds, who were arrested by Gen. Miles on a charge of selling liquor and ammunition to the Indians on this side of the line, will be allowed to return to Canada.

CROWDED houses and great enthusiasm have thus far greeted every performance of "The Banker's Daughter," at Haverly's Chicago house, and it has been wisely determined to keep it on for the third week. The success of this fine play is not wonderful, taking into consideration the really first-class presentation of every character in the piece, and the superb mounting and scenery, which were much praised last season in New York, at the Union Square. "Mother and Son" is underlined for presentation Aug. 18, with an equally strong cast.

E. J. BALDWIN, the owner of Mollie McCarthy and of Baldwin's Hotel, San Francisco, and one of the richest men on the Pacific coast, was recently arrested for crooked distilling. His distillery, warehouse and wine vaults, near Los Angeles, Cal., were seized by a United States Marshal.

IT is estimated that the Kansas wheat crop this year will be worth at least $25,000,000, and the corn crop a good deal more.

THE SOUTH.

TWO YOUNG men, Cooper and Butler, for a long time enemies, met near Helena, Texas. Cooper said, "Now I've got you," and shot Butler through the breast. Butler then drew a revolver and shot Cooper, the latter giving Butler two more shots in the breast, when Butler, staggering toward him, placed his pistol against his neck and fired. Both fell together, each rejoicing over having killed the other, and both died.

FOR the three days ending on the evening of the 10th inst., there were ninety-seven new cases of yellow fever reported to the Board of Health at Memphis, and nineteen deaths from the disease. The Board of Health issued an address to the City Government, declaring the fever epidemic, and warning citizens absent not to return. The Committee of Safety held a meeting and adopted resolutions looking to the future welfare of citizens.

FOR the forty-eight hours ending on the evening of Aug. 12 there were fifteen deaths from yellow fever in Memphis, and eighty-one new cases were reported to the Board of Health in the same period. Many distressing incidents of the plague are mentioned. One man had two children sick, one of whom died and was taken to the cemetery. On his return he found the other also dead, having had the black vomit during his absence. A family of nine persons was discovered by the Howards in a house in the suburbs, without any bedding. The father and one child were already dead, and the mother and six children down with the fever. The details of the situation of the family are horrible in the extreme.—The fever has broken out at Corinth, Miss., through which has passed large numbers of Memphis refugees, and all those who could get away have left the stricken town. The Mayor and President of the Board of Health were the first to contract the disease.

THE report that the yellow fever had broken out at Corinth, Miss., was a canard of the first water. There has not been a case of anything resembling Yellow Jack in the town.

THERE were forty-three new cases of yellow fever and fourteen deaths from the post at Memphis on the 13th inst., and on the 14th the new cases reported numbered forty, and the deaths thirteen. Nearly all the new cases reported in these two days were colored people. A dispatch from Memphis says that "Dr. Jerome Cochrane's plan of enforcing rigid isolation of the yellow-fever sick has been indorsed by the City Board of Health, and measures adopted to put it into effect. Yellow flags will be placed conspicuously on every house in which a case is lying sick, and unauthorized persons positively forbidden admittance."

GENERAL.

A MONTREAL dispatch of the 8th inst. announces the failure of the Ville Marie Bank, an institution with $1,000,000 capital, founded and chiefly patronized by French Canadians. The liabilities of the concern are about $1,000,000. The suspension intensified the panic that had been created by the failure of the Consolidated Bank of Canada, and the Exchange Bank of Montreal and other banks were at once besieged by alarmed depositors. THE National Board of Health has the following dispatch from the United States Consul at Matamoras: "Reliable information from Tampico, Mexico, says: 'We have yellow-fever epidemic worse than New Orleans last year. People die like flies. The quarantine at Bagdad against Tampico is still insufficient.'"

POLITICAL.

A NEW Washington evening paper, which is to be a Grant organ, is to appear in Washington about Sept. 1. Dr. A. Randolph Keim is to be the editor. George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, is the main financial backer, though ex-Secretary Robeson has $50,000 in the project. Mr. Murtagh will be the business manager.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY EVARTS has addressed a letter of protest to the diplomatic representatives in this country of the leading foreign states, with regard to the course of the Governments in continuing to allow their subjects to leave for the United States as Mormon emigrants. The Government will bring the fact to the attention of foreign powers that their citizens are coming to this country in large numbers to take up the polygamous practices of Mormonism, and thus to subject themselves to the penalties of the criminal laws. If this notice does not lead to efforts on the part of foreign states to check the growth of Mormon proselytism, then, says a Cabinet officer, our Government will be in a position where we can forbid vessels landing Mormon immigrants in our ports. The Government, in fact, proposes to strike a blow at Mormon emigration, and thus cut off the church's greatest source of increasing vigor and numerical strength.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that the President by executive order has restored to the public domain 8,250,000 acres on the northeastern bank of the Missouri river, corresponding in general outlines to the area withdrawn by executive orders of Jan. 11 and May 2, 1873, now revoked.

PRESIDENT HAYES has accepted an invitation to be present and form one of the attractions at the Agricultural Fair at Neosho, Kan., on the 25th of September.

A Washington dispatch says: "The administration is closely watching the present aspect of Mormon affairs, but, as yet, no special reasons for anticipating an outbreak have been discovered. The Secretary of War is of the opinion that there are sufficient troops in Utah to enforce the decrees of the courts and protect the Gentile population. But, in case any further assistance is needed, the troops are now so stationed that they would be immediately available in case of any trouble at the principal centers of Mormon population."

Philanthropy.

There is a time in our life when we are almost exclusively occupied by individual endeavors and suffering; when we merely labor for ourselves and those who are nearest to us. Another time also comes when we have in some measure accomplished this, and are in a state of peace, or, at least, of quietness. It is then the time when the thinking and the good man looks observantly around him into social life, and sees how he can labor in the best way for the great, neglected family circle there, and take a participation in the good which he has obtained.—[illegible]

The Sprague-Conkling Scandal.

A special dispatch to the New York World from Narragansett Pier gives the following particulars of the Sprague-Conkling unpleasantness: The affair occurred on Friday evening. Either on Wednesday night or Thursday morning Senator Conkling arrived at Narragansett Pier. With him, or after him, came a trunk and a large valise. These articles of baggage were taken to the Sprague mansion by the direction of Senator Conkling. He remained there as a visitor the next day, and was on a hotel piazza the next evening conversing with some ladies. During Friday afternoon Gov. Sprague was observed driving about Narragansett Pier, having been at home entertaining his guests the night previous, though he had been absent for a day or two before. He had a gun with him, which it is believed that he loaded earlier in the day. Finally he drove to the rear of the house, which is about a mile and a half from the pier, and came through the house in a somewhat excited condition. He got out to the piazza, where he found Senator Conkling conversing with Mrs. Sprague, who was at a window. Gov. Sprague then said, addressing Senator Conkling: "Are you armed, sir?" Conkling replied: "No, I am not." "Then," said ex-Gov. Sprague, "I give you five minutes to get off these premises. If you are not then away I will fire at you."

Ex-Gov. Sprague is said then to have made use of some further exasperating language. Senator Conkling, seeming much surprised, but remembering that he was under ex-Gov. Sprague's roof, rose and took a few steps away, while Mrs. Sprague came out of the house and stood between them. Ex-Gov. Sprague stood looking at Senator Conkling while a carriage drove up which had been ordered to take Mrs. Sprague for a drive. When Mrs. Sprague found that ex-Gov. Sprague was apparently determined on an unpleasant scene, she called for her hat and shawl, which Mrs. Martin, a friend and a guest in the house, brought her.

After ex-Gov. Sprague had repeated his peremptory order to Mr. Conkling to quit his house, there was some hesitancy on the part of the New York Senator as to what should be done, but he finally took his hat, and, entering the carriage, went down to the pier, stopping on the way at Billington's restaurant. Scarcely had he arrived there and got out of the conveyance than ex-Gov. Sprague, who had followed, came up, and, therefore, it is certain that the latter must have kept his horse hitched up ready for use to follow Senator Conkling. On the arrival of ex-Gov. Sprague at Billington's another exchange of words took place, but there is not the slightest testimony to show that at any time a hand-to-hand encounter, such as has been spoken of freely here to-day, took place. But it is certain that there was an excited and threatening encounter between the two in one of the most public spots in the whole place, and thus it came to pass that the most exaggerated rumors were set in motion. Sifted down, the foregoing are the principal facts in the case so far as Mr. Conkling and Mr. Sprague are concerned.

—A correspondent of the New York Times gives the following version of the affair: On his arrival at the house, Mr. Sprague immediately sought Senator Conkling, and a conversation with him followed, part of which was overheard. One of the servants declares that in the hall Mr. Sprague loudly ordered Mr. Conkling to leave the house, saying he would give him twenty minutes to get out of sight, and if he did not go would shoot him. Senator Conkling walked out of the entrance and down the roadway toward the pier. He walked slowly, carrying his umbrella, and picking his steps carefully through the deep sand. He probably walked over this sandy and sun-beaten track as far as the bathing-houses, and then through the poorest bit of street in Narragansett Pier toward Billington's cafe. When he reached Billington's, Senator Conkling, according to the story of a bright boy who waited on him, went inside the door and stood there for a few moments. While he stood there Mr. Sprague had jumped into an old wagon, and was driving furiously down the road over which Senator Conkling had just passed. A tradesman who saw him as he turned into the street leading to Billington's said he looked very excited, and was driving furiously and carelessly. He drew up directly in front of the cafe, and Senator Conkling at that time stood on the covered stoop in front of it. As he reined up he shook his hand in a threatening manner at Senator Conkling, and talked and gesticulated excitedly. Then Mr. Conkling crossed part way over to the opposite corner, as if to go away. Mr. Sprague quickly followed, wheeling his horse suddenly and jumping out by Mr. Conkling's side so impetuously that he carried the seat of the wagon out with him. Sprague was heard to say, in a loud and excited voice: "You —— —— ——, I want you to get out of this place. If you don't go I'll shoot you! Don't cross my path again. Or, if you do, I want you to be armed, for I'll shoot you as sure as I meet you." To this Mr. Conkling made some reply, and then Mr. Sprague was heard to respond: "No, I'll accept no apologies. I want you to get out of this place instantly." Mr. Sprague then drove away, and Mr. Conkling started off towards the railroad depot.

—The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says the news in regard to the Conkling affair created no surprise whatever in Washington. "The only wonder here for months has been that the matter has not culminated at an earlier day. Senator Conkling's marked attentions towards the family of Senator Sprague have been the subject of general gossip in Washington for a long time. The local press and correspondents have given no circulation to the scandal out of regard to the lady in the case, and it is very likely that nothing in regard to the matter would ever have reached the public had not Senator Sprague concluded to take the matter in hand himself. That he would do this has been expected on each occasion of his latter visits to Washington. The matter first became a subject of quite general conversation in Washington about the time that Senator Conkling carried through the Senate and through the House a bill for refunding certain large amounts of tax, claimed to be exorbitant, levied upon the estate near this city now occupied by Mrs. Sprague. Her numerous visits to the Capitol and constant association when there with Senator Conkling intensified this talk, and for a couple of months before the adjournment of the last session the astonishment was general among the friends of both parties that they should either be so reckless in regard to affording foundation for general talk, or so oblivious to the vast amount of gossip to which their intimate association was giving rise."

Mrs. Sprague's Statement.

The following is the statement of Mrs. Senator Sprague in relation to the unfortunate difficulty at Narragansett Pier, which she has given permission to be published:

"As you must have surmised, Gov. Sprague's dissolute life and dissipated habits long ago interrupted our marital relations, though I have striven hard through untold humiliation and pain to hide from the world, for my children's sake, the true condition of a blighted, miserable domestic life. About a year ago even this poor semblance abruptly culminated after a most disgraceful orgie and arrest at Nantasket beach, with the circumstances of which many people in Rhode Island are not unfamiliar. I then sought with my little girls the neighborhood of old friends and the shelter of my honored father's former home. There, dwelling almost within the shadow of his tomb, I felt more secure and less unprotected. Here kindly sympathy sought me out, and, though covert malice pointed some censorious comments, relief came, and our circumscribed means were adequate to our simple and quiet mode of life. Gov. Sprague's irregularities having been visited upon him by the trustee administering his embarrassed estate, the contribution toward the maintenance of myself and children, without a word of explanation to me, was suddenly cut down to a palpably inadequate sum. Even this was remitted but for a few months. Then, owing to a complete rupture between Gov. Sprague and the trustee, all remittances ceased, and for six months past no money has been contributed toward the maintenance of his family or household by Gov. Sprague. In addition to greater wrongs, unpaid tradespeople have been urgent in their demands for payment, but he gave no heed to the indebtedness, even answering when pressed by me to find a way to meet these just demands and relieve me of annoyance, that "I must look to my powerful Washington friends for aid," and, to my deep distress and mortification, permitted, after long delay, a bill for carriage hire for his mother's use during a visit to me in Washington to be paid by the gentleman who had recommended to us the stable from which the carriage was hired. This and other more unmanly exhibitions have been incidental to the past year, while the brutality of recent events, the repetition of similar scenes of violence and outrage enacted in former years, has finally driven us from the door, and filled the public prints of the country with a scandal too cruel to be endured without redress. Gov. Sprague's senseless and shameful persecution of the children's teacher in literary matters, Mr. Linck, at the root of the story, the real animus being, as confessed, Gov. Sprague's unwillingness to be subjected at the table and in the household to the constant presence of a gentleman. The attempt to complicate Mr. Conkling with this matter is absurd. Gov. Sprague's affront to the guests in the house was most gross and without excuse. Mr. Martin, whom I had met in a very precarious condition of health en route for Narragansett Pier, I induced to go to Canonchet for quiet and good nursing. He was removed under Gov. Sprague's threats of murder to be done, at the imminent risk of his life. Mr. Conkling was, of course, as unconscious as I that Gov. Sprague sought occasion to enact the tragic role of the injured husband, for at their last meeting, not long since, Gov. Sprague had sought from Mr. Conkling not only legal advice, but had accepted at his hand a favor such as only the friendliest confidence could warrant. In his determination to overthrow Mr. Chaffee as trustee, and hoping to join forces with the creditor interest to drive him from his post, Gov. Sprague had carried away from the counting-house of A. & W. Sprague the books of the Quidnick Company, refusing to return them. Mr. Chaffee, in turn, refused, until these books were returned, to permit Gov. Sprague to hold any business relations with the concern, and, of course, refused to permit him to draw any money.

"This was the situation of affairs which, by coming to Rhode Island, I had hoped, through some influence or other brought to bear on Gov. Sprague, to help to set right and to secure by some means a maintenance for the four children for whose wants and education I have been and am now bearing the undivided burden. A conference with counsel employed by the firm achieved no results. Prof. Linck, under a contract with me for three months, was neither permitted to perform his duties nor paid and dismissed. We had no ostensible means for living at Canonchet without incurring additional indebtedness, to which I refused to be a party. In this awkward and painful dilemma, I requested Mr. Conkling, who had been already consulted by Mr. Sprague, and upon whose judgment and advice I have safely relied my own matters, to see Gov. Sprague, and try to ascertain what point there is in this proposed programme of opposition and what results were likely to follow that would benefit or provide for the children. Mr. Conkling stopped at Canonchet for this purpose, and was awaiting Gov. Sprague's return to seek an interview with him when the now-notorious outbreak occurred. At any hostile words were exchanged between Mr. Conkling and Gov. Sprague at Canonchet they alone know what they were, for no one else heard them. What transpired in the village I do not know beyond what is reported in the sensational accounts given in the newspapers."

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague—A Stormy Interview.

A dispatch from Narragansett Pier to the Chicago Tribune says: Much excitement was created here this afternoon by a meeting between Gov. Sprague and his wife. After leaving the house, on the occasion of the first trouble, it is asserted that Mrs. Sprague said, "I will never sleep under the same roof with Mr. Sprague again." To-day, Mrs. Sprague came to Narragansett Pier, accompanied by a friend, Miss Emma Fosdick, of Stamford, Ct., and Mr. Thompson, a lawyer, partner of Rowland Hazzard. Mr. Thompson drove down to Canonchet to get some clothing for Mrs. Sprague and her children, Mrs. Sprague remaining meanwhile in the house of Conductor Hale, near the station. Mr. Thompson was met at Canonchet by Gov. Sprague, who, after some conversation, decided to return with the lawyer to Conductor Hale's house. There the husband and wife met in a room, with Mr. Thompson, Miss Fosdick, and Mrs. Hale present.

A very stormy interview of an hour followed between Sprague and his wife. Gov. Sprague began by demanding the return of the three little girls. The Governor was laboring under strong, but suppressed, excitement during the entire interview. He accused Mrs. Sprague of poisoning the minds of his children against him, and alienating the affections of the boy, Willie, through the influence of the German tutor, Linck. Mrs. Sprague, in turn, accused the husband of general brutality when under the influence of liquor, and of circulating base and unfounded stories against her character. She said that on more than one occasion she had been in peril of her life from him, referring distinctly to one occasion when he pointed a loaded pistol at her, threatening to shoot her. Gov. Sprague referred to Senator Conkling's intimacy with Mrs. Sprague, and she repelled any insinuation of wrong-doing on her part with great indignation. At last Gov. Sprague said:

"Do you intend to return to Canonchet?"

"I fear for my life if I do," she replied.

"I never harmed any one," was the Governor's answer, "and you are safe."

After many demands on the part of Gov. Sprague for the return of the children, and firm refusals of Mrs. Sprague, a consultation was held with Mr. Thompson and with another lawyer, a Mr. Skinner, who had been summoned from the Atlantic House, and it was decided that the children should be surrendered to their father. He placed them in his carriage, with their nurse, who had accompanied Mrs. Sprague from Providence, and drove to Canonchet.

Mrs. Sprague was greatly agitated after the departure of her children, and finally decided that she would follow them to Canonchet. Accordingly, after nightfall, she was also driven to the splendid mansion which she had left under such sad circumstances a week before, and within which so many brilliant companies had gathered in the days when the husband and wife were younger in their married life.

—A Utica (N. Y.) telegram of the 15th says that "Senator Conkling has not made his appearance in public since his return home, and none of his friends will speak of the scandal thus far."

BANK of England notes are very simple-looking pieces of paper, compared with the elaborately-engraved bills of this country. It would seem that the Bank of England notes could be easily counterfeited; yet this is rarely done. No two of them are exactly alike. The printing is done by a method known only to the inventor, and the paper is manufactured by a process which has been in charge of the Portal family for 200 years. No notes are ever reissued after being paid back into the bank, but are periodically destroyed. A seven-years' collection of these notes on one occasion aggregated $15,000,000,000.

Eugenie's Souvenirs of Her Son.

The poor Empress (writes a correspondent of the Boston Journal) in her melancholy seclusion at Camden House, has the sympathy of everybody, including the ladies who are her old enemies, and who would not admit once upon a time that she was a good wife and mother. She received the Queen of England the other day in the famous blue boudoir, where she has collected all the souvenirs which must hereafter have only a tragical interest for her. There under a glass case she keeps the casts of the right hand of the Emperor and the young Prince, and these two hands are represented as holding the telegraph dispatch announcing the adoption of the law ordering the reconstruction of the column in the Place Vendome. There also on a dainty shelf is a little white satin rosette that the Prince Imperial wore on the day of his first communion. By a singular stroke of luck this tiny piece of ribbon was found intact in the midst of the ruins of the Tuileries, preserved in some miraculous manner from even a single stain. And there, too, on a pedestal, and carefully shielded from harm, is a marble bust of the Prince, which was likewise uninjured by the fire. As the bed-chamber and the study of the Emperor have been kept exactly as they were on the day of his death, so are the rooms of the young Prince left precisely as he quitted them, never to return, and the beds of both the Emperor and the Prince are constantly covered with fresh violets.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

DURING the year ending June 30, 1879, 141,981 immigrants landed in New York, against 103,062 during the previous two years. The tide is steadily rising.

THERE are said to be about 30,000 telephones now in service in this country, and only 500 in England. This is a good example of the comparatively slow progress of new inventions in the mother country.

THE average of mortgages upon the farming lands of France is but 5 per cent. In England it is 58. The United States has but 3,000,000 proprietary agriculturists. France, with a vastly smaller area, has 6,000,000, 5,000,000 of whom are small farmers. England has but 25,000 landholders, and 12 per cent only of the people till the soil; the rest are engaged in manufacturing and other pursuits. One million are paupers.

THE rainfall in London during the first six months of the present year exceeded the average by more than 50 per cent., having been 18.49 inches as against an average of 11.83 inches. The only instances during the past twenty-one years in which the fall of the first half of the year has exceeded fifteen inches are 1860, 15.58 inches; 1866, 17.08 inches; 1878, 19.40 inches (5½ inches fell in two days). This year the fall is steady and persistent; last year it came in floods.

IT DOESN'T take much of a mathematician to count flies; but, for fear that some of our readers may not know what a fly is, and how they are weighed, we append the following table. Green-grocers will find it an excellent authority for weighing butter: 162 house flies one ounce; 2,592 house flies one pound; 259,200 house flies one hundred-weight; 5,184,000 house flies one ton. The reader may extract some consolation by pasting this on the bedroom wall and studying it at night.

TO MAKE shoe-pegs enough for American use consumes annually 100,000 cords of timber, and to make our lucifer matches 300,000 cubic feet of the best pine are required every year. Lasts and boot-trees take 500,000 cords of birch, beech and maple, and the handles of tools 500,000 more. The baking of our bricks consumes 2,000,000 cords of wood, or what would cover with forests about 50,000 acres of land. Telegraph poles already up represent 800,000 trees, and their annual repairs consume 300,000 more. The ties of our railroads consume annually thirty years' growth of 75,000 acres, and to fence all our railroads would cost $45,000,000, with a yearly expenditure of $15,000,000 for repairs. These are some of the ways in which American forests are going. There are others. Our packing-boxes, for instance, cost, in 1874, $12,000,000, while the timber used each year in making wagons and agricultural implements is valued at more than $100,000,000.

IN Matamoras, Mexico, a desperado named Pancho Nieto, better known as El Tejon (the badger), got drunk and rode through the streets, declaring that he could do as he pleased. After dashing about the streets for some time, he saw an unoffending female, at whom he fired. The ball from his revolver passed through the woman's hair, inflicting a slight scalp wound, and, striking a firm brick wall, rebounded with such precision and force as to reach Nieto's heart and kill him almost instantly.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

IT is stated that the position of Minister to England cannot be decently maintained at an expense of less than $42,000.

THE importation of American leather into Europe has increased over 100 per cent. since 1873. In that year Europe received 659,012 hides, and to judge by the exports from the United States thus far this year it will receive at the close over 1,500,000.

A MISERY-LOVING New York prophet named Coyle has predicted a terrible pestilence, which will visit the whole earth and be especially severe, in 1880. This summer will be fine, and next winter will be a remarkably warm one. The summer of 1880 is to be extremely hot, and the terrible pestilence will come.

THERE has been a rapid development of the business of the postoffice savings banks in Canada. There was a falling off in deposits during the three years ending with June 30, 1877, but during the last two years 20,813 accounts were opened, against 17,442 closed, thus leaving open June 30, 1879, 27,455 accounts, representing, with accrued interest, a total deposit of $3,105,190, the largest amount the bank has ever had.

"THE Vale of Cashmere, with its roses the brightest that the earth ever gave; its temples, and grottoes, and fountains as clear as the love-lighted eyes that hang over their wave," is in a terrible plight, and, if now seen by Tom Moore, would thoroughly disenchant him. Grim famine stalks through the beautiful valley, and where, two years ago, fully 300,000 people lived in peace and contentment, only some 30,000 souls are now to be found. It is a terrible scene to contemplate—nine out of every ten either gone to that bourne whence no traveler returns, or driven out for good because of an absolute scarcity of the means of existence.

THERE is, it would appear, considerable danger in eating cold pigeon-pie. The British Admiralty have issued a circular letter containing the results of the investigation they caused to be instituted into the recent poisoning of several men of the troopship Tamar, which resulted fatally in the case of the steward. A careful analysis failed to discover any mineral poison in the stomach of the deceased, and the medical men have come to the conclusion that the case was one of choleraic diarrhea, induced by mephitic poisoning, possibly caused by a pigeon-pie, of which all the sufferers had eaten, for although two officers had previously partaken of it without any ill effect poisonous changes are known to take place in cold pies, and especially in those made with game, by simply keeping or lying by for some time.

THE brutality to which pedestrianism has sunk was illustrated by a seventy-five-hour race in Boston. Toward the close of the third day, three of the contestants were so close together that the struggle for the lead became desperate. Croft, a young man from New York, became temporarily crazy from fatigue and want of sleep, and quitted the track; but his trainers forced him to return, and he eventually won by completing 271 miles, on a course so small that nineteen circuits were required for a mile. Campana, the old man whose feats in Gilmore's Garden were awkward and ridiculous, also fell into a condition of mental derangement, and frequently stopped to talk incoherently with spectators; but he was forced to continue, although he sank on the track exhausted, and at the last moment relinquished the second place to Hichborn, a negro.

THEY are agitating the subject of the dissolution of the present Parliament in Great Britain. The Liberals, who are in the opposition, eagerly desire a dissolution and elections to take place this fall, the Conservatives being in favor generally of letting the Parliament expire by limitation. But this will not take place till the autumn of 1881. There is considerable discussion in the Liberal party as respects its leadership. Many of the Liberals assert that Lord Granville is not only "too little," but too weak for the position. Others of them claim that Lord Hartington could not hold out against Mr Gladstone. It is a cause for reflection that the future of each of the great parties of the day in England appears to depend upon the life of one man. Lord Beaconsfield has recently done wonders for his party. In spite of the opposition of others of its leaders with the prestige of old family names and power, he has lifted it out of the slough in which it had been floundering for years. But he is represented as feeble, tired of public life, and wishing to escape from its burdens. A correspondent represents a lady as putting to him, a few days since, a question such as only a lady would dare to ask. She said: "How long will your Ministry last?" His reply was: "As long as Mr. Gladstone lasts."

THE people of Canada are now struggling with a bank failure which, in its effects, is almost as disastrous as the collapse of the Bank of Glasgow. The Consolidated Bank of Canada, with its headquarters in Montreal, has been obliged, through bad management, it is alleged, to suspend. The depositors are very much excited, and pronounce the management a swindle, and in this they are joined by the shareholders who had no voice in the control of its affairs. One large shareholder has announced his intention of criminally prosecuting the managers for issuing false statements of its condition. Sir Francis Hincks, ex-Governor of the Barbadoes, and recent Finance Minister of the Dominion, is the President of the collapsed concern, and it was largely on the strength of his name and his connection with the Government that the bank jumped into universal circulation.

EDWIN BOOTH is aged 46. He accompanied his father, the celebrated tragedian, on his starring tours when very young—expeditions which, while they had the advantage of initiating him into the mysteries of stage business, had the disadvantage of precluding him from a complete education. He is unread, and has no taste whatever for literature. He has a poetic presence, a graceful mein, an apt eye for pictorial effect, and an admirable natural elocution. His first successes were made in California. Thence he went to Australia with Laura Keene, but returned without performing there. His first New York success was made at the Winter Garden Theater, when he performed Hamlet for upward of 100 consecutive nights, a success which was subsequently swelled by the unfortunate notoriety of the name. His attraction has, under bad management, recently rather waned. His first wife was Miss Mary Devlin, of Troy, a most charming actress, by whom he had a daughter, now touching womanhood. His present wife was the adopted daughter of Mr. McVicker, the Chicago manager Mr. Booth is gentle and amiable in manner, melancholy in temperament, and of a most blameless private life.

A Babe in the Woods.

The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press contains a distressing account of a little girl's wanderings and death in the forests about Ripton. Two little girls, the daughters of Mr. J. E. Goodyear, were sent on an errand to a neighbor's house half a mile away. Returning, one of them went by the road, and the other took a foot-path through the woods. Julia, who had gone by the road, returned home safely, but the other, Bertha, who was only 9 years old, did not appear, and her mother, becoming anxious, started at once in search of her daughter. Soon finding that the little girl had wandered from the path, she gave an alarm, and a small body of men that constantly received accessions formed a skirmish line and the forest was thoroughly searched for about a mile and a half with no success, except the finding of the girl's tracks at two widely separated points. All the logging-roads with which the forest abounded were closely examined, when darkness put an end to the searching for a few hours. Reinforcements having arrived, a force of over a hundred men followed the roads by lantern-light for an hour or two, when, that failing, a halt was ordered until daybreak, when some 150 men pushed on, determined to find the little one. They found tracks following the North branch of Middlebury river, which flows through some steep hills in a rough, rocky chasm that would appal any but the strongest nerve from undertaking its descent. For some mile and a half further the girl was tracked, in which distance she crossed the branch twice, and, having reached the junction of the stream with the South fork, she again crossed the stream, clambered up a high, almost perpendicular rock, and, overcome by the excessive exertions of the past few hours, lost her hold and fell thirty feet to the rocks and river below, crushing in a small portion of the skull in the upper part of her forehead. She was apparently instantly killed, and floated into an eddy of shallow water, where she was found about half-past 6 by the searchers, and, after a little delay, taken to her almost-distracted parents.

Stirring Up a Bumble-Bee's Nest.

While a man in Maine was mowing a meadow with a machine last week he drove over a bumble-bees' nest, and in an instant his horses started on a run, and, maddened by the stings of the bees, bounded through the field at a headlong gallop. The driver was thrown from his seat, but escaped with bruises. The machine was stove to pieces, and one of the horses, valued at $200, was so seriously cut by the knives that it was necessary to kill it.

CAPT. BOYTON recently swam from Long Branch to Manhattan beach in his rubber suit. He was followed by sharks, and he says the trip was twice as terrible and severe as the going across the English channel.

ROBERT LANCASTER, a Stone county (Ark.) murderer, after killing a man in Arkansas, another in Kansas, and shooting himself through the leg so badly that it had to be amputated, is to be hung for his crimes.

REEMELIN'S LOGIC.

The Political Situation Scanned by a Veteran Observer.

The Republican Party and Resumption.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Inasmuch as the speech of the Hon. Charles Reemelin, delivered at the Democratic Convention in Springfield, Ohio, has produced so much consternation in Republican quarters, it is perhaps well enough to have the full text of the same. Herewith is a verbatim report:

MR. REEMELIN'S SPEECH.

Seneca tells us that "men must be educated in virtue and truth; vice and error they learn of themselves." I shall, as always, bear this axiom in mind while I am speaking to you, and address myself therefore to what are at this time the more dangerous self-learned errors and vices prevalent in our public life. I shall not cater to them by discussing before you such unprofitable questions as whether business is good, and if bad, which party is to blame, but pass at once to the essential point whether those in power are pursuing a rightful policy from the ethical standpoint as to money and finance. If they do, they deserve our support; if not, our opposition. On that issue we have a right to arraign them, while the merits or demerits of hard or easy times are always divided over society and its economic ways and means, and present questions hardly proper amid our political partisan discussions.

That it is just now peculiarly difficult to find ourselves to rights as to financial politics can be denied only by persons insnared in party prejudices, who do not see the deep shadows in which we all stand. Such folks will also reject my statement that the main source of the tattered condition of the public will springs from the vacillations of our Government at Washington. I will therefore present the opinion of a man standing outside of our politics, who is one of the best thinkers of Europe on money matters, A. B. Bischoff, of Basle.

He writes in the last number of Hildebrand's Journal of Political Economy, published at Jena:

"There prevails at this time in the United States on the subject of money such distractedness and unreliability that it is impossible to form a judgment as to the future money policy of that country."

These words express, as I think, no more nor less than the sorrowful truth as to the political situation among us. Against them stand the bold, unscientifically formulated assertions of the Republican party of Ohio in the fifth article of its platform, as adopted at its late State Convention, which I ask leave now to read to you:

"The financial administration of the Government by the Republican party, in accomplishing the great work of the resumption of specie payments, in restoring our currency to par value, in greatly reducing the burden of the national debt, in refunding a large portion of the same at a rate of interest one-third less than the former rate, thereby alone saving to the treasury $13,000,000 a year and enhancing the national credit to a standing never before attained, is a source of just pride to the Republicans of Ohio and deserves the warm approbation of the American people."

You see the impartial Swiss republican thinks very different from our partisan Republicans in Ohio. The free look of the Swiss thinker is angered by looking at the policy of our Government on money matters, while our Republican party politicians are proud of it. Who does not recall to mind in view of this the remark of Socrates when he censured a scholar's pride by saying, "Your pride shines through your rags!" Or am I in error? Has the Republican party really cause to plume itself? Is she, or, better said, are her leaders animated by good motives? Have they really achieved what they claim? That's the point of this election campaign. I ask, therefore:

Is it true that the Republican party, or respectively its administration, has accomplished resumption; that our paper money has par value; that the burden of our national debt has been reduced one-third; that a saving of interest equal to $13,000,000 has followed; that the public credit stands higher than ever? Were these things true Democratic opposition would be unjustifiable; indeed, the elevation of Sherman to the Presidency would be but the logic of facts.

Let us now, with a view to clearness in this matter, place before us the actual situation in plain, truthful language.

We have, according to Sherman's own reports, $346,681,016 of greenbacks in circulation. They are a legal tender for all debts; their redemption is legally and actually in force; but mind! by the bi-metallic standard and redeemable only at New York and Washington. The option whether to pay gold or silver is with the treasury officers, and we have, therefore, both a limited as well as precarious resumption, and all under difficulties.

We have next in circulation $350,000,000 of national-bank notes, which are now increasing daily at the rate of half a million. They are, by law, redeemable in greenbacks. As a courtesy to customers, banks and others pay gold or silver for them, but they can not be compelled to do it. Since there are over 2,000 national banks scattered over the whole country, and the notes of each never circulate near their homes, there is in fact no redemption at all enforcible by law, except with great delays and difficulties.

We have besides in circulation $15,000,000 of trade dollars, whose final fate is entirely undecided and floats in the air.

Then we have about $50,000,000 of silver of various denominations. These coins are from 15 to 25 per cent. under gold coin par, and only the legal-tender quality holds them nominally at par in the retail trade.

We have also, partly in public, partly in private safes, as well as in public circulation, about $250,000,000 of gold. Of this metal no one knows whether it is to be minted down to the silver standard or whether silver is to be lifted up to the gold standard.

There are also still out $15,874,727.12 fractional currency, that are redeemable only in our silver coins.

Finally, we have $26,295,000 of certificates of deposit, that are redeemable only in paper money. And beside them, $17,780,000 in gold and silver certificates, payable as expressed on their face.

The gold notes of the gold banks—$4,700,000—hardly come within our purview. They prove only that the regular national banks are not specie banks.

We have accordingly about $760,000,000 of total paper circulation, unless we add the $655,000,000 of 4-per-cent. bonds, which are largely a circulating medium, which would make $1,415,000,000. And with it we have $315,000,000 of metallic circulation. But we have neither a money unit, nor a unit of account, nor a fixed legal standard of value. Tell me, then, who is right—the Swiss objective scientific thinker or the Ohio Republican platform tinkers?

That our valuta, as science expresses it; our waehrung, as the Germans say; our standard of value, as we have it, is not definitely settled, is undeniable. And it is therefore wind work, yea, I dare say it, it is fraud to talk of resumption on a par value while this is not legally settled. All our paying transactions are incomplete. We are still in the meshes of the money jobbers, and our condition is that of Italy, of which the Belgian delegates to the late Mint Conference at Paris said, nem. con., that it has no rightful basis and is violative of existing treaties.

Resumption de facto is not then resumption de jure! And partial resumption is not full resumption! Business regulation is not a legal rule, because it establishes nothing, and every hour may bring a change. The relations of debtor and creditor, those of buyer and seller, are subject to accidents and they lack the lawful freedom of action which complete resumption alone can give. To speak of resumption as accomplished, under such circumstances, is—salve venia—an impertinence. Please tell me what we have resumed on, and I will retract my harsh accusation.

We stand before a dozen money questions, all unsolved. Full resumption will exist only after they are solved. We are even without a legal definition of the word dollar. France has the franc, England the pound sterling, Germany the mark as unit of value and account, and every Judge can decide what is payment by the law of the land. Here the debtor determines (if only "dollars" are mentioned in the contract) whether he pays in gold or silver or greenbacks. And it is not only presumable, but certain, that he will pay in the money of least value—perhaps in depreciated paper. More than "dollar" must be spoken or written in a contract to avoid misunderstandings and wrongs.

The Republican party has industriously circulated the statement that the Democrats alone mean to disturb existing settled moneyed relations. But allow me to ask, Are they settled? Does not the Republican party itself intend to change them? Do they not purpose to abandon the greenback and go to the national-bank note? Yes, I ask, can either party, or the country free from party, abide in present moneyed conditions? I ask these questions in all sincerity of sincere men of all parties: Are we to have monometallism or bimetallism, or a bond basis? These questions and their by-issues are still open; but that we can not stay as we are is beyond contradiction. Neither the Republicans, nor the Democrats, nor the Nationals, nor the Socialists or Communists have played all their trumps. The "joker" is still out and unplayed.

Light, light and light again we need as to our money questions. Neither party has spoken its last word. The Republican less than the Democratic. For five-eighths of our paper money resumption has not even been initiated, because no law exists placing national-bank notes on the specie basis. How dishonest is it then to talk of an accomplished resumption while the purpose is to steer finally for a bank-note standard that has no specie basis whatever.

That the main solution is still in question will be still more apparent to all when it is considered that the debts to the banks, and theirs to the public, constitute by far the largest amount of all indebtedness, and exceeds several milliards. This unsolved sphere is the coming struggle for real civilization in America. Their purpose is to abandon the greenbacks, redeemable and legal tender as they are, and to put in their place bank notes, whose value is still in doubt. How anybody that wants honest money can support this is incomprehensible to me. It is the Republican party that is for irredeemable paper money, while the Democratic party of Ohio proposes to make the legally-limited and redeemable treasury note the permanent currency of the country. As a comparative question, the Democrats are certainly nearer right. The Republican direction is toward a money system that depends on the arbitrary will of several thousand bank officers, while that of the Democracy is to moneyed ways and means that depend on the will of our Federal law-making power. There is danger of arbitrary power in both, but least in the latter. With the banks, care of and for private interests is the motive to prudent management, but the free, large view is wanting with them which statesmen alone possess, and which makes these, with the public welfare and the common interests in their eye, recognize it as their duty to resist the eternal pressure after private advantages which is ever pushing itself forward by those who are interested in banks. To guard the land and the people against these special interests seems, as I think, at this time particularly indicated. The one wheel of the coach of state is already in the ruts of the national banks, and it is on the dangerous side. Is not, then, prevention a necessity? As Seneca points out to us, in the quotation I read to you, there are vicious learnings that must be counteracted by light drawn from principles.

Adam Smith gave to the world 100 years ago a hint how a people can distinguish their friends from those of private interests. He said, chapter 207: "The member of Parliment who supports every proposal for strengthening monopoly is sure to acquire not only the reputation of understanding trade, but great popularity and influence with an order of men whose numbers and wealth render them of great importance. If he opposes them, on the contrary, and still more if he has authority enough to be able to thwart them, neither the most acknowledged probity, nor the highest rank, nor the greatest public services can protect him from the most infamous abuse and detraction, from personal insults nor sometimes from real danger arising from the insolent outrage of furious and disappointed monopolists."

Who does not recognize in the first picture that of Sherman? Smith states the causes of his great reputation as a financier, and why he is now the advanced Presidential candidate? And who does not understand the reasons of the detraction, of the personal defamation and insults heaped upon certain prominent Democrats, such as Thurman and Tilden? Millions upon millions has Sherman, as Senator, already turned toward the banks; he is still at it; their press and their orators have paid him and will pay him with honors and emoluments.

Mince it as we may, it is still true that our finance is in the hands of a man who is a splendid stock and bond jobber, of a higher, but in principle identical, type as Jay Gould, in which profit is the basis, but all higher ethical statesmanship is wanting. And I ask you, as high-toned Americans, whether you are willing to join the chorus for Sherman worship started in bank parlors and echoed back by party sycophants?

Let us now test closely how much, if any, is true, as to the other boastings of the Republicans. They ascribe to themselves all merit for the comparative success as to saving in interest and the public credit. Let us again hear what an impartial man says. Neuman Spollart, one of the clearest heads of Europe, says:

"The United States have been rescued from marasmus, or politico-economic disintegration, only through their natural resources; specially by the richest wheat and corn crop, a good cotton crop, and the so far largest exportation of petroleum."

The admirers of Sherman, himself included, claim, on the contrary, all credit for him. With equal right might a man sitting up behind on a coach ascribe to himself the early arrival at a point of destination, when it was the strength and rapidity of the horses, the good road and coach that made it possible. It was, indeed, an embracing of an opportunity, both with the man who sat up behind us with Sherman, which has indeed its merits, too. But whether the use of the opportunity was honest is another question. We need but to put it to let all see that the adoration of Sherman is very much an exaggeration, set in scene by the private interests whom he favors. He is the most dangerous inflationist of all the public men in the United States, and will never hesitate to disturb private business and to jeopardize the relations of trade and industry, if it suits his purposes.

A saving of $13,000,000 of interest is the bait with which we are to be caught. It is a large sum, but that placed in view by those who proposed in 1872 to pay the national debt in greenbacks was still larger, it was $130,000,000. Why take two bites at a cherry? If throwing off interest is the criterion, then it is better to throw off the whole thereof, and not one-fourth only. In such policies there are degrees of righteousness or unrighteousness, viz.: repudiation, forced loans, moral as well as immoral pressure on the creditor, and also the Tennessee plan of an ultimatum to the creditor by the debtor that holds the master position.

Sherman has kept up all the outer forms of financial decency. He has ever cried: "Prenez guard!" before he made the sharper passes; but he was sure to strike, nevertheless. The people are no more, as a whole, helpless as they were during the war; but there is now an insecurity in money that leaves but little option whether to take 4 per cents. or risk all. He was gracious in allowing 4 per cent., for he might have had their money at 3—yes, at 2 per cent. Indeed, they would have invested it with him merely for safe-keeping, as they used to do with John Law in the last century. Indeed, the resemblance holds good generally. Law also had his nominal par between different securities. He, too, made each new scheme preparatory to a new issue, and adding bubble to bubble. Does not everybody see that the 4 per cents. are the facilities for future national-bank issues, which will then have much less security than these have now?

The last twenty years of the history of America has brought to the surface numerous specimens of transient greatness. Who can count all the Napoleons, Wellingtons, Talleyrands, Pitts and Neckers that had the cognomen "Greatest" to their names? Diana of Ephesus, Alexander, Charlemagne had to be satisfied with "Great!"

Why should not Sherman then also pass for the greatest financier the world ever saw? He beats, in writing fifty quickly, even the "unjust servant" of the parable in the New Testament.

Shall we too worship him? Or shall we do, as Lanau tells us, of his American host in the "Log Cabin," who

* * * with uncrooked back,
Would not lie even with a finger's bend.

If the latter is our duty, as I think it is, then we must say that pressing $600,000,000 new bonds upon the market while the standard of value for the dollar stated in the bond is not fixed is dishonest! The real object on the part of Sherman in such transactions is to gather accomplices to his personal aims and to use small personal and corporate interests for his great ambition. But we may be told that "in finance there are no morals." Well, then, let us count by dollars, and hold Sherman to a full account whether he used his opportunity to the utmost. And, with this inquiry before us, it must occur to all as strange that the new 4 per cent. bonds bring in the money market nearly as much as the old 5 and 6 per cents. Doesn't every one see that some equivalent must have been given for the reduction of interest? And so it is. He has shortened the interest, but lengthened the time, and it means that the hands of the people are tied for thirty years, and that it can no longer decide whether the French rente, or annuity system, or the English 3 per cent. consols, or the original American short time 5 per cent. bond system shall be the policy of the land. And for whose sake did Sherman play his game of political anticipation? Who else except the banks, whose recharter is at hand and who need the open and shut game between 4 per cents. and their bank notes? Then we shall have the back and forward dancing between bank notes and bonds, at the pleasure of bankers, in which the business men of the land pay for the music.

We must, however, also look up the expense account, so that we may know what these manipulations cost. Was it right to allow banks ½ per cent. commission and three months' time to pay them in when all these bonds could be sold without commission and for cash? I know of no public reports where the profits of the banks are officially stated, but I can estimate them and state the amount found, to wit, $5,000,000 at least.

For further elucidation let us use the newest treasury statement. In it we find that there were in the treasury July 1, $430,500,000. And to whom does the money belong?

$ 5,198,878.77	belong to interest overdue.
55,386,660.26	belong to bonds long called in.
9,070,977.13	belong to interest overdue thereon.
17,180,660.00	belong to gold and silver certificates.
26,285,000.00	belong to greenback deposits.
8,406,106.00	belong to outstanding fractional currency.
169,771,000.00	belong to bonds called in for the new 4 per cents.
145,231,057.56	belong to resumption and general treasury purposes.
$430,591,297.72

An immense sum of fugitive money that was flying from insecure private credit and business to a pampered public credit and to treasury strong boxes, secure as they were believed to be against the ordinary roving tramps and tricky borrowers. Sherman smiled grimly at this flight of treasure to his hands. He quickly announced himself for the Presidency.

We might assert that all this money is improperly in the treasury, for an able Minister of Finance would have no surplus for any purpose; he would any way keep out of all such advance politics and let his payments follow quickly the receipts. But we do not want to judge Sherman too rigidly. He himself, however, would not claim more than $20,000,000 for the public service. There remain, therefore, $410,000,000, all money, that remain in the treasury, because it belongs to folks who can but won't have it, and prefer to leave it without interest, because outside it cannot, as they think, be safely invested.

On these $410,000,000 the United States pays interest on a corresponding amount of 4-per-cent. bonds in circulation, which is $16,400,000. Deduct from this the $13,000,000 and it leaves $2,600,000 interest which is unnecessarily paid. The housewife that dished up salt pork and let the fresh meat perish has in Sherman her alter ego.

That Sherman did not for a single moment believe in the practicability of true resumption appears to me, knowing him for years and having observed him closely, an indubitable fact. He never understood that resumption requires, as precondition, a restoration of a stable standard of value, and that resumption, not redemption, was the point. All his preparations prove this, and besides that he deceived himself as to the people. He believed them to be gold hungry, while they wanted only the specie standard. They wanted a sterling dollar, a definite unit of account and money. Not redemption, but redeemability, and it not under Sherman's difficulties, but with facilities. Our population does not consist of gold children, that want to hear it chink; but of business folks, who want a lawful money standard. Besides, Sherman misunderstood the people. He gathered gold and is now astonished that nobody wants it by the roundabout way that he provides. He was educated in political economy in bank parlors, and never had the courage to tell the many he served to their faces: "You must resume with the treasury or else resumption is an illusion and the specie standard an idle dream."

For the same reason has he walked and still walks devious ways, and turned the whole thing into a bond operation instead of a lasting regulation of the money standard. That it required a constitutional solution he overlooked, at least concealed it. Such an old bankman as he has a butt against all straight roads. He does not feel secure, unless he can cover himself behind some great special interest, and that makes him an intense partisan. He knows such bodies are grateful! The press controls or serves them, as the case may be! There the praises are coined which are the measure of value in parties.

Sherman has always saved the banks; indeed he has subsidized them. The whole burden of so-called resumption, magnified as it has been by him, has been thrown upon the country's trade. He was astounded when the ground-swell came over everything, and he would exclaim, with Schiller's "Diver:"

It was for my safety, for it raised me aloft.

Sherman still mistrusts things; he throws out suspicions against others to draw off the people's eyes. His miscarried candidacy for the Governorship of Ohio showed his mistrust, and Foster has to fight the battle for which Sherman was too cowardly.

And, now, in conclusion, you must allow me to say a few words why, in my opinion, if I have satisfied you that the Republican party does not deserve your support, it is right that you should co-operate with the Democratic party. You know I would rather plead for an entirely party-free country than for a party rule of any kind; but the necessity of overthrowing the combination that now rides the Republican party and the country, and has ridden both saddle-sore, is so great that we must act with all who agree on this point. I do not regard the Democratic party as a close corporation. It is now, as I think, the proper rallying organ against those now in power. And, being an opposition party, it is not bound to close its ranks nor its programmes. The party in power must have, as well as stand by, definite measures, and have an expressed policy. It is always exclusive, and often proscriptive. The opposition, on the other hand, while gathering and developing into an organism, have an open mind for all suggestions, and it must try them liberally, so that it may eventually settle upon correct final conclusions. To co-operate in such a development binds all who join in it to nothing more than this.

There is, however, an insuperable reason why the elaboration of definite measures must be deferred until after the victory is won. If proposed before, it would be intrusting their execution to those that are opposed to them, who would either strangle them, or delay them, or carry them out defectively. The opposition in England never introduced measures. Jackson well said that if he thought his right arm knew his intentions he would cut it off and cast it into the fire. The Republicans were an open party until up to 1860. There is a test, however, that ought to be applied to opposition parties. And I think no one can read the Democratic platform of Ohio without being satisfied that it is vastly superior to any which we have had for years. The tendency is clearly the one from local prejudices to national intelligence, virtue and wisdom. All nationalism that does not mean this tendency is not only nonsense, but wickedness, even if every letter in the word were written in capitals.

Our gubernatorial candidate, Gen. Ewing, has correctly stated the situation. The Ohio election this fall is (whether we like it or not) a reconnoissance in force with a view to next year's Presidential contest. The Eastern Democrats have taken a liberal view of our action here. They wish us to win, and concede to us, as we to them, that each State must this year fight in its own way the common enemy. And why common? Because the whole Union needs the removal from power of a party and an administration that is ever raising questions and never settling any. Take civil service reforms, our foreign relations, our Indian policy, our military organization, our judiciary, the public lands, the relations of the States to the Union, and last, not least, our money and finance. Where is there a definite solution? Where is there even an open avowal? Clear and divided in nothing, it deals only in false accusations against its opponents and hypocritical pretenses as to its own virtue.

I think I have shown this in my argument on the special subject of money and finance. It is the only point on which there are any exceptions taken to the ground that the Democratic party should be preferred to the Republican party. And I have heard of no reason for this except the one that the Republicans have at least done faithful work as to resumption. That this is untrue I have tried to prove to you. To me, who have for nearly half a century, both in public and private kept aloof, on the one hand, from foolish bullionism, and on the other from wild paper money, it is now clearer than ever that what I stated, as the representative of Hamilton county in 1851, in the Constitutional Convention of Ohio, in a discussion with Senator Hawkins (see volume II., pages 406-412, Constitutional Debates), is still the correct principle, to-wit: that all power on the subject of money being intrusted to the General Government, it is its right and duty to secure to the country a stable specie standard of value, and that no money should be issued not based upon it.

That the Republican party does not stand by that principle is, I think, no longer to be denied. Their advocacy of bank notes that are not redeemable at the will of the holder puts this their treachery to true money beyond question. The Democratic party is at least for a currency that is now redeemable in specie de facto and de jure. What the national attitude of this our party may be next year I do not know. I have given my reasons why I now co-operate with the party which I joined forty-seven years ago. These reasons satisfy me. I hope they will satisfy you, and that soon this land and this people may be freed from their worst incubus—the Republican party—which does not by any means embody the best republicanism in America. I am convinced that a large portion of this party, tired of Shermanism, wishes this liberation. In 1876 and 1877 the country was cheated out of its reforms; let us see to it that the fraud be not repeated in 1880 and 1881. It is, I assure you, necessary to the highest interests of the American people.

John Adams at Court.

The presentation of John Adams and his wife to George III. and his Queen was not without a humorous side, which a writer in Forney's Progress thus sketches:

On both occasions of Mr. Adams's meeting with the King and Queen he was armed with a lengthy and preconceived address for which the royal couple were unprepared.

The King readily collected his scattered senses and made rather an able reply, but his equally eloquent burst of oratory to Queen Charlotte quite overpowered the little woman—for, though a Queen, still only a woman and not nearly so finished in manners nor possessing the aplomb of the republican ambassador's wife—and her only answer to his lofty rhetorical explosion was: "I thank you, sir, for your civilities to me and my family, and am glad to see you in this country."

Then the Queen relapsed into a friendly conversation with the American official in which all the royal family could take part.

When Mr. Adams and his daughter attended their first "drawing-room," at St. James' Palace, she was quite as nonplussed by the initial address of the King as his royal consort had been some time previous by the exalted speech of Mr. Adams.

"Have you taken a walk this morning?" he said. Now the entire forenoon had been occupied in donning the court costumes, upon the construction of which so many days had been spent, and the lady was inclined to tell the truth, but upon reflection merely answered in the negative; upon this the obtuse sovereign drove her to the wall by asking if she "did not enjoy walking?" and now the poor, persecuted female was obliged to offer the base fabrication "that she was rather indolent in that respect."

The Queen was always embarrassed in the presence of Mrs. Adams, while the latter remained undazzled by the foreign court. She was a plain-spoken, democratic American, with considerable cultivation and uncommon good sense, and therefore never a favorite at the shrine of arrogant, pedantic, vulgar title worship.

An Old Lady's Tramp.

Yesterday an intelligent, bright-eyed English woman, who said she was 74 years old, visited police headquarters. She said she had been residing at a point 138 miles from Bangor, Me., near the New Brunswick border. Some time ago she decided to come southward to see her children, who reside at Chester. They sent her $108, but when she received it she resolved to pay off indebtedness incurred while she was ill, and so applied every cent of it. Then she made up her mind not to make any further drafts upon her children's purses, but to traverse the entire distance on foot. A little over three weeks ago she set out upon her journey. This she accomplished without molestation on the way and with constant tokens of kindness from dwellers by the roadside. Those who heard the plucky old lady's recital of endurance in the pedestrian line were so pleased that they took up quite a substantial collection and secured her transportation to Chester to rejoin her progeny.—Philadelphia Times.

Railroad Velocipede.

A novelty in the matter of railroad inventions is now at the depot of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad, in Petersburg, Va. It is what may be very properly termed a railroad velocipede. Its weight is about 100 pounds, and it is destined solely for the use of the supervisor of the road, to enable him to travel from point to point for inspection or other purposes. The vehicle has three wheels, two of which run on one rail of the track and one on the other. It has a seat for one man, though it might well carry two. It is very easily operated, and is run on almost the exact principle of the ordinary velocipede. With a strong, muscular man to move it, it will make a speed of fifteen or eighteen miles an hour.

A Highly-Colored Picture.

A young lady graduate in a neighboring college read an essay entitled "Employment of Time." Her composition was based on the text, "Time wasted is existence; used, is life." The next day she purchased eight ounces of zephyr of different shades and commenced working a sky-blue dog with sea-green ears and a pink tail on a piece of yellow canvas. She expects to have it done by next Christmas.—Norristown Herald.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, AUG. 21, 1879.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY, EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

The COURIER contains one or more good short stories every week.

Every daily newspaper in the land is now publishing a continued story. It is entitled the "Sprague-Conkling scandal."

Hereafter ten per cent. of the salaries of the employes of the government is to be paid in standard silver dollars.

The contract for furnishing headstones for soldiers' graves has been awarded to Samuel G. Bridges, at an average of $2.28 each.

The value of the property left by Mrs. Dorsey, to Jeff Davis, turns out to be only $30,000, instead of $250,000. It is now thought that the will will not be contested.

Mrs. Nellie Sartoris, daughter of Gen. Grant, is not dead as reported by the dailies last week. The mistake arose from the death of Mrs. E. T. Sartoris, formerly Adelaide Kemble.

The celebrated trotting horse, General Lee, with a record of 2:20, stolen some time since, at Beaver, Penn., was found last week, in a stall at the Mendota, Illinois, trotting park.

W. P. Hunt, a Boston capitalist, and Geo. W. Childs, of the Philadelphia Ledger, have each put up $50,000 to start a republican paper in Washington, to advocate Grant's nomination for a third term.

The Terre Haute Express, the leading greenback newspaper of this state, was sold to W. R. McKeen, for the sum of $18,000, last week. It will hereafter be published in the interest of the republican party.

President Hayes has agreed to be present at the Cincinnati exposition and the Indiana state fair. As an advertising medium, Hayes will be a failure. The people are not at all curious to see a man for whom they have so little regard.

The night hands in the Gazette office were favored with an increase in the price paid for composition, last week, but the day men "kicked" and were about to lay off on a strike, when the employers and employes came to a reconciliation.

Congressman De La Matyr is making greenback speeches in Maine. The Methodists of Bangor invited him to preach in the First Methodist church last Sunday; Senator Blaine heard of it and had the invitation revoked, which was the cause of much indignation. Blaine and religion never did agree.

It was urged by Grant's friends, when the death of his daughter Nellie was erroneously reported, that her death would give him the sympathy of the public in his great affliction, and that he would be urged once more into public life in order to furnish occupation for his mind. Anything to elect Grant.

Report says that the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw railroad is to be extended from Jackson to Pontiac, Mich., there to be connected with the Grand Trunk. The trains of the latter road will then reach Chicago via. Auburn Junction and the B. & O. railroad. This will give Auburn another shipping route to the east.

General Thomas Ewing and General Garfield will be the orators at the soldiers' reunion at Steubenville, Ohio, on the 28th inst. The president and cabinet, and the governors of three or four states, are expected. Twenty-five military bands are to furnish the music, and seventy-five Ohio, ten Pennsylvania and ten West Virginia regiments are to be represented.

In looking over our Indiana exchanges of last week, we noticed but one mention of "the absent editor," yet there seems to have been two hundred and more "Indiana editors" bumming around through the west on free passes at the same time. Who are these favored chaps? Who originated the grand excursion, and where did it start from? It must have been a select crowd.

Certain European countries have lately conceived the idea of sending their paupers and criminals to this country. Castle Garden officials are now on the lookout for several notorious criminals expected daily. Helpless cripples have been coming to beg. The authorities have taken precautions to thwart the efforts to foist these criminals and paupers upon the country.

Last week's COURIER contained a very able speech by Gen. Tom Ewing, democratic candidate for governor of Ohio. This week we give Hon. Charles Reemelin's views on the political situation. This speech has created great consternation in republican quarters, and is worthy of a careful perusal. See 3d page.

Town authorities throughout the state will be interested in the result of a damage suit, brought by Mr. Walter Tucker of Rushville, against that city, for allowing an old steam threshing-machine to stand on one of the public streets, which caused a horse attached to a buggy, and driven by Mrs. Tucker, to take fright and run away, demolishing the buggy and injuring the lady so much that she has been an invalid since [illegible] day. Tucker asks damages in the sum of $3,000, for injuries sustained by his wife.

The Terrell (Texas) Star gives the following prayer of a "bullet-headed" greenbacker of that city.

"Our Father, who art in Chicago, Pomeroy be thy name! thy final fiat come in Kaufman county: thy will be done in Texas as the radicals demand. Give us this day our fiat money, and grant us our fifteen dollars in honest democratic money for organizing greenback clubs, oh Lord; deliver us from democrats who scoff at us, and d—n the Star a great deal, we pray thee, world without end! Amen."

Here are the names of some of the greatest men this country has ever produced, and they all lived to a ripe old age: Washington died in his sixty-eighth year; John Adams in his ninety-first; Thomas Jefferson in his eighty-third; James Madison in his eighty-fifth; John Quincy Adams in his eighty-first; Chief Justice Marshal in his eighty-first; Andrew Jackson in his seventy-ninth; John C. Calhoun in his sixty-ninth; Daniel Webster in his seventy first, and Henry Clay in his seventy-fifth. The combined ages of these ten memorable men were about seven hundred and seventy-seven years. When will the country ever look upon their like again?

Yellow Jack continues to hold high carnival in the south, with Memphis as the base of operations, which city is responsible for the peril to which the country is subjected. An exchange aptly says:

"When Memphis gets through with her struggle with the pestilence, perhaps her leading citizens will recognize the justice as well as the necessity of rigid sanitary measures. Her experience last year taught her nothing in this matter. Her citizens returned from exile and accepted things just as the plague left them. It was a suicidal submission to events and deserving of the results. Now the country demands that as a plague-breeder she be estopped from further imperiling the health of a whole nation."

Country editors must be dangerous critters. Last week's exchanges were full of accounts of shooting-bees and narrow escapes. In Los-Angeles, Cal., J. D. Lynch and Wm. A. Spaulding, editors, respectively, of the Herald and Express, engaged in a shooting affray on the street. Several bystanders were wounded, but both the belligerents escaped unhurt. The trouble arose from an article in the Herald reflecting on Spaulding.

In Virginia, Benjamin Hardin, editor of the Botetoute News, and M. W. Camper, editor of the Fincastle Herald, became blood-thirsty, and a duel was expected at any hour. Then our own fair Indiana, to be up with the times, as Indiana always is, asks that a share of public attention be bestowed upon two of her editors of the Wabash, viz.: Lee Linn, of the Courier, and T. P. Keator, of the Plain Dealer, both of the town of Wabash. Latest advices from the point last named, indicate a cessation of hostilities, after an ineffectual attempt to bespatter mother earth with gore.

We are not sure that it is good policy to vacate public streets in a prosperous and growing town like Auburn. The time will come when every vacated street will have to be re-opened for the convenience of the public and good appearance of the town. Some years ago a portion of Cedar street was vacated; the citizens interested now demand that it be re-opened, and so it will be with all others. When a street is vacated or narrowed, the part so vacated attaches to the property adjoining. Now suppose that valuable buildings are erected, or other improvements made on the property so vacated, and at some time in the future public convenience should demand that the street be opened to the original width, we ask whether the town would not be required to pay such damages as might be assessed to cover the improvements so made? If so, we submit that the best interests of the town demand the careful consideration of the officers and citizens. The future should always be kept in view; matters which seem to be of little importance now, may at some time be regarded in a quite different light.

—The horse belonging to the Ft. W., J. & S. railroad company, and engineered by the good-looking ticket-agent, Frank Copper, got out of his stable last Saturday, by some unknown means—though probably by crawling through a crack—and he was promptly landed in the pound. Frank went to Marshal Scott and demanded him to release the steed, to which demand the marshal merely remarked, "One dollar." This being about ten dimes more than Frank cared to donate to the city, he consulted a group of lawyers in regard to it, and they unanimously decided that, under the circumstances, the horse could not be kept in jail; therefore, armed with this information, Frank went forthwith and appropriated him (that is, the horse—not the marshal). All of which goes to show that animals running at large are liable to be impounded; but if they gain their freedom by themselves, and without the assistance of their owners, it's no go.

Proceedings of the Town Board.

At a regular meeting of the trustees, Aug. 15, 1879, business was transacted as follows:

BILLS ALLOWED.

Wm. Britton, draying	$ 8.50
T. P. Scott, marshal	37.50
S. Poffenberger, labor	10.00
Peter Bayou, labor	9.40
Shearer & Wilson, labor	1.50
Courier Co., printing	24.10

Comes now S. Hollister et al. and petition the board for a street crossing at the northwest corner of the court-yard, which petition was considered and the crossing ordered put down.

Comes now D. D. Moody et al. and ask that Green street, between Main and Cedar streets, be narrowed to the width of twenty (20) feet, whereupon the board appoints Messrs. S. B. Ward, Isaac Cool and H. W. Ford as commissioners to assess the benefits or damages that may accrue from the narrowing of said street.

A. J. Ralston unanimously elected school trustee, vice McIntyre, resigned.

The board orders a rebate of $3.02 on the taxes of D. D. Moody, on account, of an error in the assessment.

Board adjourned.

H. M. S. PINAFORE.

The New York Pinafore Company will present the sparkling comic opera of "Her Majesty's Ship Pinafore," at Ensley's hall, next Monday evening, August 25th. This company is composed of the best musical talent, and has sung in Chicago, St. Louis and other cities in the west. Miss Rhea, of Chicago, as Josephine; Miss Hooker, of Cincinnati, as Buttercup; Miss Devere, of St. Louis, as Hebe; Mr. Wethrell, of Boston, as Deadeye; Mr. Lee, of New York, as Rakestraw; Mr. Jones, of the Owens Comedy Company, as the Admiral; Mr. Todd, as the Captain, are first-class, and a strong chorus make a fine presentation of the play.

The New York Opera Company has just closed a two weeks' engagement at the Olympic, in Pinafore, and has left a good impression.—St. Louis Times.

Mr. Wetherell, now with the New York Pinafore Troupe, made a decided hit here as Deadeye.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The best presentation of Pinafore we have seen.—Danville (Ill.,) Commercial.

The finest musical entertainment ever given here.—Decatur Journal.

Admission 50 cents; no extra charge for reserved seats, at Willis' book store, Auburn, Indiana.

A Sad Case.

Information was received by the town authorities, last week, that William Meeks, who now resides at Newville, but who formerly lived here and is well known to most of our citizens, had become insane, and that he was making frantic demonstrations towards his wife and child, whom he had threatened to kill. Deputy Sheriff Somers and Tom Bell were immediately detailed to arrest him, and, though they managed to find him at his father-in-law's house, eating his breakfast, he succeeded in eluding them and making his escape. It may be said in justice to the parties who were in pursuit of him that he was armed at this time with a knife and revolver, thus rendering a hasty approach rather hazardous, as he was in a desperate state of mind. He was taken into custody, however, at Bryan, Ohio, the fore part of this week, having walked and ran the entire distance. The arrest was made by Sheriff Kober, of Bryan, and Meeks is now in jail at this place, in a comparatively rational condition. His case is a particularly shocking one, rendered so by the fact that he is spoken of in the best terms by those who have known him best, and he has always borne a good character as an upright, honest, kind-hearted man. It has been stated by parties who ought to be familiar with the facts, that his temporary aberrations of mind are superinduced by his belief that his wife has been unfaithful to him, though the same parties assert in the strongest terms that there isn't a shadow of foundation for such belief on his part, as she is known to be an estimable lady. His reason seems to desert him only when he broods over this imaginary unpleasant state of his domestic relations, and he is therefore a monomaniac; hence, it is quite likely that he will soon be sent to the asylum, to which he does not offer the slightest objection, but thinks, on the contrary, that it would be for the best. It is a sad case, indeed.

Those Girls.

We went, we saw, and we—"got left;" that is to say, we went down to Fort Wayne last Tuesday and saw the female ball-tossers, and since then have been trying to find some athlete to kick us. The game, as far as base ball is concerned, was a grand farce—an unlimited burlesque on the national game; but as far as the girls were concerned, it was a success; they were girls, sure enough, and that's all we want to say about it. It is estimated that there were about 1,200 people present, and the gate receipts were $400, twenty per cent. of which goes to the agricultural association for use of the grounds. Jay Phillips, the "masher," of the "Home" billiard room, umpired the game in his usual and effective style. No bouquets.

Spencerville.

—A break occurred in Murray Bros'. dam across the St. Joe, at this place last Thursday morning, incurring a probable cost of $500.

—Mrs. Wolverton, wife of Rev. I. M. Woolverton, died at Leo parsonage Monday, Aug. 11th. The body was taken to a point near Richmond, Ind., for interment.

—Barney Bros. are making quite an addition to their hardware store. Sol., who has charge of that department, is determined to keep a variety second to none in the county. ITEM.

—"Scribbler" is visiting friends in Jay county.

—J. M. Cahill will occupy his new building this week.

—John and Willie Baltz have gone to Michigan to seek their fortunes.

—Prof. Zimmerman is teaching a class in vocal music.

SOLDIERS' RE-UNION

At Auburn, Ind., September 19th and 20th, 1879.

To the Soldiers of Northern Indiana, greeting:

There will be a grand re-union of soldiers of Northern Indiana at Auburn on the 19th and 20th of September, it being the 14th anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. Soldiers, without any regard to rank, regimental organization or state lines, are cordially invited to be present both days. Come singly, in squads, in organized companies, and let us renew the devoted spirit of patriotism that, in the dark days of our country, triumphed over treason, despite hardships, privations and danger. Re-united let us cherish the social ties that had their origin in camp, on the field of battle and in prison pens. Excursion trains (at reduced rates) will be run during each day on all roads leading to the city. The programme will consist of parades with infantry, cavalry and artillery; speaking by prominent Union generals, skirmishes, sham battles, fire-works, music, artillery practice, dress parades, &c., &c.

By order of Committee of Arrangements.

A Good Scheme.

We stepped into the sheriff's office at Fort Wayne, not long since, for the ostensible purpose of transacting some business, but the real object was to borrow a match wherewith to fire up a nickel cigar; when our want was made known, however, Mr. Will. Cooper, one of the gentlemanly deputy sheriffs, fastened himself to our left auricular appendage and led us to the office door, whereon was pasted the following

OFFICE RULES:

No wood wanted.

Match-peddlers never leave this office alive.

We have two barns full of suspenders and don't want any more.

Coffins provided for lead-pencil and perfumery fiends.

Bootblacks, beware!

No coal, as we heat this office by our own breath.

BEGGARS BOUNCED BODILY. (That caught us).

Nixey soap.

We deal in clocks, safes, soap, jewelry and books ourselves.

Office hours for tramps, book-agents, canvassers, etc., from 11 p. m. to 4 a. m., July 4th.

Our bouncer goes by steam.

As we hurriedly perused that last clause, our knees began to fail us—we weakened; and, getting under our hat, we slid out of the nearest opening and were once more under the blue canopy of heaven.

High Authority.

The late eminent chemist, Prof. Jas. V. Z. Blaney, says, in his letter of December 4 1874: "Since I became satisfied, by my analysis, with the purity of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, of its freedom from adulteration, the care taken in its preparation, I have had it used in my own house."

TUTT'S PILLS

INDORSED BY PHYSICIANS, CLERGYMEN, AND THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL TRIUMPH OF THE AGE.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE SICK HEADACHE.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE DYSPEPSIA.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE CONSTIPATION.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE PILES.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE FEVER AND AGUE.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE BILIOUS COLIC.

TUTT'S PILLS Cure KIDNEY Complaint.

TUTT'S PILLS CURE TORPID LIVER.

TUTT'S PILLS IMPART APPETITE.

DR. TUTT has succeeded in combining in these pills the heretofore antagonistic qualities of a STRENGTHENING PURGATIVE, and a PURIFYING TONIC.

Their first apparent effect is to increase the appetite by causing the food to properly assimilate. Thus the system is nourished, and by their tonic action on the digestive organs, regular and healthy evacuations are produced.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE ON FLESH while under the influence of these Pills, indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, melancholy, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health and strength to the system. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. Office 35 Murray Street, NEW YORK.

Commissioners' Sale of Land.

Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the DeKalb circuit court, in the case of Mariah Dixon and others, against Sebastian Tustison, I, as the Commissioner in said cause, will on the premises herein described, on

Saturday, July 26th, 1879,

at about one o'clock p. m., offer for sale the following real estate to-wit:

The east fraction of the south west quarter in section fourteen, (14), in township thirty three, (33), north of range fourteen, (14), east, (except the right of way of the Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Chicago railroad company,) also the south fraction of the north west quarter of the same section, containing one hundred and thirty and 75-100 acres more or less. For any sum not less than two-thirds of the appraised value, on the following terms, to wit: One third of the purchase in hand, and the balance in three equal annual payments, with six per cent. interest, waiving valuation laws.

J. D. LEIGHTY, Com'r.

The above sale is postponed until Saturday, the 23rd day of August, 1879, at the same hour and place.

J. D. LEIGHTY, Com'r.

Local and Miscellaneous

—See Pinafore.

—Let's stab a watermelon.

—"Tempus fugit"—Fly time.

—Go to the opera next Monday evening.

—Prepare to attend the soldiers' reunion.

—Come opera at Ensley's hall next Monday evening.

—Rev. H. J. Norris is visiting in eastern Ohio this week.

—Little Buttercup will please you next Monday evening.

—Sell your wheat to Cuppy & Ralston at the Eel-river elevator.

—Miss Mate Matheny is visiting with friends at Hudson, this week.

—D. D. Snyder went to Fort Wayne yesterday. This is no "snide."

—Mrs. H. E. Little and sons visited Corunna several days last week.

—Mrs. James Anderson returned last week from a visit to Colon, Mich.

—Family groceries, fresh, pure and cheap, at Schaab Beugnot & Co's.

—Examine the new styles in ladies' dress goods at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's.

An interesting account of the Sprague-Conkling scandal, on the second page.

—Secure reserve seats for Pinafore, without extra charge, at Willis' book store.

—Yesterday was the pleasantest day of the season. So is to-day—and to-morrow.

—Do not sell your wheat until you get Cuppy & Ralston's bid, at the Eel-river elevator.

—Don't forget that Abright's jewelry and watch-making establishment is just north of the postoffice.

—I. N. Cool will have another car-load of buggies to-day or to-morrow. They go like hot cakes.

—Jno. Canon, who has been at Columbus, Ohio, for several months past, returned home last week.

—Secure your seats for the opera. Tickets for sale at Willis'. No extra charge for reserved seats.

—The Auburn wheat market this year is better than ever before, and as good as any in the county.

—Many ladies misinterpret their sufferings. Try a box of "Sellers' liver pills." Sold by all druggists.

—The largest and best assortment of clothing in DeKalb county is now on sale at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's.

—New steel rails are being laid on the Saginaw road from the curve near the stave factory to the junction.

—S. U. Tarney's meat market is always supplied with choice cuts of beef, pork or mutton. Try his fresh sausage.

—Guy Plumb and lady visited Fort Wayne last Tuesday. Wonder if Guy didn't go to see the female base-ballists?

—The first and perhaps the last opportunity to witness Pinafore in Auburn. Next Monday evening at Ensley's hall.

—Dr. Sears assisted the development of his muscles yesterday by taking a turn at the lawn-mower in the court-yard.

—Buy your canton flannels of Schaab, Beugnot & Co., as they have a large stock of them at prices below all competition.

—Rev. Dr. McCune, of Philadelphia, will fill the pulpit at the M. E. church, in the absence of Rev. Mr. Norris, next Sabbath.

—Cuppy & Ralston are still in the market paying the very highest prices for grain of all kinds. See them before you sell.

—After the first day of the Waterloo fair, there will be two races each day. The liberal premiums will bring in some good horses.

—All those wishing to buy stocking yarns manufactured here in Auburn, can get them at factory prices at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's.

—Duplex corsets for $1.00, other corsets at from 30c. to $1.00. Back combs from 10c. to 25c. at McQuiston & Ralston's. 30-6w.

—W. L. Penfield and P. J. Lockwood returned Thursday evening last from Indianapolis, whither they had been on legal business.

—Supervisors will please bear in mind the premium offered by the N-E Ind., Agricultural Association for the best worked roads.

—Get prices at the Eel-river elevator, at Auburn, before you sell your grain. Cuppy & Ralston pay every cent the market will afford.

—To think kindly of each other is good; to speak kindly to each other is better; but to act kindly one towards another is best of all.

—No preaching at the M. E. church next Sabbath. Rev. Norris is absent, and the announcement made last Sabbath has been recalled.

—Billy Shaffer—you William!—come up in front and give an account of yourself. Which road leads to Waterloo, and how long is it?

—Mr. Stamets has sold out his entire stock of notions and dry-goods, and will hereafter pay attention to millinery trade particularly, in connection with which he to-day opens up a stock of clothing.

—A female writer asks: "What will my son be?" Ten to one, if he lives long enough, he'll be a man, we reckon. Try us on something else.

—The country girls say that Prof. Clark is an expert in phrenology, but we would prefer his opinion concerning bumps on a clothes-rack.

—Miss Jennie McClellan, one of Waterloo's fairest and most accomplished young ladies, attended the hop at Ensley's hall last Thursday evening.

—Messrs. Joe W. Davis and Chas. W. Davis, of Wabash, who are visiting friends and relatives in this place, gave the Courier office a call on Tuesday.

—Our townsman, H. H. Stamets, of the flourishing Main street millinery establishment, visited the city of Brimfield last Tuesday, returning next day.

—Remember!—The only perfect proprietary medicine as a "blood searcher" is that bearing the name of "Dr. Landsey," and which may be had from druggists.

—Judge Woodhull, of Angola, has been confined to his bed for some weeks past by illness, the first for many years, and we are glad to learn that he is now convalescing.

—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, October 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, are the days to attend the eighth annual fair at Waterloo. $5,000,00 in premiums.

—Harry Rush has again removed with his family to Auburn. Harry is an excellent young man and a good carriage-trimmer, and we wish him good luck.—Steuben Republican.

—Go and see the splendid stock of fall and winter clothing just received at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's., which they are selling 15 per cent cheaper than any other store in northern Indiana.

—Any man, woman, girl or boy, of the most fastidious tastes, can find what they want in the way of fine clocks, watches, chains, rings and jewelry of all descriptions, at J. Abright's.

—C. C. Shaffer, John Treesh and A. J. Ralston have each been appointed school trustee, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. McIntyre, and each has refused to qualify.

—An endless variety of cook and heating stoves, for sale at low figures, now ready for the fall trade at Davis' hardware store. It will pay you to examine his large stock before buying.

—Light and heavy sheetings, the largest stock ever brought to Auburn, now being sold by Schaab, Beugnot & Co. cheaper than the same goods can be bought at any other house in the county.

—Old man O. Y. Ster, accompanied by his wife, O. Y. Ster, jr., and family, arrived in town last week, and are stopping at Sherm. Hollister's. He will introduce you to the whole family for 25 cents.

—Clyde Moore started Tuesday morning for Valparaiso, where he will resume operations at the far-famed normal school. He was accompanied by Johnnie McIntyre, who takes his initiatory trip.

—The Titania improved base-heater is guaranteed to be one of the best and most economical self-feeding coal stoves in the market. Our citizens using this stove recommend it highly. Sold by John L. Davis.

—We will consider ourselves indebted to a few parties who have perused their Courier of last week (Aug. 14) if they will take the trouble to hand them in to us. We ran entirely out and need a few copies.

—Rev. T. J. Killen, of Morris, Ills., will preach in the Presbyterian church next Sabbath morning and evening. Rev. Killen was formerly professor at Miron University, and is said to be a very able speaker.

—Mr. Chas. Klotz is now the authorized agent for the improved light-running Domestic sewing machine, the best in the world. He also sells the New Home, another first-class machine. Examine his machines before you buy.

—The Argand base burner, the original base-heating, self-feeding coal stove with all the modern improvements for 1879, can now be examined at the hardware store of John L. Davis. This stove is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

—The celebrated base-heating coal stove, Crowning Glory, constructed on principles entirely new, is warranted to save one-third in the use of fuel. Do not buy until you call at Davis' hardware store and examine this new stove.

—The Kendallville Standard speaks of the Sprague-Conkling "scandall." We have scan'd all the authorities at hand and find that they are a unit in disagreeing with the above orthography; most of them forget to put on that final "l."

—Misses Minnie and Anna Prichard will leave Saturday for a few days' visit at Hillsdale, Mich., after which they will return and stop for a short time at Mr. Clark's, where they are now visiting, before going to their home in Janesville, Wisconsin.

—John Leasure, the lightning manipulator of ten-penny nails, horse-shoes and other refreshments, pointed out to us, a day or two ago, a man riding along in his buggy who was "too stingy to sit back in the seat!"—wear and tear on the cushions, you know. It was funny. Laugh.

—Use Card's fever and ague cure and liver invigorator. For sale by F. E. Davenport and Casebeer & Matheny. 34-3m.

—Have you seen those watches at Abright's? He has on hand this week a new line of American silver watches that excel all others, both in manufacture and price.

—Having secured a place in the Harmon house barber-shop, at Fort Wayne, George Grund bade farewell to his friends in this place yesterday morning and left for the Summit city.

—When time hangs heavily on his hands, Jack Ralston amuses himself and drives dull care away by shooting rats at the elevator, several hundred of which he perforated last Monday.

—If the weather had been made to order, it could not be better adapted to the promotion of ague. Cold nights and hot days are bound to tell their tale, and we would advise those who are compelled to be exposed to the night air to regulate their clothing accordingly.

—Robert Ogden, plumber and gas fitter at 125 Calhoun street, Ft. Wayne, is prepared to do everything in his line in the best style and at reasonable terms. His goods and fixtures are new and fresh, and he employs none but the best workmen.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Austin entertained a large number of their friends at their pleasant home last Monday evening. The party was a large one, and all enjoyed the occasion. Lack of space prevents us from giving the names of those present.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co. have the largest and best selected stock of clothing, hats, caps and gents' furnishing goods ever brought to DeKalb county, and at prices lower than ever before heard of. Call and see them and get their prices before buying.

—Miss Annis Russell gave a highly enjoyable party last evening to her many friends here, and hilarity was the order of the evening. Every one present was apparently in the best of spirits, and there was no hesitancy about giving vent to their mirthfulness.

—The corner stone of the new Lutheran church at St. Joe will be laid, with appropriate ceremonies August 25th, at 2 o'clock p. m. An address will be delivered by Rev. L. Rice of Auburn. Neighboring ministers of other denominations are cordially invited to be present.
S. Kelso, Pastor.

—We were surprised to meet Dr. LaFollette of South Whitley, at Corunna, last week; and more surprised to learn that his business to Corunna at that particular time, was to take unto himself for better or for worse, one of the fair women of that place. The Doctor is one of South Whitley's best citizens.

—Parties who wish to make subscription remittances in postage-stamps will please send three-centers; otherwise, we cannot accept them, as we have no use in our business for larger ones. Twenty-four-cent stamps are not negotiable, either in exchange for others at the postoffice, or for money.

—Having engaged in a partnership in business, for the future, we desire speedily to close up all past accounts. Those knowing themselves indebted to either of us on open account will please call and settle the same, either by cash or note. And oblige, T. G. Matheny,
32-tf J. B. Casebeer.

—A young man at the Saginaw depot yesterday, who is noted for his dexterity in that enticing but rather uncertain game called "three-card monte," endeavored to coax an Auburn girl on the train with him, but in vain; she failed to view the matter from his standpoint, and so remained on the platform while the train whirled him out of sight.

—To our correspondents throughout the county we would respectfully suggest that they write proper names plainly and carefully. While we are pretty well drilled in deciphering any hieroglyphics in the ordinary reading matter, we occasionally collide with individual names that are "stickers," and we get "stuck."

—The soldiers' re-union to be held in Auburn on the 19th and 20th of September next, will be one of the most sociable, hospitable and brilliant demonstrations ever held in Indiana. With the interest manifested at home and abroad, the re-union must be a success. "Fall in," and join the happy throng, where hundreds of old "chums" will join in the army chorus.

—The following county-men have been selected to serve as petit jurors for the September term of the DeKalb circuit court: Perry Fitch, George Barney, Jacob Frager, John Boots, Daniel Swihart, Albert Buchanan, Joseph Wingard, James McClellan, George DeLong, Jacob Lower, Cyrus Bowman and Charles M. Ryan.

—We were shown some very fine lithograph engravings this week by J. C. Moore, who is here in the interest of the National Atlas of DeKalb county. The work will be published some time this fall, and Mr. Moore is here to make some arrangements for views, portraits, etc., with which to illustrate our atlas. This is an enterprise worthy of the attention and patronage of our representative business men, so we think.

To Physicians.

We desire to call the attention of medical men to Dr. Price's Floral Riches, as being the finest cologne water made. In the sick room it is refreshing to the invalid, and a disinfectant. Physicians know that all pleasant odors are healthful, while disagreeable smells invite disease. Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes richly deserve to be called the best.

—Why can't everybody in town have a party at once? They are at fever heat now, two or three occurring on one evening, and the boys can almost tell what direction to start in.

—Harry and Fred. Yesbera returned yesterday from a few days' visit to West Unity, Ohio, where they took part in a family re-union, it being the occasion of their father's fiftieth birthday.

—Go to Ensley's new store, east side of the public square, and see their immense invoice of notions, fancy goods, gents' ties, collars, cuffs, etc., just received from New York, and more coming, all of which are nice, and the prices are low.

—The application for admission to the insane asylum, in the case of Wm. Meeks, an extended mention of which will be found elsewhere in this issue, has been forwarded to Indianapolis, and as soon as heard from he will doubtless be conveyed thereto.

—A very pleasant company of young folks assembled Tuesday evening at the new home of Jerome Showalter, on Jackson street, where they were nicely entertained by Mrs. Showalter, recently Miss Clara Wheelock, and her liege lord and master(?). It was a surprise party, gotten up by Miss Nellie Wheelock, assisted by Miss Alice McKay, and the "surprise" was complete, the young couple to whom it was given knowing nothing of it whatever. A general good time was the result.

—A headless rooster is on exhibition now at Fort Wayne, and it is no fraud by any means, though most people will naturally be incredulous until they see it; we would ourselves, had we not seen a similar minus-headed chicken in Arkansas, about a year ago. It was fed by means of a tube inserted in its throat, and lived about four weeks after being decapitated; but just as its proprietor had got it accustomed to living without a head, the tube came out one night, its wind-pipe closed up for repairs, and it "up and died."

—From the last of July up to and including August 14th, the county clerk had issued the state's authority for the following persons to abide together under the same roof, mash furniture and throw skillets, or play turtle-doves—whichever amusement their mingled tastes incline them to pursue: Merritt A. Hanson and Anna Ober, Errett Strong and Mary L. Hayford, Thos. J. LaFollette and Martha Slayman, August Benner and Laura A. Rodgers, Paul Lash and Christina Dean, and Joseph Boyer and Rebecca Deeter.

—In speaking of Mrs. Emma Hooker, the "Buttercup" of Mays' Pinafore company, the Shelbyville (Ills.) Democrat says: "Why, it is worth more than the price of admission to see a dashing little daisy who sings

"I'm called little Buttercup,
Dear little Buttercup,
Though I could never tell why."

She is a big trump, a daisy, and, if she were an attache of the Democrat, we'd turn her into a ten-acre clover pasture to see her caper." Go and see her next Monday evening at Ensley's hall.

—Through the earnest solicitation of the leading citizens of Auburn, Mr. Mays has consented to present Pinafore for one night only. In doing so he does not expect to make any money, and will be satisfied if the receipts cover expenses. His company consists of eighteen first-class performers and is highly spoken of by the press everywhere. Our citizens now have an opportunity to witness a very popular comic opera, something unusual for a town of this size. Every lover of good music should attend. Tickets for sale at Willis' book store, after Friday.

—Ft. Wayne Gazette:—"J. E. Beugnot, John McIntyre and Clyde Moore, of Auburn, are in the city, en route for Chicago. Messrs. Moore and McIntyre will attend Bryant's business college this fall."

Who got that item, and where did he get it? Messrs. Moore and McIntyre were not "en route for Chicago," neither will they "attend Bryant's business college this fall." Both these young gentlemen were bound for Valparaiso, where they will join the multitude at the normal school.

—Through the kindness of Mr. J. C. Henry, we occupied a seat on his wholesale notion wagon to Corunna and return last Friday. We found the merchants of that enterprising village wide-awake and full of business, all enjoying a good trade, the result of one of the best grain markets in the county. Mr. Lafe Miller, the genial and accommodating agent of the Lake Shore railroad, was up to his eyes in wheat, and with a number of assistants was unable to store the wheat as fast as it arrived at the elevator, there being from 15 to 20 teams waiting to unload during most of the day. We hope to be able to visit the place soon again and extend our acquaintance with the business men and citizens.

—Mort. Dawson came down to his office and picked up an old directory, exclaiming, "Yes, this statute is authority on all questions of law. Darned if I hain't got the directory. You see I've got a stranger up to my house; she came last night, and I'm a little flurried to-day. But it's the sweetest, prettiest, rosiest little darling-girl that you ever saw. Will you smoke, sir?"—Ft. Wayne News, Aug. 14th.

Mort. is evidently endeavoring to fulfill that divine command, "Multiply and replenish the earth." By-the way, this being his old stamping ground, he has many friends here who wouldn't object to his passing that cigar box up this way.

MIGNON.

BY E. L. M. S.

Her face is like a flower,
Her skin like a peach in bloom,
Her teeth like snowy petals,
Buds that bloom and breathe in June;
Her face lights up the shadows,
Her lips are like a rose that is red,
Her breath, like the dew of morning,
From the roses deep is shed.

Her hair falls in golden glory,
Like a sunbeam o'er the snow;
Her voice falls soft on even's air,
So soft and still and sweetly low.
I saw her first in summer's time,
A snow-white wreath upon her hair,
Apple-blossoms, white and pink—
Fairy Mignon, [illegible]

The snow sank low on western hills;
The air was red in ruddy glare,
While she sat 'neath the apple-trees,
Her face so sweetly pale and fair.
Oh! Mignon, sweet Mignonette,
Give me grace to live o'er that hour
To see again that sweet flower fall—
To feel again thy mystic power.

Fair, fair, regally fair,
A crown of gold her sun-kissed hair.

* * * * * *

The apple-buds break once again
Their hearts, like tinted shells of sea,
And 'neath the trees, in the old-time tryst,
Sits Mignon, blithe and gay and free.
Sweet Mignon! the breeze caught it,
And I sighed to think it but the wind.
No, 'tis the whip-poor-will calling me—
"Kiss her, kiss her; do not mind."
Lips touched lips, like the roses red;
Hands are clasped in love's strong hold,
While her golden head was bending low,
And vows were whispered and shyly told.

MILWAUKEE, Wis.

HOW PHIL GAINED HIS POINT.

BY WILLIAM KENNEDY.

Phil Copely visited the Southern family.

Nothing strange in that, perhaps, except that Phil was the most irresponsible, clever, graceless, good-for-nothing Bohemian in the world, and the Southerns were the most aristocratic and wealthy people within 100 miles.

The dear old world, who never could, can, or will let other folks' business alone, shrugged her mighty shoulders, and whispered to her lady's maid, the moon, that it wasn't proper. The moon turned pale, winked, and said something must be done.

But Phil Copeley kept on visiting the Southern family. * * *

"Oh, Phil!"

Such a charming voice—such perfect lips—as pronounced those simple words one fine afternoon, while my scapegrace was taking a look at the conservatory with Alice Southern! What delicious little suggestions of bon-bons, of honey, of cream dates, of rahdatee-locoomb—or whatever else it is called—of nectar and ambrosia—in a word, as Keats so toothsomely has it:

> Jellies soother than the creamy curb
> And lucent sirops tinct with cinnamon

—there were in that voice.

Did you ever observe, Oh gentle and effulgent reader, how differently your name sounds when uttered by different persons? Why, I have heard my plain cognomen made more mellifluously musical than Weber's last waltz played by two French horns, which I consider the most mellifluously-musical performance I ever heard, save in the instance mentioned. But, you know, I am so susceptible!

To return to Phil Copely. When he heard Alice Southern say "Oh, Phil!" as above, he experienced various extraordinary emotions in the left thoracic region, and looked upon the young lady in a peculiar way, much as a dyspeptic patient might look upon a perigord pate aux truffles.

"Oh, Phil!"

"Well, I don't care! It is true. I am a worthless vagabond!"

"It is not true at all, and you have no right to say so."

"I've a good mind to go and drown myself!"

"Phil Copeley, if you don't stop talking so, I'll never speak to you again!"

She had about as much idea of executing her threat as he had of executing his.

"Well, just look at the case. Don't you see that I am a villain and a scoundrel to keep coming here every day or two, when I have no business to be here at all? Don't you know that I haven't a cent—except the miserable pittance my aunt left me—I wish she had taken it with her when she died! And your father would as soon see you marry a coal-heaver as me! Am I not a viper in the bosom of the family? Oughtn't I to be thoroughly ashamed of myself? Yes, and, by George, I am, too!"

"Oh, Phil!"

Imploringly this time, and with a certain hazy humidity in the clear—let me steal a charming epithet from one of Aldrich's poems—"bronze-brown" eyes, that was no detriment to their beauty, but which wounded Phil Copely like a two-edged sword.

"I will go away, somewhere," he said; "I will join the navy or the army. I will go to Hong Kong before the mast—turn missionary, or something. What shall I do?"

There was real, earnest suffering in this last question; for Alice's eyes were upon him, and he felt that while they could look thus he was not only incapable of going to Hong Kong, but any other distance of more than ten feet was equally insurmountable.

So he staid just where he was, and the effect, artistically considered, was much the better for his presence.

The two were sitting on a rustic seat curiously fashioned of fantastic and misshapen branches. Tropical cacti, looking like vegetable sausages, stood stiffly around, with their ragged blossoms of scarlet and yellow hanging from them as if they did not belong there at all. Orange trees perfumed the atmosphere with their creamy flowers, and cast a soft, greenish shadow through the conservatory, where camellias, red and white, bloomed all about, contrasted with water-lilies of rare kinds; passion flowers; roses of endless variety and beauty; fuchsias as large as the end of my finger; air plants, daintily trailing their delicate tracery down from pretty little wire baskets, hung high aloft; and, in short, all the curious and beautiful flowers and plants that gardeners and poets love.

Next to the body of the Academy of Music, on a grand opera night, I like the green-house.

There sat the lovers, looking very sad, very affectionate, and very handsome—as many other couples have sat before—and considering themselves the most unfortunate young folks in the world—also as many other couples have done, and, more betoken, will do, to the end of time.

"O Phil!"

His hand had found hers, in some mysterious way (does anybody ever know how hands get together under such circumstances?), and their fingers were loosely interlaced. Leaning against the back of the quaint seat, their heads somehow rested very close to each other, so Phil's lips touched one of Alice's ringlets—a great, showery splendor of gold and mahogany color; not red, mind you, not reddish, but just the least bit of a suggestion of reddish brown, in certain half lights, all threaded and shining with pale gold, so as to be perfectly I don't know what.

Phil's breath stirred this ringlet, changing the play of its light and shadow. Phil's hand clasped the delicate digits more closely. Phil's arm unconsciously passed about the slender waist—another inscrutable mystery—and Alice's head dropped gently down, until it rested upon Phil's shoulder.

Then, upon this scene, so full of grace and graciousness—of color—of flower perfume—of quiet beauty—stole a wondrous strain of melody. Did you ever hear a skillful violinist play De Beriot's "Sixth Air?" That was the sound that completed this little episode picture.

* * * * * * *

Southern, Alice's father, was rather an odd specimen of that odd animal, man. A rake in his youth, he expected to find all young men rakes; quite contrary to the notions of old gentlemen, who expect young fellows to be radically different in habits, principles and practices from the young fellows of thirty or forty years ago.

Mr. Southern liked Phil Copely immensely, because he was accomplished, intelligent, courteous, good-looking, unselfish, and proud. Phil played a splendid violoncello accompaniment to the old gentleman's violin. Phil could ride the old gentleman's own black mare. Phil could shoot with the old gentleman's ebony-stocked pistols as well as the old gentleman himself. Phil could leave as many empty bottles by his plate as anybody. Phil could talk metaphysics and theology so well that he sometimes got a little the best of the parson in a doctrinal discussion after dinner, to the old gentleman's intense delight.

But—ah! what a pity that word was ever invented—but Mr. Southern knew that Phil had only a trifling income, no profession, no expectations worth mentioning, and was of that peculiar, easy, good-natured stamp that would preclude the possibility of brilliant distinction or great wealth accruing to him.

Then again, he thought that Phil, being a good fellow and an excellent companion, must be what he himself had been at five-and-twenty—a roue. He took great pains, therefore, never to permit either of his daughters to meet the young gentleman, save at evening parties, receptions, etc., and would have had a "conniption fit," if he had known that Alice and Phil met privately, on an average, seven times weekly.

"Demme, sir," he once said to an old friend, "my girls are not unprotected. I am too old—my hair is too white—to go out on the field myself, but my nephews are plucky boys, sir, plucky boys; and they would stand up for Alice and Gracie, sir, as long as they could hold a pistol!"

* * * * * * *

Mr. Southern, after playing, very softly and sweetly, the "Sixth Air" of De Beriot, was seized with a desire to smoke a cigar.

In the Southern mansion, the conservatory was the smoking-room also, and thither the old gentleman repaired. It struck him as very singular that the glass door between the dining-room and conservatory should be locked and its curtain drawn on the other side; so he went around another way, through the garden, and entered by the outside door—an ingress but little used.

I have already described the picture that was presented by the interior of the greenhouse. Let it suffice for the reader to know that Phil Copely, for the first, last, and only time in his life, fled ignominiously from a quarrel. White hairs and a pretty daughter ought to insure any old gentleman the respect of all us young fry.

* * * * * * *

The next morning Phil was awakened at 8 or 9 o'clock—early for him—by a violent rapping at the chamber door. He bade the visitor enter, and in strode a stalwart and comely man, with an immense black mustache, and a good deal of the satanic in his eyes.

"Mr. Philip Copely?" demanded he.

"That is my name, sir; and you are——?"

"Mr. Rufus Dawes, at your service."

"I am glad to see you, sir. I have heard of you often, through your cousins, the Misses Southern, I think. Excuse my receiving you in this manner, but I rise late and——"

"Never mind, sir. My business is very brief. It concerns one of the young ladies you have just named. Her father has told me, and has sent me to offer you two alternatives, marry the young lady immediately, sir, or else meet me according to the code of honor!"

"Marry her! You are crazy!"

"Very well, sir. You refuse, then?"

"N-o-o-o! That is what I most wish to do, but was afraid that her father would not hear of it."

"What! Have you, then, been perfectly honorable in your intentions?"

Phil colored and his eyes flashed.

"I should like to see the man who insinuates that Alice would dream of anything else. Tell Mr. Southern that I will marry his daughter this afternoon, if she is willing."

"I suspect that my uncle has judged you a little hastily. I know he was very gay when he was young, and I suppose he thinks you one of the same sort. I am glad it has turned out differently, and——"

"And if you will wait till I am dressed, we will have a drop of something cool over it, eh?"

"If you please."

Alice did not wish to be married that afternoon—it was rather too sudden, so her father was persuaded to allow them a month for preparations, when he had discovered how he had deceived himself, but apologized fairly and squarely to Phil, in private.

"Cousin Rufus" and the bridegroom-elect became great friends, and the black mustache captivated ever so many hearts at the wedding-party.

EUROPEAN FARMS.

How Land is Divided.

[From the London Times.]

On the continent the land is cultivated in much smaller parcels than is customary in this country. According to M. Lavergne, 50,000 proprietors in France possess each an average of 750 acres, 200,000 have an average of 75 acres, and 4,000,000 an average of 17½ acres. Mr. Kay, however, is of opinion that the average of the small proprietors of France is considerably above the figures quoted by M. Lavergne. In Belgium, where the land is even more minutely subdivided than in France, the average area of separate plots is given by Sir Henry Barron at 7.35 acres.

We have a complete store of information on the tenure of land in North Germany, through the able report prepared by Mr. Harriss-Gastrell, in 1867-70, in compliance with instructions issued by Lord Clarendon. The greater part of the land in what was then the Kingdom of Prussia is cultivated by the owners themselves. While the number of tenants wholly engaged in agriculture was only 30,000, there were no less than 1,000,000 proprietors similarly occupied. Of these, more than half belonged to the class of yeomen or team-owning peasants. The area of land owned and cultivated by the "team-owning" peasant varies from 33 acres in Silesia to 66 acres in Saxony and 81 in the province of Prussia.

Reichensberger, in his work, "Die Agrafrage," quoted by Mr. Kay, asserts that the prosperity of France since 1790, notwithstanding the tremendous wars and revolutions through which that country has passed, is entirely due to the laws which have led to a more minute subdivision of the land. The population of France has increased in the interval from 25,000,000 to 34,000,000. A larger population derives far more nourishment from the land of France in the present day than was obtained under the former regime. The people pay with less taxes 1,300,000,000 francs, while the old monarchy fell because it attempted to raise 500,000,000 francs. In Prussia the productive area yields an inferior return relatively to the productive area of this country. Really high farming is rare. It does not appear to be as profitable as medium farming, and the peasant proprietor will not adopt it. He cannot afford the luxury of maximum crops at a less return to himself. In North Germany garden cultivation is renowned for its care and intelligence.

We have seen from the statement of Sir H. Barron how minute is the cultivation in Belgium, and the quantities of fruit, meat, eggs and potatoes shipped to England are really prodigious. We draw similar produce in large quantities from France.

In the United Kingdom the average acreage of holdings is 56 acres. Of the tenant farmers, 560,000 in number, 70 per cent. occupy farms under 50 acres each; 12 per cent. between 50 and 100 acres; 18 per cent. farms of more than 100 acres each. These figures are quoted from Mr. Caird. Should we be more independent of the supplies we now draw from the continent if a greater acreage of our land were cultivated with the minute care of the smaller tenantry and peasant proprietors of the continent?

Moderate holdings seem peculiarly adapted for occupiers who are prepared to devote attention to the secondary produce of the farm. The rearing of poultry has hitherto been too much neglected in this country. When we look to the fact that eggs are selling in Manchester for 2 pence each, while foreign eggs are being imported at the rate of 2,000,000 a day, the retail price of which may be computed at £16,000, it is evident that the English farmers and their families are allowing a most important source of revenue to be too extensively appropriated by the foreign producer. I have no hesitation in saying that, with good management, the sale of eggs and poultry on a small farm should go very far toward the payment of rent.

It is asserted by M. Laveieve that the barren tracts which have been brought into cultivation in Belgium and Holland could never have been reclaimed by large capitalists, requiring an annual interest upon their investment. What is true of Belgium and Holland is equally true of Scotland. The worst lands that have been brought into cultivation in that part of the Kingdom have been held by the small cotters. On good land, where there is ample scope for the application of science and capital to agriculture, large holdings will be preferred.

Chief Moses.

A member of a railway surveying party in Washington Territory visited the famous Indian chief Moses, and writes of him: Moses is the only Indian chief I have ever seen (and I have seen dozens of them) that is not a fraud. He has brains. He is a gentleman in his manners. He has a large property in cattle and horses; and when he travels he has two servants with him to saddle his horse, to cook for him, and to spread his blankets. He enjoys the unbounded confidence and respect of the most civilized and courageous Indians on the continent. Born a warrior and chief, he had intelligence enough not to risk a useless war with whites, if he could avert it. He dreaded war on account of its waste and the certain destruction of what he loved which it involved. He told me he would never again fight the whites unless the Indian Agents tried to force him onto a reservation. "Then," with a quick blazing of his eyes, "then I will fight. I had rather die than go. My people had rather die than go."

OUR EXCHANGE MENAGERIE.

Some Interesting Stories About the Brute Creation.

A correspondent writes this interesting note on snakes from the everglades of Florida: "We expected to make the acquaintance of snakes without number, and of rattlesnakes in particular, but we have seen but few, and they mostly moccasins. This is explained by the settlers, who say the deer kill the rattlesnakes with their hoofs. A deer never sees a rattlesnake but that he kills him. This snake does not run, but fights. The deer is as quick in his movements as the snake is, and, when the snake coils and springs, jumps out of the way of his fangs to return the next moment, with his sharp hoofs cutting his antagonist to pieces. The deer keeps at the work until he stamps the life out of the rattlesnake. In the northern part of the State, where deer are getting scarce, I am told rattlesnakes are increasing in number. Farmers lose cattle, horses and mules from their venomous bites. Hogs running at large destroy great numbers of snakes, but they are not so relentless in their warfare on rattlesnakes as the deer, preferring other varieties of the serpent tribe as dainty articles of diet."

CANINE INTELLIGENCE.

[From the Pittsburgh Chronicle.]

As an instance of canine intelligence, an incident which occurred under Mr. Godfrey's observation is worthy of relation. A box coop near the house containing a number of chicks was disturbed and in terror. When the storm had spent its fury somewhat, the children of Mr. Godfrey busied themselves catching and depositing them in a place of safety, when a shepherd dog belonging to Mr. G., after watching the proceedings for a few minutes, rendered effective assistance by picking chick after chick up in its mouth and carrying them to the coop. It accomplished the unusual task so intelligently that not one of the little feathered bipeds was damaged.

A LIVELY ALLIGATOR.

[From the Newbern (N. C.) Nutshell.]

In Pamlico county, S. B. Lane and his three sons, on crossing a swamp on their way home, were attacked by the largest and most ferocious alligator ever seen in these parts. He tore up the ground, and seemed to stand on his tail and chuck them with logs. They fought him manfully with poles and limbs, but finally had to climb the trees. His bellowing shook the spongy swamp ground like an earthquake. P. C. Dilamar heard the rumpus, and, coming to their rescue, brought the monster down with three loads of buckshot and four pistol-balls down his throat.

A MAN WHO HAS CAUGHT 1,400 FOXES.

[From the Boston Herald.]

Uncle Lemuel Richardson, of Barre, Vt., aged 80, claims to be the champion fox-hunter of the State. He has killed 700, and trapped enough more to make the number 1,389, beside capturing three deer, twelve fishers, five otters, and other game too numerous to mention.

A DOG'S CURE FOR SNAKE-BITE.

[From the Dallas (Tex.) Herald.]

Mr. Hustice, who resides on Elm Fork, exhibited on the streets yesterday a stuffed rattlesnake nearly seven feet long. It had eleven rattles, and was killed by a dog of his, which caught it in the back and shook it until it was dead. The reptile bit the dog, and Mr. Hustice thought he would lose him, but the dog's instincts told him what to do. His master watched him, and saw him eat three or four times a day a peculiar weed, after which he would go and lie in the water. It did this for three successive days, when it was fully recovered. The animal is a great snake-killer, and never allows one to escape it when it has a fair shake at him.

A HORSE PUTS HIS FOOT IN IT.

[From the Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer.]

Yesterday afternoon about 2 o'clock a heavy fall and a great racket was heard in the livery stables of G. W. Zecher. Mr. Zecher and some of his men ran to the stable to ascertain what was the matter, and were not a little astonished to find one of the horses belonging to the Adams Express Company lying down with one of its hind feet wedged in its mouth. It required the united strength of several men, using levers, to pry the horse's mouth open wide enough to get its foot out, and before they succeeded in doing it two of the horse's teeth were knocked out. The poor brute would have strangled to death had he not been promptly relieved before he could rise to his feet. It is supposed that the horse threw his feet forward in striking at the flies, and at the same time threw its head backward, biting at them, thus opening his mouth and "putting his foot in it." The entire hoof was in the horse's mouth, the teeth being sunk into the flesh above the hoof almost, if not altogether, to the bone.

FIVE BARRELS OF SNAKES.

[Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.]

Jonathan Rockwell, engineer at the fire-brick works at Sciotoville, Ohio, has caught and killed the greatest number of snakes ever heard of in these parts. Some three weeks ago he purchased five empty whisky barrels and stored them in an outbuilding to be used for cider barrels when his apples were ripe enough to be made into that temperance beverage. Near the outbuildings there is a ledge of rocks containing many fissures and openings, and has always been "a bad place for snakes."

Mr. Rockwell took occasion to visit the outbuilding referred to, and, in opening the door, he noticed a number of snakes crawling into the bung-holes of the whisky-barrels. Quick as thought he got the bungs and drove them into the barrels and secured the snakes. He then attempted to roll the barrels out of the building, but found them too heavy to handle without assistance. He then called in J. L. Mathoit, Dustin Jones, George Sturdy, Hugh Smith and Thomas Powell, who armed themselves with hickory clubs and proceeded to kill the snakes. The bung was taken out of one barrel and some hot water poured was in, and the snakes began to come out so rapidly that it kept all the above gentlemen busy with their clubs in dispatching them.

The next barrel was treated in the same manner until all the five barrels were emptied, and the total number of snakes killed was 2,153. To-day there is a steady stream of people visiting the premises of Mr. Rockwell and viewing the slain snakes. No one pretends to account for the snakes getting into the barrels. All we can say is that they were there, and it is the "whole truth, and nothing but the truth." The affidavits of our best and most reliable citizens will substantiate it beyond any doubt. The snakes were not all large ones, but there were none less than a foot in length, while many were six or seven feet long. A trench had to be dug this afternoon to bury them, as the stench arising from them was getting horrible.

Bismarck's Personal Appearance.

Hon. W. D. Kelley writes from Berlin to the Philadelphia Times as follows:

As the clock struck 2 the carriage of Mr. White entered the courtyard of Prince Bismarck's official residence, which, fronting on Wilhelm strasse, surrounds three sides of a triangle. As we entered his room, Bismarck advanced and put me at ease by the cordiality of his greeting. His personal appearance was a surprise to me. Portraits, busts and statues had made me familiar with his face and head, but had not told me that his height is more than six feet three, and that his frame is broader than was that of Gen. Scott, to whom in all physical respects, except in the contour of his face and head, he bears a closer resemblance than any man I have ever seen. Having turned his back upon the broad table on which, from the papers spread upon it, it was evident he had been at work, he remarked that he was not so vigorous as formerly, and could work but five hours a day at his desk, though he ought to work sixteen, and proceeded, with the easiest familiarity, to tell us how his habit of working far into the morning, and the preoccupation of his thoughts by practical questions had made it impossible for him to sleep in the quiet hours of the night. "The silence that follows midnight is," said he, "terrible. It wakens all the evil spirits of my mind; they lead me into phantasies, and to escape them I get up and walk or read or write. On many such occasions I have anticipated debates, and supposed what would be said in opposition and what I would say in reply, and, fearing that I would not remember my thoughts and words, which seemed so effective, have risen and carefully written them out. But I have never once found them of use. They were always too fine to be available among practical men, and the paper and pen which are always beside my bed have been useless and wasted. When the noises of the day begin I fall asleep and sleep till 11 o'clock, sometimes till 12 and even 1 o'clock. At my home in the country I would not, I think, sleep any, but that the great burden trains, with three engines and more than 100 wagons, pass each other on a railroad about 300 feet from my house, and, during this time, soothed by the noise, I go to sleep."

Frightened to Death.

One of the saddest of deaths, caused virtually by a night of terror, occurred at No. 1014 Julia street this morning. A little boy, named Eddie Natlic, of timid disposition, stole a handful of rare flowers from a neighboring gardener a week ago, and the gardener, being very much annoyed by the depredation, swore out a warrant charging the child with malicious trespass. The Marshal who served the writ represented to the child's parents that he was only going to take Eddie to the Four Courts to identify some other boys who were in custody. In getting out of the vehicle at the Four Courts Eddie sprained his ankle slightly. He was put into jail, a place of which he had always had a mortal dread. He was assigned a cell in which there was a drunken man, which only added to his fright. The man used him as a pillow, and though tortured by his ankle he did not dare to cry out or move. For seven or eight long hours he lay in that cramped position, too frightened to sleep, even were he not in an agony of pain. The night came on and the noises which came from all parts of the gloomy jail intensified his terror, while the climax was reached when all sounds died away and perfect silence reigned. His parents, after he had been missing for some hours, sought him, but the jail office was shut up, and the night guards knew of no such prisoner. The Deputy Marshal was found, and he told where the boy was. It was 11 o'clock when he was released, and his nervous condition was most pitable. Such a shock was it that he never recovered from his fright till he died, although nearly a week intervened. His ankle swelled up immediately, and was treated by a physician, but the boy's condition was such that he could not rally, and treatment was of no avail. His death was directly due to septicaemia or blood-poisoning, but the physician regards the fright as the superinducing cause.—St. Louis Republican.

A Mortgage for $6,000,000.

There was recently filed at the County Clerk's office, at Portland, Ore., a mortgage for $6,000,000, the largest amount ever borrowed by any Oregon corporation. This colossal sum was borrowed by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, and intended to be expended in pushing forward the different railroad and telegraph lines mentioned in the articles of incorporation. The mortgage covers all the company's property, steamboats, barges, real estate, railroads, machinery, material, etc., and all the property to be acquired hereafter by them. The amount borrowed is divided into 6,000 bonds of $1,000 each, drawing 6 per cent. interest, payable on and after the 1st day of July, 1909, at the office of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, in New York.

JACK SINGLETON, colored, was arraigned in Charleston, S. C., on the charge of beating his wife. It being proven to the satisfaction of the court that Jacob had exercised his authority with no indication of malice or ill-will, Justice Chisholm dismissed the case holding that a husband had the right to chastise his wife for her correction.

THE MATERNAL SHINGLE.

When the angry passions gath'ring in my mother's face I see,
And she leads me in the bed-room—gently lays me on her knee;
Then I know that I will catch it, and my flesh in fancy itches
As I listen to the patter of the shingle on my breeches.

Every tickle of the shingle has an echo and a sting,
And a thousand burning fancies into active being spring;
And a thousand bees and hornets 'neath my coat-tail seem to swarm
As I listen to the patter of the shingle, oh, so warm.

In a splutter comes my father—whom I supposed had gone—
To survey the situation and tell her to lay it on;
To see her bending o'er me as I listen to the strain
Played by her and by the shingle, in a wild and weird refrain.

In a sudden intermission, which appears my only chance,
I say: "Strike gently, mother, or you'll split my Sunday pants."
She stops a moment, draws her breath, the shingle holds aloft,
And says: "I had not thought of that—my son, just take them off."

Holy Moses! and the angels, cast thy pitying glances down,
And thou, oh! family doctor, put a good soft poultice on;
And may I with fools and dunces everlastingly commingle
If I ever say another word when my mother wields the shingle.

Married on Horseback.

Quite a novel wedding took place on Tuesday of last week on the public road near Lyon's creek, in Calvert county, Md. The contracting parties were Mr. Horace Tell and Miss Jones, both of Anne Arundel county. The officiating minister, the Rev. Mr. Shoaf, of Calvert county, was requested by the groomsman to start from home at 7 o'clock on the above-named morning, and he would do likewise, and the point of the road where they would meet should be memorable by a novel wedding. The arrangement was carried out, and the bride and groom on horseback met the reverend gentleman, and, in the public road, seated on horseback, under the sheltering branches of a wide-spreading oak, the happy couple were made man and wife.—Exchange.

Over the Falls.

They sent a goose over Niagara falls the other day to see how she would take it: and, when she rose to the surface of the river below, she looked up as if saying: "You think you're awful smart, don't you?"

"For My Sake."

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning;
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
Three little words, but in their import dwelling,
What wealth of love those syllables unfold!

"For My sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy,
On earth this was My work, I give it thee!
If thou wouldst follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up My cross, and come and learn of Me.

"For My sake" let the little ones be tended,
All that I gave unto thee safely keep;
I took them in My arms, received, and blessed them,
Do now the same for Me, "Feed now My sheep."

"For My sake" let the harsh word die unuttered,
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue;
"For My sake" check the quick, rebellious feeling
That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For My sake" ever press with patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within My Father's house are many mansions;
There thou shalt rest, and join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee,
If "for My sake" thou suffer pain and loss,
Bear on, faint heart, thy Master went before thee,
They only wear His crown who share His cross.

O Thou, dear Lord, who walked on earth incarnate,
Fain would we follow, but we fear to fall;
Lo! at Thy feet we bend, Thy aid imploring,
Our only plea that "For Thy sake" we call.

Is Faith Blind?

The following words of an eminent divine, not long dead, are quoted with high commendation in an obituary, as setting forth the central idea of his religious belief:

> The first and most indispensable condition of piety is submission—blind, absolute, entire submission of the intellect, the conscience, the life to God—This is blind, but not irrational. It is the submission of a sightless child to an all-seeing Father; of a feeble, beclouded intelligence to the Infinite Intelligence.

What is meant by a "blind, absolute, entire submission of the intellect" to God? It is the faculty or faculties by which we apprehend truth. If God made the intellect, that is what He made it for. When a visible object is placed before the open eye, the eye perceives the object. When intelligible truth is placed before the intellect, the intellect perceives the truth. That is the function of the intellect. There is no more reason, therefore, for a "blind, absolute, entire submission" of the mental vision than of the physical vision to God.

We take it for granted that the physical sight was given us to see with; that we honor the Giver not by disusing it, or by speaking contemptuously of it, but by using it and prizing it. We suppose that it is by keeping our eyes open and trusting the evidence they give us that we walk most safely. What sort of sense would there be in talking about a blind submission of the eyesight to God? It might mean keeping the eyes closed and only opening them when we are supernaturally admonished to do so. A man might imagine that he was honoring God in the use of his eyes by shutting them, and refusing to open them at all unless miraculously ordered to open them. Blind submission of the eyesight to God might also mean a persistent refusal to believe our eyes. A man might say, "My eyes tell me that that is a tree before my face, but I shall not rely on their report. If God gives me some miraculous reason for believing that it is a tree, I will believe that it is a tree; if, on the other hand, He gives me some supernatural assurance that the thing which looks like a tree is a house, I will believe that it is a house. To rely upon the evidence of my eyes in a matter like this would be presumptuous; 'blind, absolute, entire submission' of the eyesight to God is the only safe rule."

That would be curious reasoning respecting the bodily senses. That would be a strange way of showing our respect for Him who gave us these organs of vision. We may well ask Him to show us how to use our eyes, and to help us to understand the meaning of the things we see; but to assume that the eyes which He has given us to see with cannot be trusted is a strange way of expressing our confidence in Him. Would not a wide-awake and open-eyed use of the power to see evince a truer reverence and a more genuine faith than a blind submission of this faculty to God, whatever that may mean?

Now we fail to see any reason why this argument does not apply just as well to the mental sight as to the bodily sight. The intellect was made to be used just as truly as the eyes were. We do not honor God by disusing it or by distrusting it any more than we honor him by disusing or distrusting our eyes. The intellect is not infallible; it sometimes falls into error, but so do our eyes sometimes deceive us; we keep on using and trusting our eyes, and we have just as much reason to keep on using and trusting our intellects. There are many subjects of thought that are beyond the comprehension of our minds, and there are many objects in the universe that are too far away or too small for our eyes to see; but that is no reason why we may not see and know things that come within the range of sight or knowledge. We need the help of the Infinite Wisdom in using our mental vision, and in understanding the things that we see and their relations—but it is in using the mind's eye, and not in closing it, nor in refusing to accept without supernatural indorsement the evidence that it gives us that we prove our reverence and our faith.

But this divine goes on to say that such submission is "blind, but not irrational." If it is not irrational to shut the eye that was made for seeing, what is irrational?

It is, however, a "sightless" eye. That seems to alter the case. Man is the "sightless child" of an "all-seeing Father." It must be mental vision that is here denied to man. To say that he is sightless is the same as to say that he is destitute of intellect. Of course, if he has no intellect it may be well for him blindly and absolutely and entirely to submit his intellect to God if he can. But how can he? How is it possible to submit to God that which he does not possess?

This statement, however, appears to be too strong, and it is qualified in the next sentence. It is not a creature absolutely sightless, but a "feeble, beclouded intelligence" that is called thus to submit itself. If an intelligence is "feeble and beclouded," then, the only right thing for it to do is blindly and absolutely to submit itself to God. We do not believe that God desires that any intelligence should do anything of the kind. No matter how feeble our powers may be, God wants us to use them, diligently and trustfully; he does not want us to disown them or despise them. The feeblest mental powers are invigorated by exercise. Faithful use, not blind submission, is their proper regimen. The word "blind" has no application to any intellectual act required of man by God. It is casting contempt upon His most precious gift to speak of the mind of man in the tone in which it is spoken of in this extract. If God had wanted blind subjection he would not have given us minds. We prove our faith in Him not by reviling but by using the faculties that He has given us.—Sunday Afternoon.

"Adirondack" Murray.

It is now the turn of Boston to have a famous clergyman in trouble. This time, we hasten to say, the difficulty is financial, not social. The "woman in the case" is, at most, only incidental.

It appears that Rev. W. H. H. Murray is a better preacher than business man. That is the long and short of it. He has a large fancy stock-farm in Guilford, Ct. This enterprise has been on his hands for several years. A few years ago he established and was the leading spirit of a religious newspaper, the Golden Age. Between the two he has gone to the wall, financially, at least. Some months ago he tried to avert bankruptcy by buying a patent right for a buckboard wagon, and organizing a company for its manufacture. Of course the stock which he received in this company developed no revenue at first, and, however profitable it may prove, it can afford him no relief. A diligent search for assets by a Deputy Sheriff disclosed only a quantity of hay. All else was mortgaged or deposited as collateral on borrowed money, which the borrower has no prospect of repaying. He resorted to the method too common with impecunious men—drawing checks against imaginary bank deposits.

Finding himself at the end of his tether, the best he could do would have been to have met his creditors in a manly way with a statement of his affairs. Instead of doing that he left his wife on the farm to bear the brunt of the burden, and with his yacht and female stenographer sailed away toward his favorite hunting and fishing grounds on the Adirondacks. On Lake Champlain his yacht was seized for debt. He left his fair companion somewhere on the road, and plunged alone into the wilderness which he had done so much to make known to and popular with summer tourists.

Mrs. Murray is said to have taken a course of medical lectures, whether apprehensive of trouble from business or stenography, does not appear. She proposes to enter the medical profession early in the fall. Such are the developments up to date in the Murray case.—Chicago Journal.

Names of Places.

The names of cities, towns and villages of the United States, says a New York paper, reveal great poverty of invention. A town's title, to have any real appropriateness, should have a local application, if possible; or, if this is not practicable, a name which perpetuates some incident connected with the early history of the region is a good substitute. A termination in too common use is the French "ville." Nothing more poor and mean in nomenclature can be found in the gazetteers than this everlasting ville. The points of the compass more naturally take a lead in distinguishing an offshoot from an old town. Massachusetts has suspended on the points of the compass more than 200 of her towns. There are in the whole country no less than 650 towns and cities which have west for a prefix. There are more than 600 norths of various combinations—Northfield coming out strong in the list. In North Carolina, where the word south is very dear, one community, as if in despair of finding a title not already in use, have called their town South Toe. There ought to be a North Toe, or, at least, a Toeville, but there is not. In North Carolina there is a town called Why Not? and there is another in Mississippi. Before Americans took to the point of the compass they had exhausted the word "New." There are 625 towns in the United States bearing that prefix, many of these being in affectionate remembrance of English ancestral homes. Among the odd names, Pennsylvania gives us the novelty of Congruity, and Virginia furnishes the euphonious title of Nance's Shop, in a county known by the singular name of Charles City. In Perry county, Ky., we find the name of Cut Shins, and North Carolina gives the town of Democrat; this State, which has a monopoly of odd names, is proud to own the postoffice of Mutual Love. In Sampson county, same State, is situated the cheerful community of Dismal. Some settlers in Smith county, Tenn., confessed their trials in searching for an appropriate name for their place by calling it Difficult. Georgia has a Dirt Town, and North Carolina rejoices in a Tar Heel. In the wilderness of foolish and unmeaning names of our towns we find eight Alphas, and we conclude by noting that there are precisely the same number of Omegas.

A Swindling Baron.

A German Baron, who had been playing heavily at "makao," at the Pesth National Casino, and had, during a few months, won $40,000, was discovered cheating a few weeks ago in a very curious way. He always appeared anxious to "take the bank," by which means he, of course, always dealt. He kept down the pile of bank notes in front with his polished silver tobacco box. He dealt over this, and could thus see the cards he dealt his players reflected in the lid of his box. A certain General of the staff observed this, and begged for the loan of the box to roll a cigarette. This request he frequently repeated, and observed that when the box was away the Baron had variable luck like the others. The lucky gambler, a well-known racing man and of excellent family, is to be prosecuted as a common swindler.

THE TUILERIES.

The Historic Pile to Be Demolished.

A recent dispatch from Paris reports that the bill to demolish the ruins of the Tuileries has passed the Chamber of Deputies, and has been referred by the Senate to a special committee. The ups and downs of this old building are so interwoven with dramatic episodes in French history as to give this action of the popular branch of the French Legislature a peculiar significance.

The original palace was built by Catherine de Medici in 1564. Additions were made by Henry IV., Louis XIII. and Louis XIV. The work was taken up by Napoleon I. in 1808, who began the northern gallery. This was completed by Napoleon III., and during the Second Empire the Tuileries, with the Louvre, formed a connected building, including the Place du Carrousel. The building has an imposing front and a magnificent interior, and was one of the finest palaces in Europe.

The palace was used as a royal residence until the court removed to Versailles in 1672. For over 100 years no French King lived in the Tuileries, but in 1789 the people decreed that Louis XVI. should remove thither. Three years later the mob stormed the building, murdered the guards, and took possession.

During the Consulate and the First Empire the palace was the residence of Napoleon Bonaparte, and was occupied by the Bourbons after the restoration. In July, 1830, it was again sacked by the mob, and for a third time in 1848. Napoleon III. made it his residence, and greatly improved it.

On the 4th day of September, 1870, or after the fall of Metz, the Paris mob again invaded the gardens of the Tuileries. The Empress Eugenie was alone with a few attendants, and it seemed that she could not escape. At this moment a man now prominently before the world came to the rescue. This was Ferdinand de Lesseps, the builder of the Suez canal. He informed the Empress that all was lost, and, going with her through the gallery of the Louvre, they left the palace as the guards at the garden entrance surrendered it to the troops of the newly-proclaimed republic.

In May, 1871, the Communists, finding they could not hold the city against the Government troops operating from Versailles, decided to burn all the public buildings. On the 22d they distributed cans of petroleum through the palace of the Tuileries, and that night fired it. The next morning they fired the Hotel de Ville, the Palais Royal, and other public and private buildings. A week of carnage followed, and then Paris was in possession of the Government troops.

The gardens of the Tuileries have been restored, and many of the public buildings have been or are being rebuilt. The palace so long the residence of French sovereigns remains as the fire left it, and the action of the Legislature signifies that it will not be rebuilt.

"A Small-Tail Movement."

The Presidential canvass of 1840, in which Gen. Harrison and President Van Buren were opposing candidates, was distinguished by an intense popular enthusiasm. It was an oratorical and musical campaign. Every village had its dozen of speakers and its score of vocalists. An amusing anecdote of that election gives a modern illustration of the old fable of the lion put to flight by the braying of a jackass.

A speaker was discoursing at a mass meeting in Western Virginia upon the merits of Gen. Harrison as a military commander. Suddenly, a tall, gaunt man arose, and, in a shrill voice that pierced through the crowd, called out:

"Mister! mister! I want to ax a question!"

"I shall be happy to answer any question, if I can," replied the orator.

"We are told, fellow-citizens," said the quaint man, addressing the crowd, "that Gineral Harrison is a mighty great Gineral; but I say he's one of the meanest sort of Ginerals. We are told that he defended himself bravely at Fort Meigs; but I tell you that on that occasion, he was guilty of the Small-Tail Movement, and I challenge the speaker to deny it!"

"I don't know, my friend," replied the orator, "what you mean by the 'Small-Tail Movement.'"

"I'll tell you," said the quaint man. "I've got it here in black and white. Here is 'Quinshaw's History of the United States,'"—holding up the book—"and I'll read what it says: 'At this critical moment, Gen. Harrison executed a novel movement!' Does the gentleman deny that statement?"

"No; go on."

"Well, he executed 'a novel movement.' Now here's 'Johnson's Dictionary'—taking a small book out of his pocket—"and it says, NOVEL—a small tale!" This was the kind of movement Gineral Harrison was guilty of. Now, I'm no sogger, and don't know much of milentary tic-tacks—but this I do say, a man who, in the face of an enemy, is guilty of a 'Small-Tail Movement' is not a fit man to be President of the United States, and he shan't have my vote."

And he didn't, nor the vote of that village.

Two Bright Boys.

A friend and neighbor has a son who is so quick at repartee that it is a little dangerous to cross swords with him. He was out riding with his father the other day, when, noting the name of a street, he asked if it was named for Mr. B—, a well-known but not altogether popular citizen. "By no means," said the father; "it is not named for him, but for his father, who was very popular and very much esteemed." The boy said nothing; so his father, who thought he saw a chance to preach a little sermon, continued: "It's very apt to be so. A boy has a father whom everybody loves and respects for his good qualities and abilities, but in too many cases the boy doesn't amount to anything." Said the boy after a pause. "Your father was very much esteemed, wasn't he, sir?"

A story comes to Causeur of an incident in a school in Southampton, England, some years since. The boys were being examined in the history of England, and the answers were mainly dates of events more or less important in the history of the British empire. Among the pupils was the son of an American sea-Captain, a bright specimen of young America. Being questioned concerning dates in English history, he manifested an ignorance bordering on stupidity. The teacher, whose patience was exhausted, exclaimed, "What! Don't you remember a single date that marks an important event in the history of England?" "Why, yes, sir," answered the boy, "I do know one." "Well, out with it," said the teacher. "The Fourth of July, 1776." [illegible]

Wolves and Wild Horses.

It is said that whenever several of the larger wolves associate together, for mischief, in the German forests and their neighborhood, there is always a numerous train of smaller ones to follow in the rear, and act as auxiliaries in the work of destruction. Two large wolves are sufficient to destroy the most powerful horse, and seldom more than two ever begin the assault, although there may be a score in the gang. It is no less curious than amusing to witness this ingenious mode of attack. If there is no snow, or but little on the ground, two wolves approach in the most playful and caressing manner, lying, rolling and frisking about, until the too-credulous and unsuspicious victim is completely put off his guard by curiosity and familiarity. During this time, the gang, squatted on their hind-quarters, look on at a distance. After some time spent in this way, the two assailants separate, when one approaches the horse's head, and the other his tail, with a shyness and cunning peculiar to themselves. At this stage of the attack their frolicsome approaches become very interesting—it is right good earnest; the former is a mere decoy; the latter is the real assailant, and keeps his eye steadily fixed on the hamstring or flank of the horse. The critical moment is then watched, and the attack is simultaneous; both wolves spring at their victim the same moment—one to the throat, the other to the flank, and, if successful, which they generally are, the hind one never lets go his hold till the horse is completely disabled. Instead of springing forward or kicking to disengage himself, the horse turns round and round without attempting a defense. The wolf before then springs behind to assist the other. The sinews are cut, and in half the time I have been describing it the horse is on his side—his struggles are fruitless—the victory is won. At this signal the lookers-on close in a gallop; but the small fry of followers keep at a respectful distance until their superiors are gorged, and then they take their turn unmolested.

Brother Gardner's Wrath.

Just as the honored President of the Lime Kiln Club was about to leave his house on Indiana street to proceed to Paradise Hall and open the meeting, as usual, Mrs. Gardner climbed the line fence to borrow a "drawing of lard" of a neighbor. In some way, unexplained as yet, her feet became entangled in the boards, and she threw down twenty-eight feet of fencing, and brought up among the weeds with a sprained ankle. The President was therefore detained at home fifteen minutes beyond the hour for opening the meeting. There were nearly eighty members on hand, and a spirit of deviltry seemed to grasp right hold of even the old gray-heads. Trustee Pullback, who is in his 67th year, danced a regular breakdown in the middle of the floor; the Hon. John Paradox cuffed hats with the Rev. Penstock; Waydown Bebee threw a dipper of water over the sacred person of Deacon Hastings, and Samuel Shin and Elder Toots fell over a bench and jarred the hall to its foundations while engaged in a back-hold wrestle. In the midst of this jubilee Brother Gardner walked in. Some one in the back end of the hall just then threw a hard-boiled egg at the honored pate of Judge Goslin, and it struck the President fair between the eyes. He got up after a minute, brushed the dust off his clothes and proceeded to his chair, and when the triangle sounded the hall was as still as death.

"Gem'len, I beg to inquiar' if dis am de nineteenth century, or if we hat' returned to de barbaric aige?" softly inquired the President, as he felt of the bump created by the egg.

There was no answer. Here and there an old member could be seen rolling up the cotton blossoms behind his eyeballs, but not a whisper broke the stillness.

"I doan' know who frowed dat egg nor who begun dis scene of levity," resumed the President; "but I nebber want to see any mo' of it. I didn't intend to pass de collekshun hat aroun' at dis meetin, bein' as de Treasurer am a long ways ahead, but de collector will at once pass aroun'. Let me add dat de pusson who raised dis bump between my eyes musn't toss less dan half a dollar into de hat."

Quickened conscience made the collection foot up over $10, and there wasn't a coin smaller than a dime in the hat.—Detroit Free Press.

A Coincidence.

Yesterday two citizens happened to meet at a soda fountain, and one of them cried out:

"Ah! how curious! Just eleven years ago to-day, at the same hour, I met you here and we drank soda together. What a coincidence!"

"Yes it was just eleven years ago to-day," mused the other, "and curiously enough I have the same memorandum-book in my pocket to-day I had then."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, and here is the very memorandum I made after we drank: 'Lent Joseph —— $5!' How strangely history repeats itself."

"Blast your history and coincidences, too!" growled the first as he felt down in his vest pocket for a $5 and canceled the account.

Life is full of strange adventures, and the strangest of all is collecting an old debt.—Detroit Free Press.

FARM NOTES.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

STAGNANT WATER.—One of the most fertile sources of disease is a pond of filthy water made so by soakings from the barnyard. Such a breeder of foul gases should not exist, much less be a repository for dead animals and decaying garbage.

THE largest wheat farm on the globe is along the Red river, in Dakota, near the town of Fargo. It contains 40,000 acres, and gives an average yield of twenty-four bushels per acre. The owner does not walk over it before breakfast.

STRING-HALT.—String-halt is an affection of the nerves, by which the control of certain muscles of the hind leg or legs is lost, either continuously or spasmodically. It is incurable, but is mitigated sometimes by the use of belladonna, strychnine, or other antispasmodics or nerve medicines. No horse having this disease, which is an unsoundness, should be used in breeding.

IMPLEMENTS.—When the tools and implements are done with for the season, they should be thoroughly cleaned and put away in safe, dry places. It is a good plan to protect journals and gearings from dust and rubbish by tying them up in stout paper or pieces of cloth. It will save much time and labor in cleaning them in the spring, when one is busier than now.

ROOT CROPS VS. FALLOW.—The old idea of renovating the soil by a season of rest, after two or more similar and exhaustive crops have been grown, is fast going out of date, and the root crop is taking the place of the fallow. This change is a great improvement, and means a mixed husbandry and rotation of crops, in place of the single-crop system, which should be practiced only in a new country, and perhaps not always there.

ROPY CREAM.—When milk throws up ropy, glutinous substance in place of cream, it is an evidence that the cow is not in a healthy condition. A dose of salts (12 oz.) may be given, and a few one-ounce doses of hyposulphite of soda given daily may remove the difficulty. Clover alone is not good pasture for milk, and is apt to disturb the condition of the cow; if a few pounds of bran or two pounds of cotton-seed meal are given each day, it will probably help to remove the ropiness.

SOWING ORCHARD GRASS.—There is no other grass that does so well under shade as orchard grass. If the ground is plowed and harrowed this month, the seed may be sown either alone or with a bushel of oats per acre. The oats can be mowed or pastured in October, or will freeze and die down, forming a mulch for the grass. Forty pounds of orchard-grass seed should be sown per acre. Twenty pounds each of orchard grass and blue grass makes an excellent mixture.

LAMBS FOR MARKET.—The most desirable lambs for market are a cross of Southdown on Merino. These are fat and plump, with small bones, and have the black faces and legs of the sires, which are a recommendation with the butchers. A cross of Cotswold on Merino produces a larger lamb, but it is looser bodied, and more bony. Either the Southdown or the Cotswold makes a good cross on Merino ewes, the mutton is good, and the lambs are vigorous.

"BIG HEAD."—"Big head" is incurable. It is a disease of the bones of the head, and can only be treated by removing the bones, which, in that part of the body, would obviously destroy the animal. The disease consists in the growth of spongy excrescences on the bone, which arise from scrofulous, or other unhealthy condition, which is constitutional. The disease may be mitigated, and the final result postponed by the use of iodine and hyposulphite of soda, with iron, but the advice of an educated veterinary surgeon should be taken before using them.

GAPES IN CHICKENS.—Gapes is the result of parasitic worms in the windpipe. The only cure is to dislodge them. This is sometimes successfully done by putting the chicks in a box, covering the top with a piece of muslin, and dusting fine lime through the cloth. The chicks breathe the lime, and, as it comes in contact with the worms, these let go of the membranes, and are dislodged by the coughing and sneezing of the chicks. To prevent gapes, the chicks should not be kept on ground where fowls have previously been.

HEREDITY AND VARIATION.—Every living thing is influenced by two great and opposing laws—First, heredity, or the tendency to be like the parent—embodied in the axiom, "Like produces like." This is strengthened by breeding those individuals which are most nearly similar. The second, variation, or the tendency to be unlike the parent; this is strengthened by breeding those individuals which are not similar, but as widely different as may be. In general "in-and-in" breeding strengthens heredity, while crossing gives scope to variation. Breeders of stock of all kinds should be familiar with, and regard these matters.

FEEDING BRAN.—Bran is not only an excellent food for the production of milk in cows, but also for feeding young animals. It contains a large proportion of the phosphates, which are a most necessary part of the food of an animal, but one in which most foods are deficient. In a ton of wheat bran there is fifty-one and one-half pounds of phosphoric acid, and in a ton of rye bran sixty-eight and one-half pounds. Rye bran is also richer in potash than that of wheat, by nearly 40 per cent.; hence for food, and for the resulting manure, rye bran is preferable. In feeding bran the value of the manure should be taken into consideration. This, although it may not be seen so conspicuously, nor so quickly as the milk in the pail, or the increased thrift of a young animal, yet it as certainly exists, and in good time will show itself in the field. It is beyond question that in feeding a ton of bran, the larger part of the profit is made in the manure, and if one is satisfied with what he gains directly in the feeding, he may be all the more so with that which he receives in the manure.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

CLEAN oil-cloths with milk and water; a brush and soap will ruin them.

A SMALL piece of charcoal in the pot with boiling cabbage removes the smell.

PROTECTION AGAINST MOTHS.—A small piece of paper or linen moistened with turpentine and put into the wardrobe or drawers for a single day two or three times a year is a preventive against moths.

FRIED BREAD.—Beat three eggs very light; stir into one pint of sweet milk; slice some bread; dip into the milk and eggs, and fry a light brown in butter and lard. Sprinkle over the top with powdered sugar and cinnamon.

CLAM SOUP.—Put the clam juice over the fire; skim when it boils up; chop twenty-five clams very fine; add large table-spoonful butter; heaping teaspoonful of corn starch dissolved in a cup of water; heat one pint milk, and pour in after taking from the fire.

HAM BALLS.—Mince very fine cold cooked ham (that which has been boiled is best, although fried ham will answer, if not too salt), add an egg for each person; stir in a little flour, and make into balls. Dip into egg, and then into grated bread, and fry until of a nice brown.

BEEF having a tendency to be tough can be made very palatable by stewing gently for two hours, with pepper and salt, taking out about a pint of the liquor when half done, and letting the rest boil into the meat. Brown the meat in the pot. After taking up, make a gravy of the pint of liquor saved.

MOONSHINES.—Roll a coffee-cup of pale yellow sugar; then add the yelks of six eggs and a pinch of salt; beat well and pour into the flour tray and work into a soft dough; roll very thin and cut out with a tumbler, drop into a frying-pan of hot lard, and cook quickly. When done, sift white sugar over them.

TO REMOVE SUNBURN.—Milk of almonds, obtained at the druggist's, is as good as anything to use, and to keep wrinkles out of the face use tepid water instead of cold; if the wrinkles are deep-seated, appy a little turpentine to the wrinkles for a few nights before retiring. Some ladies use a patch of court-plaster for the wrinkles, which soon eradicates these emblems of care and age.

CODFISH BALLS.—Two pounds boneless fish, soaked and boiled over night and well beaten before breakfast; boil twelve or fifteen good-sized potatoes; mash them very smooth with milk and a large table-spoonful of butter; beat in the codfish; add one egg; if not soft enough, add a little more milk; make into a cake and fry. The secret of good fish-cakes is to have the potatoes fresh boiled and beaten very light.

FRIED FROGS.—Throw the legs into boiling water for five minutes. Take them out and put them in cold water, and wipe them until dry. Have some batter made as follows: In one pint of cream, the yelk of an egg slightly beaten. Have ready some baked bread-crumbs. Dip the legs into the cream and egg, and with the fingers powder them a little with the bread-crumbs. Fry in the very best of butter to a light golden brown.

A Desperate Duel.

Although the number of duels which have ended fatally for the combatants is happily limited, the fashion which prevailed during the eighteenth century of having a number of seconds on either side pitted one against the other caused many duels to end fatally for more than one of the actors in them. One of the most famous duels of this kind, as well as one of the most disastrous in its consequences, was that between the Duke of Hamilton and Lord Mohun, which took place in the reign of Queen Anne, in the year 1712. The Duke of Hamilton was a most amiable and accomplished gentleman, beloved by his friends, and respected by all; while Lord Mohun was the most finished scoundrel and desperado of the time, which is saying a good deal. Lord Mohun, for private reasons, of which revenge was only one, was determined to force a quarrel on the Duke. Accordingly, he insulted him grossly, and then sent a challenge, which the Duke, though he knew that in so doing he played into the scoundrel's hands, was forced to accept. They met in Hyde Park, and fought long and fiercely. Both were accomplished swordsmen, and, although they wounded each other again and again, no attempt at a reconciliation was made. It was thoroughly understood that the duel was to the death. The Duke had received four serious wounds, and Lord Mohun three, when the Duke managed to get past his adversary's guard, and rid the world of one of the most worthless men who have ever disgraced it. What really followed will never be known for certain. As the Duke leaned forward, with his sword still in Lord Mohun's body, he was stabbed through the shoulder to the heart. It was said that Lord Mohun, after receiving his death-blow, shortened his sword, and with the desperate strength of a dying man drove it to the hilt through the Duke's body. But this was disbelieved at the time, and Maj. Macartney, one of Lord Mohun's seconds, was accused of having stabbed the Duke from behind, as soon as he saw Lord Mohun was mortally wounded. His immediate flight after the duel lends some color to the accusation, but that may, perhaps, be explained by the fact that he knew no one concerned in the death of such a notable man as the Duke of Hamilton would escape punishment. Be this as it may, the fact remains that one of the most accomplished statesmen and polished gentlemen of the day bartered his life for that of a scoundrel fit only for the hulks. And this shows one great reason why dueling is such miserable folly. Unless the lives involved be equal in value, the game is manifestly unfair.

Comfort Enough.

Bronson House, Bronson, Branch County, Mich., John Q. Adams, Proprietor. [illegible] This hotel was built and arranged for the special comfort and convenience of the traveling public.

On arrival, each guest will be asked how he likes the situation, and if he says the hotel ought to have been placed further from the depot and nearer the business part of town, the location will be immediately changed.

Corner front rooms, up only one flight for each guest.

Bath, gas, water-closet, hot and cold water, laundry, telegraph, fire-alarm, restaurant, bar-room, billiard-tables, daily papers, coupe, sewing-machine, grand piano, a clergyman, and all other modern conveniences, in every room.

Meals every minute if desired, and consequently no second table.

English, French and German dictionaries furnished every guest, to make up such a bill of fare as he may desire, without regard to bill of fare afterward at the office.

Waiters of any nationality and color. Every waiter furnished with a libretto, button-hole bouquets, full-dress suits, ball tablets and the hair parted in the middle.

Every guest will have the best seat in the dining-hall and the very best waiter in the house.

Any guest not getting his breakfast red-hot, or experiencing a delay of sixteen seconds after giving his order for dinner, will please mention the fact at the manager's office, and cooks and waiters will be blown from the mouth of the cannon in front of the hotel at once.

Children will be welcomed with delight, and are requested to bring hoop-sticks and hawkeys to bang the carved rosewood furniture especially provided for that purpose, and peg tops to spin on the velvet carpets. They will be allowed to bang on the piano at all hours, fall down stairs, carry away dessert enough for a small family in their pockets at dinner, and make themselves as disagreeable as the fondest mother can desire.

Washing allowed in rooms. Ladies giving an order to "put me on a flat-iron" will be put on at any hour of the day or night.

A discreet waiter, who belongs to the Masons, Odd Fellows, Sons of Malta, Knights of Pythias, K. O. M.'s and M. D. R.'s, and who was never known to tell the truth or the time of day, has been employed to carry milk punches and hot toddies to the ladies' rooms in the evening.

The office clerk has been selected to please everybody, and can lead in prayer, play draw-poker, match worsteds at the village store, shake for the drinks at any hour of the day or night, play billiards, a good waltzer, can dance the German, make a fourth at euchre, amuse the children, repeat the Beecher trial from memory, is a good judge of horses, as a railroad or steamboat reference is far superior to Appleton's or anybody else's guide, will flirt with any young lady and not mind being cut to death when "pa comes down"—don't mind being damned any more than a Connecticut river; can room forty people in the best room in the house when the house is full, attend the annunciator, and answer questions in Greek, Hebrew, Irish, Choctaw, or any other polite language, at the same moment, without turning a hair.

Dogs allowed in any room in the house, including the w(h)ine room. Gentlemen can drink, smoke, swear, chew, gamble, tell shady stories, stare at the new arrivals, or indulge in any other innocent amusement common to watering-places, in any part of the hotel.

The landlord will always be happy to hear that some other hotel is the best house in the country.

"Special attention given to parties who can give information as to "how these things are done in Yewrup."

Greeley on College Men.

[Chicago Tribune Letter.]

Mr. Greeley, as almost everybody knows, hated young men fresh from college worse than he hated democrats—which is saying a good deal. I remember one occasion when in my presence a young man, armed with a strong letter of introduction, made his appearance in the old man's office. Mr. Greeley read the note carefully, and then turned upon the visitor.

"I see you want a place on my paper," he began. "What are your qualifications? How much newspaper work have you ever done?"

"I—that is—" responded the stranger, in hesitating tones, "you see by my letter that I am a graduate of Cornell Univ—"

—That's no recommendation here. What can you do? What do you know about journalism?"

By this time the young chap was desperate, and he spoke with some asperity.

"I come from Litchfield, Conn., where I have done some work on the local weekly. And, by the way, I am well—I may say very well acquainted with your brothers-in-law who live there,—the Messrs. Cheney."

"Is that so?" exclaimed Greeley, with a sneer. "Well, then, if you want to know what I think of that, I must say you are acquainted with a couple of d—d mean men. Good-morning."

And, as the young chap fled, Greeley turned to me with a scowl, and added "When I take one of those infernal college fools upon the paper without some other recommendation than their graduating papers, just let me know about it, will you?"

AN ECCENTRIC HEART.

A Man in Whom it Not Only Palpitates But Peregrinates.

[San Francisco Bulletin.]

There resides at No. 467 Jessie street, in this city, a man who has been unable to attend to his business for the last two years on account of the displacement of his heart. The patient is Kenneth F. McLean, a carpenter by trade. He contracted a severe cold about the 19th of June, 1877. A physician was then called and pronounced it a bad case of pneumonia. After a month's treatment he felt a little better, when his nurse discovered a lump or swelling on his left side. The next time the physician called he attracted his attention to it. The physician made an examination and pronounced it a collection of water, and that he must have a slight touch of pleurisy. A few mornings after McLean discovered that his heart was beating on his right side, and it has remained there ever since. The patient, who was naturally of a very robust constitution, rallied after the first attack, and was soon able to be about. He called upon his physician and told him that his heart had moved to his right side. The physician would not believe it, but on examination found it to be the case. This was about the last of July. His physician measured him about every third day with a tape, and found that the water was increasing. About the 18th of August he applied blisters, but they gave no relief. In the mean time he called to see another physician, who urged no delay in getting McLean tapped, stating that his left lung was useless, and that his heart was likely to remain in its present position unless the water was removed immediately. McLean called on his physician and requested to be tapped, but he told him there was danger in being tapped too soon, but if he insisted he would accommodate him, and appointed Saturday, September 15th. He came that day and brought three physicians with him. They made an incision between his ribs and took seven pints of water from him, after which he obtained immediate relief. But he soon began to fill up again, and he was tapped a second time on the 6th of October, and six pints of water drawn off. He was then tapped the third and last time on November 8th, and four and a half pints drawn off. The last time they analyzed the liquid and pronounced it seventy-five per cent. albumen. After each operation he grew weaker, and concluded that it was time to have a change of some kind. His physician advised him to go to the country, but, as the rainy season was approaching, he concluded not to go, and in five days he measured one and three-fourths inches less where the water had been accumulating. Under his last treatment he improved very fast, and never had occasion to use the respirator since. One of the results of his sickness is that his left lung is in a dormant state, and his heart remains on his right side. He feels confident, however, that had he been tapped earlier, or treated as his last physician treated him, he would have been a well man to-day. He has been before three different medical societies, and found a great difference of opinion regarding his sickness existing among the members. A great many of them are deeply interested in his case.

AN ARKANSAS PHENOMENON

An Aged Colored Individual Who is Gradually Turning White.

Webb City, Aug. 4.—Of the seven wonders of the world the United States has furnished five—the Mammoth Cave, the Niagara Falls, the natural bridge, the Hot Springs, and last, but not least, the Ethiopian who is changing his color. The two last belong to Arkansas, and are pre-eminently the most wonderful. The former are common in a small way, their magnitude making them remarkable. But the latter stands unapproached in the history of the world. The public have seen or heard of the Hot Springs, but this radical, positive and permanent change of color from a very black to a very white man, is a freak of nature unparalleled in the history of man. This individual, Frank Jones (ex-officio colored), having lived a quiet life of thirty years (but who is now fifty-five years old), five miles south of Ozark, Franklin county, Ark., the public know nothing of this phenomenon. He was born black, of black parents, and remained so until he was nearly grown, when a white spot resembling that of a lamb appeared on his breast, and from that the spots spread in each direction. He is now a spotted man, being about half black and half white, and becoming more and more white all the time. The spots are very decided, the white being very white and the black very black, except those that are undergoing the change from black to white, which are of a grayish yellow. He is in perfect health every way. I regard him as absolutely the greatest wonder of the age.

A Ravishing Bathing-Suit.

[Newport Cor. Boston Advertiser.]

But let us go back to our omnibus and to the beach, and see how lovely America has at last conquered even the problem of the bathing-suit. Here, as we sit, we can see one, two, three fair creatures, no longer disguised and disfigured by slouchy tunics and baggy trousers and streaky colors, but positively adorned. There is a white suit, fitting like a charm, with its short shoulders, its gored skirt, its elbow sleeves, its frills at the neck and at the knee, where the trousers cease, all trimmed with torchon lace and light blue cambric of Chambery bands that even salt water can not streak or change. And then the striped, the clocked or the solid-hued stockings that may "go" with this seductive suit, and the hat that crowns all—no monstrosity of half-worn dinginess, but a trim, stiff-rimmed white straw, banded and bowed with the blue cambric. Even the bathing shoes of white canvas are rosetted with blue, the whole offering a charming contrast to the old scarecrow styles. And how does this blue and white splendor come out of Neptune's wet arms? Not badly. The contrast of color is still there, and there is no long skirt, no baggy trousers to flap and cling. The young lady who sits for this picture of white and blue now under your eye was a very pretty mermaid as she emerged from the waves, the stiff hat glistening in the sun and the torchon lace shedding the water like a strainer. Alternating with the blue and white are pink and red, the light colors carrying the day over the navy blue and dark shades of the old style.

How Nitro-glycerine s Made—"Tratomic Alcohol."

This wonderful explosive was discovered in 1847, by an Italian named Soboro, but its practical application was made by Alfred, a Swedish engineer. The process by which it is made is thus described: Every one knows what glycerine is—a clear, syrupy liquid, sweet to the taste and somewhat greasy to the touch. Its scope for employment ranges from the surgeon's dispensary to the lady's boudoir. Chemists term it tratomic alcohol, and it may be derived from fat or tallow by action of lime and sulphuric acid. Its properties are many and various, but as they have no bearing upon the present subject we shall abstain from noticing them. If a quantity of nitric acid be added to twice its weight of sulphuric acid, glycerine be poured into this, and stirred carefully, the whole being surrounded by freezing mixture, we obtain that wonderful substance known as nitro-glycerine, which has more than ten times the explosive force of gunpowder. It forms on the surface as an oil of pale yellow color, is perfectly inodorous, and has a sweet, aromatic taste. It is poisonous whether taken internally or absorbed through the skin, and small doses produce distressing headaches. It does not explode when brought into contact with fire, and remains unchanged even when brought to a temperature of boiling water; but at forty degrees Fahrenheit it becomes converted into an icy mass, which merely requires friction to develop all its explosive qualities.

CLERICAL COWARDICE.

[Dr. Holland, in September Scribner.]

The Reverend Moses Smith thinks that a new statement of the doctrine of the inspiration of the Bible is wanted,—something broader and better than that generally received or written. Why does not the Reverend Moses Smith write it himself, and for himself? If he is an honest man, and considers the doctrine of the inspiration of the Scriptures, as it has been written and received, of any importance, what right has he to give that doctrine the slightest respect, to seem to hold it, or to tolerate it for a moment? The worst that can happen to him is deposition from the ministry, which ought not to be a very great calamity, especially when it releases him from the necessity of preaching, or seeming to believe, a dogma which he regards as rotten and pernicious. If progress in Christian truth is to be made, somebody must be sacrificed, and it may as well be Rev. Moses Smith as any other man. Augustus Blauvelt and John Miller have been thrown overboard, and it hasn't hurt them, and if Moses Smith has got far enough along to complain of his bondage, and to wish that a portion of his creed could be rewritten, then he is just the man to rewrite it and to take what comes of it. * * * *

Woman wants a broader field of labor and action. Very well, there is no law against her having it. Let her take it. By some of her strong-minded representatives, she goes up and down the land, demanding a larger place for herself in industry, in education, in power and influence. Men naturally object to her political aspirations that she has no right to make laws or ordain policies which she expects them to execute and maintain, but, so far as education and labor go, she has only to do what she pleases. She can enter college with men, she can practice law and medicine, she can preach, she can carry on any kind of business for which she has the capacity, without saying "by your leave" to anybody. If she thinks she ought to have a larger place than she occupies, then her first duty is to repent of the sin of not taking it. She has but to write her own rule of action and endeavor, and it will be respected. If consequences naturally follow which are unpleasant to her, she must take them. If she loses sympathy among her own sex, or sacrifices the admiration and respect of men, she must yield the cost of her independence without a murmur. But let her not complain that she is not free, and that if she but had a chance she could improve her lot and remodel her destiny. Women have always written the social creeds of the world, and women have only to agree to rewrite any social creed. Man certainly is not her oppressor in this country, and if she needs liberty in this country let her take it, in any measure and direction consistent with her obligations as a moral being.

There are many men who are discontented with the political party with which they have acted, perhaps during a long life. Its principles have changed, its leaders are unwise or unprincipled, its policy unfair and unjust, and they are sick of it. But they do not break away from it. Their character for consistency seems to be at stake. If they have any political aspirations, they are identified with the party with which they have always acted. So, with caviling judgments, or against conscientious convictions, they stand by their party and are unhappy. Now, there is no good reason why these men should not declare their independence, and take what comes of it. Nay, there is every reason why no man should remain a slave to any body of men, or to himself. * * * * * * *

To go back to the Reverend Moses Smith for a moment, we should judge that, in religion particularly, one of the most damaging sins of the day lies in continued assent to dogmas that are really dead in the Christian belief. We believe that there is nothing more common among educated Christian men than the conviction that the old opinions touching the inspiration of the Scriptures are unsound and indefensible; and it is fearful to witness the apathy with which this conviction is held in the presence of the conservative bigots who "learn nothing and forget nothing." While men write or speak about what ought to be done, and find responses in thousands of hearts and judgments, the majority look calmly on; but a man has only to write his own creed and stand by it to have his head chopped off, and the simple reason why the questioners do not enter their protest and undertake a crusade for its establishment is that they are afraid their heads will be chopped off. Otherwise, does anybody suppose they would be fools enough to delay their enterprise for a day? There certainly never was a time when a reformer with brains and convictions and enthusiasm can do a better business than he can do at present in the Protestant church,—a church in which the original spirit of Protestantism seems to be hopelessly lost,—a church in which a free expression of opinion is tolerated as little as it ever was in the Catholic church, and in which the conservative forces have it a little their own way.

A Novel Duel.

Several days ago a quarrel arose between two young men residing in this city, over certain remarks made by one of them in regard to the character of a third person, and a difficulty was prevented only by strenuous efforts on the part of mutual friends. Yesterday morning one of the parties received a challenge from the other to fight a duel on the sulphur spring bottom, near Summer street. The challenge was accepted and revolvers were selected. It was agreed that the two would meet at the appointed place at fifteen minutes to eight o'clock last night, without seconds. Promptly at the time mentioned the challenged person reached the spot, and a few minutes afterward a hack drove up and the challenger, accompanied by a physician and another gentleman, alighted. The recipient of the challenge said his intended antagonist had violated his agreement by bringing friends with him, whereupon the physician replied that he was not aware of the agreement, but that he would act as his second. Candles were lit and the aggrieved mortals with revolvers in their hands faced each other. The physician was instructed to give the signal for firing, but before he uttered the word the challenger discharged his weapon, the bullet passing through the shoulder of the coat of his antagonist near the neck. The other then fired and started toward the challenger, but was stopped by the physician, who examined the challenger and found that the ball had entered his left arm, inflicting a slight wound. The two men then shook hands and the party dispersed hastily, fearing that officers might discover them. This morning the challenged received a note from the challenger, in which the latter stated that he was perfectly satisfied. Thus the matter was dropped, and balmy peace reigns once more. The parties to this affair were Pat Mulloy and Lewis Bryan.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Editorial Intolerance.

We would like to have explained to us a matter which is, so far, too deep for our comprehension, namely, what good end is served when one editor calls another a liar, a drunkard, a receiver of bribes, an idiot, and a foe to good morals and religion.

While it is often true that some of these knights of the pen, who so freely sling billingsgate at each other, do so in mere sportive mood, and are pretty good friends, it is none the less a rather objectionable kind of playfulness which, in other countries, and in some parts of this, is apt to be followed by a streak of daylight through the wit who perpetrated the joke.

With all the questions of vital interest begging to be discussed; all the pleasant and enobling things to talk and write about; all the invention and progress of the age to keep pace with, and all the important local affairs presenting themselves at every turn to whoever has ears to hear and eyes to see them—the paper which can fill its columns with nothing better or more agreeable than coarse abuse of its contemporary, had better retire from business.

The laws of good taste as much demand that newspapers should be courteous to each other as individuals. There is no sense in the press gossiping like an old woman, and then affecting to elevate moral sentiment. Generally, it is safe to conclude that the major part of any scandal is false. And surely it is best to be cautious of giving it circulation without strong proof. The good that a bad man does is just as good as if he was a saint. As long as he administers to the affairs of an office justly and honorably his private life is his own concern, and certainly none of our business. If he begins to contaminate the public, it's time to look into the matter and express an opinion

One reason for this vice among newspapers—particularly small ones—is the strong sense of rivalry. Each feels crowded by, and jealous of, its neighbor. This is a mistake. The world has plenty of room for whatever is of use to it. If a paper is a good one, and meets the needs of its locality, it will be supported; otherwise, it ought to die.—Ex.

Concerning Mr. Hendricks.

[Norristown (Pa.) Gazette.]

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks appears to be gaining strongly in the south and west for the democratic nomination for the presidency. These sections of the country must elect; they are this time entitled to the candidate, and a generous democracy should concede the nomination to Mr. Hendricks by a unanimous vote. But for the democratic vote of Indiana in 1876, the democracy would have been nowhere.

Many persons are puzzled to understand what the terms "fourpenny," "sixpenny," and "tenpenny" mean as applied to nails. "Fourpenny" means four pounds to the thousand nails, or "sixpenny" means six pounds to the thousand, and so on. It is an old English term, and meant at first "ten pound" nails (the thousand being understood), but the old English clipped it to "tenpun," and from that it degenerated until "penny" was substituted for "pounds." When a thousand nails weigh less than one pound they are called tacks, brads, etc., and are reckoned by ounces.

Cure for Hog Cholera.

In the issue of the Democrat of July 11, 1879, we published a cure for hog cholera. The remedy was so very simple and the cost but a trifle, that we urged farmers to try it and report their success. The following is the recipe: "Break a box of concentrated lye into a barrel of clean water, and when the lye is dissolved give it to the hogs as a drink." William Johns, of Union township, lost 35 hogs from the cholera before reading the above remedy. He came to Anderson immediately, procured the lye and returning home, applied the remedy as directed and with entire success; every one of the sick hogs got well and none have sickened since. He says it seems to give them immediate relief. He had in the lot one that he thought so near dead that it was useless to try to save him, but second thought said try anyhow. So he rolled him on his back and poured some of the liquid down his throat. The next day he came up and "took his medicine" with the other hogs at the trough and the second day was perfectly well. If Mr. Johns had not been a reader of the Democrat, he thinks he would have lost his entire lot of hogs and also thinks his $1.50 was well invested. Suppose more of our farmers, who are suffering heavy losses with the cholera, try the above remedy and send us the result

Smith Chambers, of Richland township, heard of the Democrat's hog cholera cure, and came in on Monday and purchased some concentrated lye, and says he proposes to give it a thorough test and report the result. He has upward of a hundred hogs, and they were dying at the rate of 10 per day. We have heard of several more who have tried it with most satisfactory results. What we have is only hearsay, and will report results when we have facts. We still urge farmers to give it a thorough trial. If one box of the lye does no good, try it again. Later—Mr. Chambers was in the city yesterday, and informed us that not a single hog had died since drinking of the lye, and he is elated over the discovery.

Benefits of Whisky.

If there is no medical virtue in whisky why will a quart save the life of a person bitten by a rattlesnake? The son of the late Gen. Pillow saved his life that way the other day. During harvest a man near this city was bitten by a rattlesnake in the foot. He came into our office with his foot wrapped in bandages. We asked him is antidote for the poison. He said as soon as he got to the house he drank down a quart of whisky. It did not make him drunk or intoxicate him even, but it saved his life. In congestive chills we would risk a pint of good rye whisky sooner than all the other medicine in an apothecary shop. When one of our children was given up to die her physician told us to stand by her bedside during the night and administer a teaspoon full of whisky as often as she could swallow it and possibly it might take her through the third sinking spell. We did so and saved her life. With thousands of similar cases in the experience of almost every family in the country, we always turn a deaf ear to the harangues of temperance fanatics who take the extreme ground that there is no medical virtue in and no use for, the manufacture of alcohol. But we would think it just as reasonable to diet three times a day on quinine, because it breaks a fever and serves as a tonic to wasted nature and saves life when properly administered, as to practice the use of whisky as a daily beverage or any other intoxicating liquor. "There is reason in all things."

The Rights of Married Women.

Judge Gresham, of the United States court, has a question under consideration which is of great importance to married women, and involves the rights in real estate owned by bankrupt husbands. As the law now stands she takes an undivided one-third of his real estate in fee simple immediately upon a "judicial sale" of her husband and the sale made by the assignee is a "judicial sale" within the meaning of the law. It has been held by Judge Elliott, of the supreme court, that the sale of the real estate by the assignee is a judicial sale, and entitles the wife to partition. Under the bankrupt law a deed is executed by the judge or register of the court of the bankrupt's property to the assignee. It is claimed that this alone entitles the wife to partition.

—The following rather derogatory mention of Haskell, the "reformed clown," who is now spouting on temperance at Fort Wayne, appears in the Gazette, of a few days since, as a communication:

"The meeting at the rink last evening was interesting. Haskell, after talking thirty minutes, said he was a shouting Methodist, from his big toe-nail up to his ear. At this point Charlie Fletcher, who was sitting near the rostrum, arose, walked to the back part of the hall, and said: 'Gentlemen and ladies, if this man is a Methodist I withdraw from the church.' After this nothing occurred but the regular routine of talk for the next thirty minutes, when Haskell made a misstep and went off the stage, causing laughter. He said the saloon-keepers had raised $100 to fight him and his meeting, but he thanked God that one saloon-keeper would not assist them. 'His name is Jay Phillips. [Great applause].' At Warsaw, Johnnie Lathrop, a saloonist, was Mr. Haskell's favorite. He said his trade was never better than during Haskell's meetings, and he gave $1 and $2 per night for many nights. Is it just the right thing to play favorites among the saloon-keepers?"

Make the Table Attractive.

A great deal of enjoyment of a meal depends on the appearance of the table. Clean, smooth-ironed table-cloth and napkins are the first requisites. If these are carfully folded after each meal and laid in a box kept for the purpose, they will look well for several days. Where there are small children, a square white oilcloth, bound with scarlet braid or simply pinked around and laid under their plates, will prevent much soiling the table-cloth. A few bright, pretty dishes add much to the appearance of the table. Now, during the summer, a pretty ornament can be secured for every meal by merely running into the yard or garden and gathering a few buds and flowers and sprays of green for a bouquet. This habit, if once commenced, will so grow upon the taste that the spoons and napkins will hardly be more indispensable. It is well to let the children furnish the table bouquets from their own flower-beds. One day when our Willie gathered a cluster of apple buds and blossoms for the dinner table, a friend who sat at the table said to him, "Those blossoms if left on the tree would have grown to be apples." "I would just as soon have the blossoms," was the answer. A pretty ornament for the table is made by placing a goblet in a shallow glass fruit-dish and filling both with flowers. If the scarlet radishes are laid on the green lettuce in the salad bowl it makes almost a bouquet for it.—Correspondence Farm and Fireside.

The Young Girl Whose Beautiful Face Appears on the Silver Dollar.

[New York Times.]

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 11.—An interesting story in connection with the new silver dollar has just come to light here. The secret has come out, through the Record newspaper, as to who the young lady was that sat to Mr. Morgan, the designer, as a model for the head which appears on the coin. The lady who has thus been raised to fame, and whose name will be chronicled in history, is Miss Anna W. Williams, residing with her widowed mother at 1,023 Spring Garden street, in this city. In 1876 when Mr. Morgan was making designs for the coin, he was introduced to the lady by Mr. Thomas Eakins, a friend of the family. He desired to have a true representative of American beauty emblazoned upon the coin, and the profile of Miss Williams appeared to him as the best approach to it he had seen. The lady, who is of a very modest and retiring disposition, was induced to sit, and, after four or five interviews, sufficient sketches had been secured to proceed with the work. The artist wrought up the face afterward to its present appearance, as it is shown upon the coin. It would be impossible to recognize in it any resemblance to Miss Williams. The Grecian nose and the delicate lips had their foundation in her features, but the full rounded chin resembles more that of the wife of Mr. Morgan. Miss Williams is a blonde and considered quite pretty. She is a teacher in the girls' department of the House of Refuge, and about 18 years of age. This sets at rest the numerous stories which have been in circulation as to whom the face on the coin belongs to.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Mr. Joseph B. Frye, a Boston man of considerable wealth, was murdered two or three weeks ago in a manner so mysterious as to baffle the ingenuity of the best detective talent, and for a while it looked as if the authors of the foul deed would never be brought to justice. But the mystery has been cleared up by the confession of the murderers. The murdered man was alone in his house on the night of the tragedy, his family being absent from the city, and had invited three barbers, a Greek and two Italians, to spend the evening with him. He had somehow contracted a liking for these people, who were vastly his inferiors in every respect, and through the frequent visits of one of them to the house in a tonsorial capacity the trio of assassins gained a knowledge of the presence of rich plunder on the premises. His good-natured entertainment of the villains gave them the opportunity they sought, and, after partaking of his hospitality for an evening, they murdered him in the most horrible and fiendish manner, stabbing him nearly to death with a pair of barber's shears, and then finishing him off with a bullet in the head.

George B. Durfee, the defaulting Treasurer of the Mechanics' Mill, Fall River, Mass., languishes in jail, in default of $35,000 bail. Paine, the defaulting Treasurer of the American Linen Mill, has left Fall River.

A Saratoga dispatch reports Mrs. Stewart's physician as saying attempts have been made to negotiate for the return of Stewart's body from many sources. Several men now of reputable position in New York are connected with the robbery. Their names might yet be disclosed, and would startle the community. The thieves at first demanded $2,500,000 for the return of the body, but finally reduced their demand, step by step, to $300,000. It is thought Judge Hilton shows no intention at present to pay more than $25,000 for the return of the body, and would not compromise at any price in the way of promising immunity to the criminals.... Hilaire Latrimouille was hanged at Albany, N. Y., last week, for the murder of Catherine Dunsbach, near Cohoes, in April last.

THE WEST.

The wheat crop of Illinois this year is estimated by the State Board of Agriculture at 42,000,000 bushels.... A conflict between a Sheriff's posse and a body of lawless Italian coal-miners near Eureka, Nev., resulted in the killing of five of the latter, six others being seriously wounded.... One of Uncle Sam's mail coaches, bound from Santa Fe for Las Vegas, New Mexico, was lately halted by road agents. Two passengers—ex-Gov. Arny, of New Mexico, and J. H. Strahan, of New York—were robbed, and two agents rode off on the stage horses, and are still at large.

The remains of "Wild Bill" (James B. Hickok), who was murdered three years ago at Deadwood, were recently disinterred by his friends for the purpose of removing them to a new cemetery. "The coffin," says the Deadwood Pioneer, "was found in a remarkably-good state of preservation, and, upon removing the lid, the body was discovered thoroughly petrified. The features of the deceased were as natural as life, save that a whiteness overspreading all gave to the face an appearance of chiseled marble. The left cheek, through which the fatal bullet passed out, was slightly incrusted with mold, and as Charley attempted to brush it off he discovered the petrifaction."

Hon. James Boothby Burke Roche, brother and presumptive heir of the Viscount of Fermoy, who left New York not long ago for a hunting excursion in the far West, has been killed by the Indians on the Yellowstone river. Roche, who visited this country for the first time last year, returned to be married to a young lady in New York.... Reports from Utah represent that the feeling of bitterness between the polygamous Mormons and the "Gentiles" is becoming more intense, and there is danger of an open rupture in Salt Lake City.

A horrible assassination is reported from Williamstown Station, nine miles from Lawrence, Kansas. The victim was James Cotton, merchant and station agent. His head was completely severed from the body by a tremendous blow with an ax. The deed was perpetrated by robbers.... The oat crop of Illinois this year amounts to 54,654,560 bushels, grown on 1,631,139 acres, yielding an average of thirty-three and one-half bushels per acre. The total value of the crop is estimated at $12,060,162.

THE SOUTH.

A horrible suicide is reported from Athens, Ga. A woman was in the pains of parturition, her husband being absent, and no one in the room save a negro nurse. Frantic and crazed with the pains of delivery, she called to the nurse to bring her a razor that was lying on the bureau. The nurse did so, and the woman plunged the keen blade into her body, cutting herself open. She died in a few moments, in crazy agony. She was in labor with twins. The nurse who provided her with the razor has been indicted as accessory to the killing.... Thaddeus Baber, of St. Louis, Mo., crazed by jealousy, murdered his wife and mother-in-law by shooting them. All the parties were of low character.

There were nineteen deaths from yellow fever and sixty new cases of the disease at Memphis for the three days ending on the evening of Aug. 17. The total deaths for the week were forty-six, the total to that date, since the outbreak of the plague, 139, and the total number of new cases 531. A dispatch from Washington says that "Comptroller Porter, of the Treasury Department, says that the National Board of Health is of the opinion that contributions for the support of the people of Memphis in camp are absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of the yellow fever into other States, and that a requisition upon the $500,000 appropriated by Congress will be honored."

There were eleven deaths from yellow fever at Memphis for the forty-eight hours ending Aug. 19, forty-four new cases being reported to the Board of Health in the same period. A large number of Memphis refugees returned to the city, but such as could be got hold of by the authorities were incontinently hustled out of the city again, the policy of depopulation being regarded as the only feasible mode of breaking the backbone of the plague. The building recently occupied by C. E. Forbes and family, on Walker avenue, was burned. Five deaths from fever had occurred in the dwelling. It is thought that the neighbors living in the vicinity fired the building, as it was the most foul spot in the city.

An Atlanta dispatch says that the news of the sinking of Ingalo mountain, in North Georgia, is finally confirmed. It is a large mountain, being over two miles around the base, and has broken loose and fallen into what appears to be a chasm beneath. It first fell about two-thirds under ground, but has been sinking since.

At Waldron, Scott county, Ark., Sheriff Samuel Leming, while attempting to arrest Walter Malone for brutally assaulting his wife, was shot and mortally wounded. Malone attempted to escape, but was followed by a large crowd. He refused to surrender and was shot by some one of the crowd.

The Yazoo county difficulty, growing out of H. M. Dixon running as an Independent candidate for Sheriff, has culminated in the fatal shooting of Dixon by James H. Barksdale, the candidate for Chancery Clerk. The following is the Associated Press report of the killing: "Dixon, while passing down the west side of Main street, Yazoo, was hailed by Barksdale from the east side, who at the same time advanced to the middle of the street, armed with a double-barreled shot-gun. Dixon halted, and immediately placed his hand on his pistol, drawing it. Barksdale raised his gun to his shoulder: Dixon, seeing this, moved toward a stairway, when Barksdale fired, four buckshot taking effect in Dixon's back. Dixon then fired several times at Barksdale without effect. Barksdale missed the second shot. Dixon bled internally and died. The difficulty, it is represented by Barksdale's friends, was of a personal nature."

A dispatch from Yazoo City, Miss., says that a large Independent Convention, composed of both whites and blacks, met in Yazoo City and nominated a full ticket, as follows: Legislature, Wallace Johnson (colored), J. H. Burrus, J. L. Debrae; Sheriff, W. A. Brown; Chancery Clerk, Jesse E. Bell; Circuit Clerk, B. R. Grayson; Treasurer, N. Birmingham; Assessor, E. R. Harris; Coroner and Ranger, Sam Kirkall (colored).—Capt. Dixon was buried at Vaughan's Station. He had the largest funeral ever known at that place. James A. Barksdale, his murderer, was admitted to bail in $15,000 without examination.... For the two days ending on the evening of Aug. 21, fifty-three new cases of yellow fever were reported to the Memphis Board of Health; eleven deaths from the disease occurring in the same period. A large proportion of the new cases were blacks. At a meeting of the Howard Association it was determined to withhold the appeal to the charity of the nation until every dollar of the money in the treasury has been expended. Thieves infest the ill-fated city to an alarming extent, and unoccupied residences are nightly entered by them. Some go in parties, and are bold in their operations. The National Board of Health has decided not to furnish rations to those who remain in Memphis or other infected cities, and to furnish rations to persons in camps under supervision only for a limited time and under exceptional circumstances.

GENERAL.

The August returns to the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, show that the condition of spring wheat was 82, against 75 in 1878. The northern parts of New England and New York maintained their July condition. In the West and Northwest there was a general decline, caused by drought, rust, and chinch-bugs. The decline was most severely felt in Kansas, where the condition averages only 44. The condition of the whole country is 7 per cent. better than last year. The August returns show the condition of the oat crop at 91, against 100 in August, 1878. They show a slight improvement over the July condition, which averaged only 89. The decline in the Gulf States and in the trans-Mississippi States nearly overbalanced the improvement in all the other sections.

Burned: An elevator and 150,000 bushels of grain, at St. Louis, loss $140,000; the Locust Grove Hotel, at Bath, Long Island, loss $75,000; four stores at Lebanon, Ill., loss $30,000; several buildings at Canton, Mo., loss $20,000.

There was a free fight at Quebec Canada, last week, between the English and French members of the Ship-Laborers' Society, resulting in the death of four men and the wounding of some thirty others.

The American Ministers to Peru, Chili, and Bolivia have been instructed to represent to their respective Governments that the United States will be ready at any time when requested by each of those nations now at war to use its good offices to bring about peace. This step has been taken by our Government as an evidence of its friendly feeling toward these nations, and the interest of our South American commerce.

A heavy rain and wind storm swept along the Atlantic coast, from Wilmington, N. C., to New York city and farther East, last week. The wind blew a hurricane and the rain fell in great sheets, causing much damage to crops and buildings on land and destruction to vessels at sea.... A Washington dispatch says that "advices from diplomatic representatives and special agents in Europe continue to favor the opinion that the efforts of this Government to bring about a joint reconsideration of American and leading European powers of the bi-metallic standard question will prove successful."

The National Bar Association has just held its second annual session at Saratoga. Among the resolutions adopted was one demanding higher and more thorough legal education as a condition precedent to admission to the bar.... The people of Southern Canada and Western New York were startled, the other day, by an earthquake shock, accompanied by a low, explosive noise, similar to a discharge of cannon or a heavy thunder-clap. At Buffalo, people, especially merchants and clerks in stores, were startled by a sudden shaking of buildings, followed by the rattling of crockery and goods in the store. Glasses and bottles in various saloons were thrown from positions back of the bar, pictures broke from nails in walls, and tables were transferred from their places. Windows were loudly rattled, and bricks from high chimneys were thrown to the ground.

WASHINGTON.

William W. Rusch, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank, of Washington, D. C., is a defaulter to the amount of $60,000. His bondsmen pay $25,000, and he himself turns over his own property to the bank.

FOREIGN.

An improved feeling is reported in the iron trade in England, which appears to be in sympathy with the notable revival in the same branch of industry in this country.... There was no truth whatever in the report that Nellie Grant Sartoris had died in England. It was another and entirely different Mrs. Sartoris.... M. Perron, a Sub-Lieutenant of Hussars, and M. Riviere, editor of the Progress de Lyon, fought a duel with swords at Lyons, France. The latter was wounded in the lungs.... There were 475 deaths from yellow fever in the city of Havana during the month of July.

THE NATIONAL TREASURY.

A Valuable Privilege Extended to the Bankers.

A Washington telegram to the Chicago Tribune says that "the amount paid into the treasury during the present month by the banks subscribing to the 4-per-cent. loan has been $30,000,000. The amount of bonds still outstanding for which payment has not been made by the banks is about $45,000,000. Under the terms of subscription this entire sum should have paid to the United States Treasurer on July 21, the date upon which the last call for the 10-40s matured. The leading subscribing banks, however, have lately appealed to Secretary Sherman for an extension of time, upon the ground that to pay into the treasury at once that large amount of United States notes, and thus suddenly withdraw so much money from the channels of business, would seriously affect the money market, by forcing the banks summarily to call in their loans, and would at the same time depreciate the 4-per-cent. bonds. After a long discussion with the representatives of the subscribing banks, the Secretary has modified his order of March 26 last, which required the banks to pay for their bonds upon the expiration of ninety days from the date of subscription, and directed that drafts should hereafter be made upon them only when funds are required by the United States Treasurer to redeem the called bonds presented at the Treasury Department for redemption. In the modified order the Secretary has also directed the Treasurer to give the banks credit on their bond account for the called bonds presented by them for redemption. It is provided, however, that the subscribing banks must be prepared for final settlement with the Government on account of the refunding loan upon the 1st day of October. The effect of this new order is to allow the banks to retain the public funds until actually needed by the Treasurer of the United States to pay for called bonds presented for redemption.

A Talk with Sherman.

Says an Associated Press telegram from Washington: Secretary Sherman, being questioned concerning future financial operations of the treasury, replied:

"The treasury operations will probably, hereafter, have no material effect upon the money market. It is probable that before the 1st of October nearly all the called bonds outstanding, amounting to about $47,000,000, will be presented for payment, and will be paid for through the Clearing-House of New York. As much of this money will go to different parts of the country elsewhere than New York, the payment may cause some movement of currency from that city, but it will naturally soon come back again. After the refunding operations are closed out the treasury payments will be equal to our receipts, and no more, except the small balance of the fractional-currency fund which Congress required to be paid out."

"What will be the probable amount of gold imported in payment of breadstuffs, etc?"

"I do not think the movement of gold to this country will be very large. It is evident our exports will be greatly in excess of the imports, and mainly of breadstuffs, meats, and cotton; but the excess will be paid for largely by American securities held abroad. I wish they would all come back; still, some gold will come, and our domestic production of gold will stay here. This will give the banks an excellent opportunity to provide themselves with coin reserve instead of United States notes, of which the reserve now consists. United States notes will all be wanted in active use for the largest crops and the largest business we have ever had."

"How about the price of silver—has it advanced?"

"Yes; the price of silver is advancing somewhat. There is a better demand for silver for China; and, therefore, the price is higher in San Francisco than in New York. I should not be surprised if the silver on the Pacific coast should go to China, and that our supply for coinage should come from Colorado, Mexico and, perhaps, London."

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

It Is Treated with Contemptuous Feeling in England.

LONDON, Aug. 22.

The publication in the London Times day before yesterday of the announcement that the United States Government had filed a claim for $103,000, for damages committed upon American fisherman by the Fortune bay outrage, was the first intimation to the English people of the ill-temper of President Hayes' Cabinet. The Times, in its comments, says:

"The demand is generally received with ridicule. No one attaches to it any gravity of purpose or result, nor is there expressed any opinion to the effect that the claim is a just one that ought to or will be paid under any circumstances. The presentation of the demand by Minister Welsh upon the eve of his retiracy is held by gentlemen connected with public affairs to be only an effort of the American Minister of State to create for himself political capital.

The Globe says: "If it is the purpose of Mr. Evarts to disrupt the amicable relations which have existed for so many years between the two countries, he has inopportunely chosen for a subject of disagreement a question in which the people of neither country have any vital interest. It is a matter which must be considered, if considered at all, as a subject of dispute pertaining primarily to the State Departments, and, that resource failing, it should be referred to arbitration. The American Minister of State has certainly made an ill-advised choice out of the assumed complaints of the States against this country, and forces upon the successor of Mr. Welsh a controversy in which nothing is to be gained, as nothing has been lost.

"This fishery business, with all its aggravations, is of no interest to the people, and they laugh at the supposition of the alarmists that war may grow out of Secretary Evarts' diplomatic movement. And even if war should come, they say, England was never better prepared to defend her rights, punish her enemy, and wipe out the grievances of a century."

The Feeling at Washington—The Claim Must Be Paid.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.

The claim for $103,000 damages on account of illegal interference with American fishermen at Fortune bay, which has been presented to the British Government, is not a claim for the restoration of that or any other part of the Halifax award upon the ground of non-fulfillment of conditions.

The present claim is for specific grievances, and is to be considered without reference to the amount of the Halifax award, with which it has nothing to do.

Mr. Welsh was instructed to base the claim for $103,000 upon the actual loss and damage sustained by American fishermen in consequence of the violent invasion of their treaty rights at Fortune bay, and to obtain some security against the recurrence of similar offenses in the future.

Advices received by the State Department from the North American coast represent that, although no actual violence has occurred this year, our fishermen are deterred by apprehensions of violence from approaching the shore and carrying on their business with the freedom guaranteed to them by treaty, and that we are therefore deriving no benefit from our agreement with the British Government, and getting no return for our money. The state of feeling which prevails between our north-coast fishermen and British American fishermen, who consider themselves justified in using force to carry out local prohibitory laws, is regarded by our Government as extremely dangerous, and liable at any moment to lead to bloodshed and serious international misunderstanding, and it is therefore very anxious that some steps shall be taken by the British Government to do away with the local prohibitory laws of the Canadian provinces, which now practically override and nullify the treaty provisions of a far higher authority.

THE SPRAGUE-CONKLING SCANDAL.

Mrs. Sprague's Second Statement.

Mrs. Sprague made a supplementary statement to a reporter of the New York Sun, in the course of which she said:

"This whole miserable affair into which Senator Conkling has been wantonly dragged without a particle of reason or excuse originated in a business transaction between himself and my husband of so trivial a nature that you would be astonished that any sane man could consider it a source of jealousy. * * A year ago last July Mr. Sprague sent on to Washington a lot of young colts and young horses and fillies, which he had picked out for his own use at the winding up of his estate. He wished me to use those I wanted for riding and driving, and have the rest pastured somewhere near the city. He came on himself, and was looking about for a place to pasture them when Mr. Conkling told him of some farmer in the neighborhood who was taking care of his (Conkling's) horses. Mr. Sprague accepted the suggestion with pleasure, and Mr. Conkling introduced him to the farmer. When October came the man sent his bill, which I forwarded to Mr. Sprague in Rhode Island. This bill was sent again and again, and always returned unpaid, until I began to feel scandalized. The man then applied to Senator Conkling, and then threatened to sue him. Having, by the introduction of my husband, become surety for its payment, Mr. Conkling was finally forced to write to Mr. Sprague, telling him the position in which he was placed, and on a subsequent visit to Washington again called on Mr. Sprague and asked him to settle it. He told my husband that he could not be expected to pay any lady's bills, least of all a married lady's, and that it would be an insult to propose it, but that he (Mr. Conkling) would gladly give my husband the money to pay it out of his own pocket, and let him repay it whenever he would. When I heard of this I was naturally indignant, and chided my husband for allowing the Senator to make such an offer, and said that I would sell anything I had to raise the money rather than accept such assistance. And yet this petty, contemptible quibble was the commencement of all my husband's jealousy against Mr. Conkling. Even after that he consented to receive him, and voluntarily went to Washington in April last to get the Senator's legal opinion in regard to the troubles between himself and his creditors. There was perfect and entire cordiality between them then, although these scandals, it is now charged, had been known in Washington for years. There is not a word of truth in all of these atrocious reports. Mr. Conkling never paid me any attention that a wife could not honorably receive from her husband's friend, and it is false to say otherwise. * * * On Friday morning, when I came down to breakfast, I was told to my surprise that Mr. Sprague had come home suddenly at 3 o'clock in the morning, and had left again. I paid no attention to this, however, as his movements were always very erratic. He comes in on you like a ghost in the middle of the night, and at the most unseasonable hours, and hurries away in the same disquieting manner. I had learned to be used to these freaks, but Mr. Conkling, when told of the Governor's visit, seemed surprised at such conduct. I thought no more of it, and busied myself about my household affairs, while Senator Conkling took a seat on the lounge in the room, and was looking over the newspapers. After giving my orders I turned to poor Mr. Martin, who was sitting in the room, and at his request sat down to read a little to him. Just then Mr. Sprague came up the staircase. He walked slowly into the room, Mr. Conkling rising to meet him. Some words passed between them, which I did not hear, but the tone of which arrested my attention. I rose to my feet. Mr. Conkling walked straight across the room to where I stood, and said: 'Mrs. Sprague, your husband is very much excited, and I think it better for all of us if I should withdraw. If my departure puts you in any danger, so say, and I will stay, whatever the consequences.'

"He spoke in a very calm voice, although I knew he must have been excited. I told him not to mind me, but that if Mr. Sprague was in a passion it would be useless to argue with him, and might only lead to violence.

"The report that I wrote notes to Mr. Conkling at the time of his difficulty with Senator Lamar is a shameless falsehood. I certainly would not do so. Obviously it would be an improper and unladylike action. The same absolute contradiction is due from me of the stories of my remaining out at late hours and meeting Mr. Conkling at the Capitol. I am compelled to speak plainly of these outrageous slanders because of their wide publicity. Of all the crop of slanders which have sprung up, I loathe to speak of those things, but they have been dwelt upon until, instead of monstrous falsehoods, they appear to the public like admitted facts. At the proper time and in the proper place I will show the true character and origin of the persecution. I can honestly say that I want the truth about this matter to be known at the proper time."

Sprague's Statement.

Gov. Sprague has given an account of his meeting with Senator Conkling at Narragansett Pier, which is substantially as follows:

When he (Sprague) returned to the Pier from a visit to Maine and learned that Senator Conkling was at his house he was angry beyond measure, and the cause of his anger, he said, was the intimate relations between Senator Conkling and his wife, which had long been highly obnoxious to him. The existence of these relations was no secret to him. He had seen the scandal growing and becoming more and more public, and he spoke bitterly of the conduct of Senator Conkling toward his wife at Washington. Bitter words had often been spoken between his wife and himself because of that intimacy. She was fully aware how obnoxious to him was that intimacy and what were his feelings toward Senator Conkling. But in spite of all this, said Mr. Sprague, in spite of all the scandal and the violence to his feelings, that she should invite Senator Conkling to be a guest at his house during his absence, and that Conkling should have the brazen effrontery to come there at all, incensed him beyond all measure. As he expressed it, Senator Conkling was trying to do for his home in Rhode Island what he had already done for his home in Washington, and he had determined to put an end to it at once and forever.

With this deliberate intention he hurried back to Canonchet as soon as he heard Conkling was there.

He found Conkling in the house alone, and ordered him out on the instant. Conkling refused to go. A few high words ensued, and then he (Sprague) went up stairs to get his shotgun. He found that he had no percussion-caps for his weapon, and went off to the village to get some. As soon as he could procure them he hurried back, and Conkling was still there. He again ordered him to leave, and Conkling refused to go, and tried to mollify Sprague and excuse himself from leaving so suddenly, on the ground that he had no carriage for himself or his baggage, which was not even packed. Thereupon Mr. Sprague drew out his watch and told Conkling that he would give him thirty seconds to get out, and that if he was not out by that time he (Mr. Sprague) would blow his brains out. Conkling immediately left, being driven to Billington's cafe, at the Pier. Sprague followed him thither, and again accosted him, and asked him abruptly if he was armed. Conkling, bristling up, replied that he was not; that if he was he (Sprague) would not go on as he was going. Without noticing this threat, Sprague replied:

"Then go and arm yourself, and hereafter go armed. I don't intend to shoot an unarmed man; but I tell you now that if you ever cross my path again I will shoot you on sight."

With that threat Gov. Sprague jumped into his carriage again and drove off.

Hard Times in Europe.

A gentleman just returned to New York from Europe describes the crop prospects of Europe as absolutely hopeless.

"It was not until after seven weeks of journeying in England and on the continent," he said, "that I saw a day of sunshine. It was rain, mist or cloud all the time."

He describes the crops in England as ruined and the farmers discouraged. In Europe the condition is not much better. The soil is full of moisture. This misfortune will benefit the American farmer. The demand from Europe for grain will be immense, and draw heavily on the magnificent crops here.

His view of European affairs is very discouraging, and he prophesies evil for the United States. The poor of England and the continent are worse off than ever before.

Tens of thousands of workingmen are out of employment, and not likely to get any for months. To avoid riots and dangerous discontent, the authorities will aid in getting these people to America. As a result, we shall have an immigration greater than known for years, and the people who come will compete with the laborers here who now complain of too low wages. It is an evil which, he says, is sure to follow the misfortunes which have befallen the old countries.

THE STEWART GRAVE ROBBERY.

[New York Telegram.]

Another phase of the negotiations for Stewart's body is published, making an extraordinary story. On a Monday in January last a lawyer in this city received by mail a letter signed "Romaine," inclosing $100 as a retainer, and asking him if he would consent to act as attorney for the negotiations for the return of Stewart's body on the payment of $250,000. On the same day came a package by express, to which the letter referred, and which, on being opened, was found to contain silver knobs and part of a handle belonging to A. T. Stewart's coffin. The lawyer was requested to answer by a personal whether or not he would accept the retainer. He did so, and, in a few days, received a further retainer of $250 and a second parcel containing the coffin plates, several other silver handles and still more knobs. The parcels and letters came from Canada. Assurances were also given that the body was in a perfect state of preservation.

The lawyer took the letters and articles forwarded as proof of the possession of the body to Superintendent Walling. Subsequently Judge Hilton was informed, and the terms of the robbers were mentioned to him as being $250,000.

The lawyer, who was Patrick H. Jones, asserted that he did not know the thieves nor did he know where the body was; that he supposed they applied to him because, possibly, when he was Register or Postmaster, they had served under him.

Judge Hilton declared that the proposition was preposterous; that he would not pay a cent for the body without securing the robbers, and finally dismissed the lawyer with the insulting declaration that he would have nothing to do with such negotiations.

The negotiations were continued in hopes that the detectives might get some clew, but nothing came of it. Subsequently negotiations were opened directly with Mrs. Stewart, through a firm of Wall street lawyers of such great prominence and character that good faith could not be doubted—Evarts, Southmayd and Choate. A member of the firm laid the correspondence of Romaine before her, and, though she asserted her absolute confidence in the assurances of Judge Hilton that the body had been recovered and was at the cathedral, the lady read them over and requested an explanation of Judge Hilton. He satisfied her that the letters were unworthy of consideration, and she returned them to the lawyer as such, and immediate negotiations were broken off.

It seems that all this time Mrs. Stewart has been led by Mr. Hilton to believe that the body had been recovered, and it now became necessary to undeceive her. Hilton expressed a willingness to pay $25,000, the original reward, but would not pay more without securing the thieves.

All hopes that the refusal to negotiate for the return of the body on the terms named, or any other than the payment of the reward of $25,000, which offer Jones transmitted by mail to Romaine in Montreal, would lead the thieves in desperation to reveal themselves, were finally abandoned by Judge Hilton about three weeks ago, and he has since then reopened negotiations; this time, it is believed, with the purpose of buying the body outright, and without any attempt to secure the thieves. It is clear that all efforts heretofore have been baffled.

There is no question that Romaine is the selected agent of the robbers and has the body in charge. He has carefully concealed his identity, and his hand-writing is so disguised as to baffle any attempts to detect him by that means.

The new and pending negotiations were opened by Judge Hilton himself, who, on July 24, caused to be inserted in the Herald the following personal:

"Canada: Counsel desires to communicate."

It is not signed. Mr. Jones has as yet received no response to it. Meantime the body remains in its concealment known only to the robbers, and is said to be in a state of careful preservation.

WAR ON THE MORMONS.

[Washington Telegram.]

Mr. Hayes expresses the greatest confidence in being able to break up the institution of polygamy. He has been very much surprised to learn that the number of Mormons actually practicing polygamy is so small. In the city of Salt Lake there are only twelve Polygamists. Throughout the Territory there is, of course, a much larger number. It has been Mr. Hayes' intention to do all he could to break up polygamy from the first of his administration, but he could not act until the test case of Reynolds had been disposed of. It is now proposed at the coming full term of court in Utah to have every polygamist in Salt Lake City indicted and prosecuted. It is thought that such a vigorous policy will persuade the Mormons to renounce polygamy. If that is done there will be no further trouble. The Mormons will be left undisturbed in their religion, except in this plurality of marriages. The Mormons claim that this is a part of their religion, but this administration will refuse to recognize it, and will enforce the laws of the United States upon the subject of marriages. Whatever resistance is made by the Mormons will be useless, as the prosecutions will be most rigidly enforced until the Mormons will agree to conform to the laws that control the rest of the country.

[Salt Lake Telegram.]

Apostle Joseph F. Smith, in the Salt Lake Tabernacle, yesterday afternoon, delivered a furious speech, which has greatly added to the popular excitement. He said the Mormons had met their enemies with their own weapon, the Bible, and defeated them every time. Our enemies, not content with defeat, have persecuted and maligned us and driven us from our settlements in Missouri and Illinois for no cause whatever. By these abominable acts these people have been subjected to hardships almost unparalleled. The speaker enlarged upon the part he had borne in these persecutions and said he did not want to see such terrible cruelties repeated. We have been turning the "other cheek" long enough, and it is now about time to change our policy. We have been foully misrepresented and spit upon. We have suffered the presence of that damnable sheet among us, which would not be borne in any other community. We have submitted to its abuse and misrepresentations long enough, and now it must be stopped. [This was greeted with "Amen!" from the whole congregation.] The gun-shops have been busy selling firearms and taking old ones to repair.

Four Persons Burned to Death.

A New York dispatch says "the burning of the Locust Grove Hotel and pavilion has gained tragic interest from the discovery of the charred and blackened remains of four bodies. The victims are J. W. Pierce, the manager of the hotel; William Schubardt, night watchman; Kate Raffer, cook; and a kitchen girl known as Louise. A maid and two children are reported missing, and the search for remains will be continued as rapidly as possible.

The fire was one of the swiftest known, the entire structure falling into ashes in twenty minutes. A lady and gentleman sitting on the piazza barely had time to enter a room close at hand and rescue their sleeping children before the walls fell in. The structure was of the very lightest construction, and filled with seasoned pine.

The view of the fire from the adjoining neighborhood was grand. It burned with a clear, white flame that looked like a large gas jet, and gave out a bright and intense light.

The suddenness of the fire was startling. Persons sitting on the porch of a house at Bath noticed what appeared to be a ball of fire shoot out into the bay, and five minutes later the entire hotel was in flames. The light dimmed even the brightness of the electric light on Coney island, and vast clouds of smoke arose in the air and drifted seaward. Had the wind been in a different direction, there is no doubt the flames would have destroyed many houses along the shore, as they are built close together and Bath is thickly settled.

The guests were all in bed, and had much jewelry and money with them. A Cuban guest is said to have lost $5,000, and a New York merchant $4,000, which were in their rooms.

—Other burnings: At Parker's Landing, Pa., 85,000 barrels of oil went up in smoke; at West Bend, Wis., eleven buildings, valued, with their contents, at $40,000, were destroyed; Ramsey's tannery, Buffalo, N. Y., and a portion of Dr. Pierce's chemical works at Flint, Mich., were reduced to ashes, involving losses respectively of $30,000 and $20,000.

AN OLD LETTER.

A Relic of Colonial Days—Benjamin Franklin on a New England Sunday.

Among the many valuable papers in the possession of the New Haven Colony Historical Society is a letter deposited with the society several years ago by the late Hon. Ralph L. Ingersoll. The letter was written by Dr. Franklin, to Jared Ingersoll, of New Haven, in 1762, and is interesting not only by reason of its antiquity, but also by reason of the manner in which Sunday in New England is compared by the writer with that of another part of the world. The following is an exact copy of the letter:

PHILADA, Dec. 11, 1762.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for your kind Congratulations, it gives me pleasure to hear from an old Friend; it will give me much more pleasure to see him. I hope therefore nothing will prevent the Journey which you propose for next Summer and the Favor you intend me of a Visit. I believe I must make a journey early in the Spring to Virginia, but purpose being back again before the hot weather. You will be kind enough to let me know before hand what time you expect to be here, that I may not be out of the way, for that would mortify me exceedingly. I should be glad to know what it is that distinguishes Connecticut Religion from common Religion—communicate, if you please, some of those particulars that you think will amuse me as a virtuoso. When I travelled in Flanders I thought of your excessively strict observance of Sunday, and that a man could hardly travel on that day among you upon his lawful occasions, without Hazard of Punishment, while where I was every one travelled if he pleased, or diverted himself in any other way, and in the afternoon both high and low went to the Play or the Opera, where there was plenty of Singing, Fiddling, and Dancing. I looked around for God's Judgments, but saw no signs of them. The Cities were full of Inhabitants, the markets filled with plenty, and the people well favored and well clothed; the Fields well tilled; the cattle fat and strong; the Fences, Houses, and Windows all in Repair; and no Old Tenor anywhere in the Country; which would almost make me suspect that the Deity is not so angry at that offense as a New England Justice.

I left our friend McJackson well. And I had the great happiness of finding my little family well when I came home; and my friends as cordial and more numerous than ever. May every prosperity attend you and yours. I am, dear friend, yours affectionately,

B. FRANKLIN.

A Rat-Skin Suit.

An ingenious individual of Liskeard, Cornwall, has, for some time past, been exhibiting himself in a dress composed from top to toe of rat skins, which he had been collecting for three years and a half. The dress was made entirely by himself; it consists of hat, neckerchief, waistcoat, trousers, tippet, gaiters and shoes. The number of rats required to complete this suit was 670; and the individual, when thus dressed, appears exactly like one of the Esquimaux described in the travels of Parry and Ross. The tippet or boa is composed of the pieces of skin immediately round the tails of the rats, and is a very curious part of the dress, containing 600 tails.—English paper.

OHIO POLITICS.

Speech of Congressman A. J. Warner.

Delivered at Williamsport, Noble County, Ohio.

MR. PRESIDENT AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: Certain of the issues which will be presented to the people in the approaching canvass, while not new, nevertheless have not, until recently, been the occasion of much public discussion. Our fundamental laws have been deemed so secure that little concern respecting them has been elicited; but we are now called upon to meet the encroachment of power upon constitutional guarantees hitherto unassailed.

If any one principle is supreme in our constitution it is, that, primarily, all rightful powers of government come from the people. When, therefore, a hundred and three years ago the people composing the thirteen colonies of this country declared their independence of Great Britain, they resumed to themselves all powers of government. In their sovereign capacity they organized States, formed a confederation of all the States for their common defense, waged common war for their independence, and finally transformed the confederation into a General Government, with powers limited and defined by a written constitution. The exercise of such powers as pertained alike to all the States they intrusted to the General Government. But the same people that delegated to the General Government its powers also framed the constitution and organized the Governments of the States; only in the latter case the people of each State acted by themselves, and, in the language of that day, "every power, jurisdiction and right which is not by the said constitution clearly delegated to the Congress of the United States, or the departments of the Government thereof, remains to the people of the several States or to their respective State Governments to whom they may have granted the same." To the Governments of the States alone was intrusted the exercise of those powers which pertain especially to the people composing the several States; but these powers are complete and sovereign in their sphere as the powers delegated to the General Government. The constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land, and power is given to execute them throughout the Union. But no less are the constitution and laws of the State, not in conflict with the constitution of the United States, supreme within the State; and the General Government has no more right to infringe upon the powers intrusted to the States than the States have to set aside the laws of the General Government. The Supreme Court has confirmed this doctrine in a recent decision by Chief Justice Waite: "The very highest duty of the States, when they entered into the Union under the constitution, was to protect all persons within their boundaries in the enjoyment of these 'inalienable rights with which they were endowed by the Creator.' Sovereignty for this purpose rests alone with the States."

Macaulay says the power of the English King "was limited by three great constitutional principles, so ancient that none can say when they began to exist, so potent that their natural development continued through many generations," and "produced the order of things under which we are now living." The King could not legislate; he could not himself levy taxes; he must rule according to law. Nor could he keep a standing army without the consent of his Parliament. These great principles constitute the trunk of English liberty and of the tree of liberty our fathers planted in this country. How carefully each one of these great fundamental principles was guarded in the formation our Government! "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States"—not in a Congress and a President. The entire control of revenues, taxation and appropriations is given to the legislative branch of the Government. Congress—not the President—shall have power to raise and support armies," but even Congress may not make an appropriation for an army for a longer time than two years.

So solicitous were the founders of our Government respecting a standing army that several of the States objected to the constitutional provision permitting any standing army at all. The convention of New York resolved "That standing armies in time of peace are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be kept up except in case of necessity." Other States urged that to appropriate money for a standing army should require two-thirds of both houses, and with one voice it was declared that at all times the military should be under strict subordination of the civil power.

The constitutions of most of the States prohibited the presence of any troops within a certain distance of the polls. It has been the law of England for 200 years that troops should not be nearer than two miles of any polling place on the day of election. In the light of history, then, what think you, my fellow-citizens, of an Executive veto against the act passed only in May last, not to do away with the army—not to lessen its efficiency where needed—but to prohibit its use at the polls?

Now let me appeal, my fellow citizens, to your candid judgment. How long do you believe the right to exercise freely your choice at elections would remain to you if the Executive be given the right to use the army at the polls? Would it exist half a generation? The present Executive might not use such powers against the liberties of the people, or to perpetuate party control. The next, possibly, might not, but, as sure as the power and right to use it exists, the time will come when it will be so used; some man will appear who, for power or for spoils of office, will use it.

Twenty-five years ago one of the founders of the Republican party, Mr. Seward, in the strongest terms, condemned the use of the army in any way as civil police. He said: "Civil liberty and a standing army for the purpose of civil police have never yet stood together. * * * If the founders of the constitution had been told that, within seventy years from the day on which they laid its solid foundation, and raised its majestic columns, a standing army would have been found necessary and indispensable merely to execute municipal laws, they would have turned shuddering away from the massive despotism which they had erected."

The only safe way is to take away the power, and that is what Congress tried to do. Failing in the repeal of the law, Congress refused the appropriation of money for such a purpose. You must say whether or not they did right.

The majority in Congress sought the repeal of another law—a law which had its origin, as Senator Thurman showed to the Senate, with the Republican Union League of New York city; a law to enable the party in power to control elections through Supervisors and Deputy Marshals. Under this law a Marshal appointed by the President may appoint Deputy Marshals without limit, at $5 a day, to be paid out of the public treasury, to stand at the polls, with power to arrest without warrant. Under this law in 1878 between 4,000 and 5,000 Supervisors and between 11,000 and 12,000 Deputy Marshals were appointed, at a cost to the people of $285,000. In New York alone nearly 2,000 Deputy Marshals were appointed, many of them from the very slums of the city. In 1878 over 3,000 arrests were made, but all were dismissed without trial after the polls were closed. In the city of St. Louis in 1876 over 1,800 Deputy Marshals were appointed, at a cost to the Government of $20,000, and, as shown by sworn testimony, no one could be appointed unless pledged to vote the Republican ticket. By this partisan machinery Republican Representatives were returned.

Now should such laws be retained on the statute books? Are you willing to be taxed for such purposes? Give the Executive control over such machinery, and with it the right to use the army to back up the Marshals, and how long will elections remain free? These laws were not enacted to secure free and fair elections, but to perpetuate party rule. It is party machinery, the whole of it. Would the Republican minority in Congress, do you think, insist upon keeping these laws upon the statute books if there was a Democratic President and only Democratic Marshals and Deputy Marshals were to be appointed? Laws should be as fair for one as for another. Nor were these laws made for the South, as has been claimed, so much as for close districts, and especially the cities in the North, where elections can be best manipulated. Five-sixths of the money expended under them to pay Marshals has been expended in Northern States. The demand for their repeal did not come from the South. It is not a Southern issue. It is a demand that elections shall be kept free; that bayonets shall not come to the polls, nor Marshals with power to arrest without warrant, and with money taken from the treasury to bribe and corrupt.

To the exercise of no power by the General Government was there more objection offered in the formation of the constitution than the right to make or alter regulations respecting the election of Representatives. More than half of the State Conventions objected to this provision, and urged that it should be taken away. This is the language of the New York Convention: "That the constitution will not make or alter any regulation in this State respecting the times, places and manner for holding elections for Senators or Representatives."

The constitution imposes upon the Legislature of each State the duty of prescribing the times, places and manner of holding elections, with, however, a provision, "Confiding," to use the language of Hamilton in the Federalist, "the ultimate right of regulating its own election to the Union itself."

Though Congress may make or alter by law such regulations, there is no warrant anywhere for Congress to provide for the appointment of United States officers to execute the laws or supervise the carrying out of regulations made by State Legislatures, and to interfere thereby, as they necessarily do under the law as it stands, with the election of State officers. That is a manifest conflict of authority that can not safely be permitted to exist.

A majority in Congress, I say, sought the repeal of these laws. The President, at the demand of his party, interposed his veto. Congress, then, having appropriated money for all other legitimate objects, made an appropriation for regular Marshals and their general Deputies—providing, however, that no part of the money appropriated should be used to pay Deputy Marshals to attend elections. But, for the fifth time, the Executive, veto was interposed to thwart the will of the majority of Congress. The President, in effect, by his veto said: If I cannot have the money without conditions—have it to pay Deputy Marshals to stand at the polls—I will not have it at all. Thus, for the first time in our Government, the President assumes to exercise dictatorial control over Congress in the matter of appropriations. Why, my friends, control over revenues, taxation and appropriations constitutes the most important safeguard against despotic power known to free Governments. Indeed, that there are free Governments at all is due more to the control over the purse-strings retained by the people than to any other cause. In no constitutional Government has King, or Emperor, or President held control over taxes or appropriations since the middle ages. Charles I. undertook to levy taxes, to raise and appropriate money without Parliament; but it called forth the resistance of Hampden and Pym, and the head of Charles went off on the block.

When Congress surrenders to any Executive its absolute control over the revenue and appropriations, or yields to his dictation, it lets go the most important restraining power in a free Government. It is for Congress, and not the President, to say for what objects money shall be appropriated and how it shall be applied. Congress, too, may in its discretion withhold appropriations from any objects, and for its acts in so doing Congress alone is responsible and must answer to the people. The President has no responsibility, and no power in this regard.

POWERS AND SAFEGUARDS MUST STAND TOGETHER.

The more I study the nature and attributes of our system of Government and compare it with the Governments of other countries and with Governments that have existed in other times, the more convinced I am that it is, in form, the best Government on the earth. I believe that none was ever more wisely calculated or better adapted to "promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty" to a people than our Government as framed by our fathers, and that it is, therefore, the sacred duty of this generation to preserve and transmit it with its powers and its safeguards equally unimpaired.

It is only when we consider the greater importance to the citizen of peace at home, and local security to person and property, that the infinite value of our local system of Government becomes apparent. The most striking feature in our system to a foreigner is the large share of power locally exercised.

Sir James McIntosh, in discoursing on 'the safest form of Government, one affording the surest "protection against wrong, both to their rulers and their fellows," says: "The best security which human wisdom can devise seems to be the distribution of political authority among individuals and bodies, the separate interests and separate characters corresponding to the variety of classes of which civil society is composed, each interested to guard their own order from opposition by the rest; each also interested to prevent any of the others from seizing an exclusive, and, therefore, despotic power, and all having a common interest to co-operate in carrying on the ordinary and necessary administration of government." * * * "Such governments," he adds, "are with justice peculiarly and emphatically called free, and in ascribing that liberty to the skillful combination of mutual dependence and mutual check I feel my own conviction greatly strengthened by calling to mind that in this opinion I agree with all the wise men who have ever deeply considered the principles of politics, with Aristotle, Polybius, with Cicero and Tacitus, and Bacon and Machiavel, with Montesquieu and Hume."

And it will be an unhappy day for this country when the General Government is permitted to absorb the functions designed to be exercised by local authorities. There seem to be those, however, who think it has come to be the legitimate province of the General Government to enter into and make laws at discretion for the States, and with its own officers to execute all laws. It was the doctrine of Jefferson that the nearer Government was kept to the people the more secure Government was, and the more secure, also, were the liberties of the people. If by the whole each is protected, then all are protected. That is a Government of the people, by the people and for the people. But if we accustom ourselves to look for protection, not from our neighbors, but from an extraneous power, then it will be too late to complain if our liberties are determined by the same power. Let us be candid, then, and, as citizens of this State, in our sovereign capacity as voters, answer whether we will invite the assumption of the functions of the State by the General Government. Will you give up entirely the autonomy of the State? I apprehend no sooner than you would give up the Union. Eighteen years ago, to save the Union from the rock of secession, a million of men took up arms; shall we permit it now to be swallowed up in the whirlpool of general power by our consent or our apathy?

The question of the right of secession has been forever settled by the tribunal of last resort—war. That decree has been ineffaceably stamped on a hundred battle-fields, and there can be no reversal. By the same ordeal, slavery, that excrescence left on our free institutions, went out forever.

Among the first to take arms, and among the foremost to bear them in that conflict for the Union, were the gallant men who have been chosen leaders in the political contest now before us. When the appeal to arms was made they went forth ready to sacrifice all to preserve intact their Government and their country. Better leaders in that conflict, truer, braver men and officers there were none. Greater suffering was not borne, greater sacrifice was not made, nor does the roll of honor bear a worthier name than that of Gen. Rice, second on your ticket, whose own blood stained more than one battle-field, and whose supreme devotion to his country was at last sealed by both blood and limb on the field of Kenesaw. Happily, that war was not waged in vain; the Union was restored and fast welded. Not a star was lost from the constellation of States, and now within one of three times thirteen stars shine in that galaxy. But we did not wage war for the Union to break down the States or to overthrow any of the safeguards of our liberties. We did not fight battles that the President might have power to send the bayonet to the polls or call up suddenly armies of irresponsible officers to interfere with or control elections. Liberty and Union must go together.

But there are those who insist that a war of sections shall still go on, and some people who took a very long range view of the war, and a very distant interest in it while it lasted, boldly come to the front now, and insist that there has not been fighting enough. For one, I confess I do not share that feeling. Gen. Hooker has well said that the soldier has enemies only in war; but the hates of the politicians are perpetual. That is what is the trouble now. It is not the men who had the battles to fight that wish to keep alive the hates and animosities of the war. It is the politicians, who hope by appeals to prejudice and passions and the use of partisan election machinery to perpetuate their hold upon office, and to continue that system of finance by which the people have been robbed of their property, and labor robbed of its earnings.

[illegible] true soldier despises, the attempts of mere political traffickers to open fresh wounds already healed. What good, I pray, to man, woman or child in this broad land can come from such sentiments or acts? But, I apprehend, my friends, there will be but a poor showing of that traditional bloody garment in this campaign. What a picture its flourish suggests! There, at the front, when war was upon us, were our gallant leaders, with their lives in their hands, plunging into the hell of battle to save their country. Yonder, far away beyond the sound of the loudest gun, the other chosen leader, displaying his bolt of calico—already 60 cents and going higher! Now, when the war is over, and all its fruits gathered and saved, our leaders, only too glad, extend the welcome hand of peace; while our good citizen who leads the other side has just got his martial ardor stirred up, and seems to think that there has not been blood enough shed, and, with a shake of the red flag, says: "Rally once again." I would say nothing to reflect personally upon the Republican candidate; but we must be pardoned if we are forced into a little derision at the tactics our opponents resort to. For, instead of using arguments, they raise the old war-cry or the cry of "Rebel Brigadiers" in Congress, and charge that, failing to break up the Union with arms, they seek now to accomplish this purpose in the halls of Congress. I leave it to you if this is not the burden of all their speeches and their answer to every argument. A charge more false or more unjust to Southern Representatives in Congress could not be made. The demand for the repeal of partisan election laws and to prohibit the use of the army at the polls did not come from the South, and I feel called upon on this occasion to say, and I do say it with the utmost sincerity, that in all that now concerns our common welfare as one nation and one people I believe the Representatives in Congress from South Carolina or Georgia are as true, as sincere, to-day, as those from Ohio or Massachusetts. If they have more soldiers in Congress than the North where is the blame? They certainly had no more in the war.

Perhaps that old rhyme,

God and a soldier all men doth adore
In time of war, and not before;
When the war is o'er and all things righted,
God is forgotten and the soldier slighted.

is less applicable to the South than to the Republican party in the North.

Since the war, and especially since the convulsion of 1873, questions of currency and debt have absorbed a large share of public attention. Nor is public solicitude likely soon to be withdrawn from them. They are not subjects that down at our bidding. Property, business, labor and, with not a few, the very means of existence are bound up in them. For the past five or six years this country has suffered a business paralysis, in severity and continuance unlike any depression ever experienced before. And if we ask what has been the compensation for the tremendous sacrifices of these many years—the destruction of our industries, the bankruptcies, the losses of property, the heart-breakings—what will be the answer? Resumption? Not fairly. But greenbacks have been made equal in value to gold. That is what the Secretary of the Treasury boasts of. That is the magnum bonum. In one place in all the United States—one place in thirty-eight States and nine Territories—one place between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, between the lakes and the gulf—where if a man brings $50 in greenbacks he can get gold for it! Nevertheless, no one questions the fact that coin and paper have been equalized. But have the banks resumed specie payments? Can we all have our choice as to the kind of money we will take—gold or paper? In England, France or Germany one can take his choice everywhere in every transaction, and the result is that a large percentage of the common currency of those countries is coin. We are a long way from that kind of resumption in this country, and cannot have it with $330,000,000 (and which may be any sum larger) of bank notes redeemable in $246,000,000 of legal-tender treasury notes. So we may at once dismiss that phase of resumption and confine ourselves to things as they are—paper made equal to coin.

How has that been accomplished? Surely by no process that a patent can be claimed on. The paper currency has been reduced in volume until there is no more paper money in the country than would be about our share of the world's stock of gold if we had no paper; and, having been made receivable for dues, it has been made to do all that gold could do within the limits of the United States.

For it is a well settled principle in monetary science, that if any country using paper money limits the volume to an amount not greater than would be the share of metallic money that would in the course of trade fall to it, then the paper money, within the limits of such a country, would stand at a level with the metallic money. That is just what we have done. Our volume of money now, if we count every dollar that actually forms part of the circulation, gives not more than $14 per capita—less rather than more than that.

As long as the revenues equal expenditures, the coin locked up in the treasury, together with greenbacks held specially for redemption purposes, must and will, under existing law, remain in the treasury as a hoard, and, while so held it no more affects prices and can no more be properly counted as part of the circulation of the country than so much not yet out of the mines.

The population of the world using gold as money (supplemental with more or less silver, it may be) is about 300,000,000, and, taking out a few large hoards that ought not to be counted, and there is probably from $4,000,000,000 to $4,250,000,000 of gold money. If this were divided evenly (but I do not say it ever would be) it would give about $14 per capita for this whole population of 300,000,000, or in the neighborhood of $700,000,000 for the United States. This, if not exactly, sufficiently illustrates how our currency has been brought to an equivalency with gold. Let us note here, also, that the only way to maintain the equivalency of paper and gold, or gold resumption, if you please, is to keep our volume restricted to the gold measure, which means that prices must be kept there, too. It must be plain, I think, that if the use of silver was co-extensive with that of gold, the distributive share of the two metals that would fall to the various countries embracing the population given would be much greater than when limited to gold alone, and, by as much as the volume of metallic money would be greater than with gold and silver, by so much might the paper volume be increased, and still its equivalency with gold be maintained. The significance of this principle will appear more clearly as, further on, we consider the change that has been made by the demonetization of silver.

But first let us see what change has been required in the currency of the country or has been made in order to produce the results which have been reached.

In 1865 the volume of the currency was at the highest, and counting, besides the bank notes only that which was full legal tender and in actual circulation, and excluding $115,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness and $576,000,000 of two and three-year 7.30 treasury notes of $50 and upward, part of which were receivable for dues from the Government, and we had $983,000,000. But, inasmuch as the population of the States lately in rebellion had not come then to use to any appreciable extent this currency, the population actually sharing it could not have been more than 25,000,000 or 26,000,000, which gives about $49 per capita. But by 1873, under the policy of contraction, the total volume had been reduced to $750,000,000—I give official figures—while the population that were using it at that time was from 41,000,000 to 42,000,000. That gave only $18 or $19 per capita, a reduction of $30 to each person in eight years! Is it any wonder that a crash came? The mystery, though difficult to explain, has been why it did not come sooner. In the first place, while business is going on briskly, everything would naturally brace against a fall. But the main causes were these:

First, the enormous sales of bonds of all kinds—Government, municipal and railroad—to foreign countries, which brought us capital in various forms, the use of which helped to keep business going and to keep up prices, and second, and chiefly, the enormous expansion of credit that took place during this period.

Bank loans increased in ten years from $648,000,000 to $1,582,000,000; bank deposits, which are made up very largely of credits, arising from discounts, increased in the same period from $330,000,000 to $894,000,000, while the money which the national banks held went down $208,000,000 to $134,000,000.

Credit in other forms increased in proportion. The debts of all kinds in the United States in [illegible] have been estimated variously at from 50 to 60 per cent. of the [illegible] value of the property of the country, while the money did not exceed 3 per cent. of the property valuation. A credit expansion, therefore, of even 10 per cent. is quite sufficient to account for the maintenance of prices while the reduction of $233,000,000 in the currency volume was being made.

But the panic came, and the credit-bubble bursted, and a general tumble in prices followed. In a country like France, where more money and less credit is used, such a thing could not well have happened. What, then, was done? Good political economy, certainly, and sound statesmanship, too, one would think, would have dictated, just at that time, an increase, if anything, in the currency volume, to help sustain sound credit and prevent things being made worse than they need be; but, instead of that, we went on reducing the volume of real money until, when the level of gold was reached, we had but $14 of currency per capita.

Now, what do you suppose the cost of making greenbacks equal to gold has been? Can it be counted or measured or weighed? There is much that can never be told—the misery, the suffering, the wretchedness and the injustice wrought by it. But there are some things we can compute:

1. It has added directly within the last three years $90,000,000 to the interest-bearing debt of the country.

2. The loss to national wealth from non-production through the idleness of labor and disuse of productive capital has amounted to hundreds if not to thousands of millions of dollars annually.

3. Debts, public and private, that have extended over this space have been increased just in the proportion that commodities and labor have fallen. Or, to state it as it should be stated, the measure, the money scale by which property, labor and debts are measured, has been changed, and the Government thereby has been made the agency of the wrongful taking of property from those who had earned it and saved it, and giving it to those who were in no way equitably entitled to it. This measure was changed as stated, between 1865 and the date of resumption, from about $49 per capita to $14. The fairest test of this, and the best way to illustrate it, is to take labor itself. In 1865 about 400 days' labor, or the value of the produce of so many days, would buy a $1,000 Government bond, but it takes now 1,100 or 1,200 days' labor to pay for one. To pay $90,000,000 of interest on the national debt in 1865 it took the product of but about 40,000,000 of days' labor; now it takes 100,000,000. In 1873, before silver demonetization and the resumption policy went into effect, about 60,000,000 of days' labor was the equivalent of $90,000,000 of interest (the interest last year on the public debt); now it takes 100,000,000 of days' labor to equal this interest. If the limits of a speech permitted me to extend these comparisons to commodities and property generally like results could be shown.

Now, my fellow-citizens, who would not have supposed that, having effected this change in the paper circulation of the country, attended as it has been, necessarily, with all the evils the country has been made to suffer, and, having reached the old level of the precious metals, that there they would be content to stop; that surely they would not remove the ancient landmark which the fathers had set up—which they had established in the fundamental law of the land?

Gold and silver, without limit and without restriction, from the very dawn of civilization, from the beginnings of commerce, have been the standard and measure of value over the whole globe. But so audacious has avarice grown that neither constitution, nor right, nor religion has been sufficient to restrain it. And by an act that probably will ever stand as an unexplained fraud, the metallic measure itself changed. Silver was thrown out, and for all practical purposes remains so still, and instead of gold and silver, both without limit as before, for the measure and for the means of payment, the money material was reduced to gold alone; so that, instead of both the metals to do the work of money, gold alone is left. We were at the bi-metallic level of prices in 1876, when the balance of trade turned in our favor, and all reductions since then have been due to changes in metalic money. Gold itself under this legislation becomes a different measure. To an ounce of gold, or a gold dollar, is given a different value. Already since 1876 gold has increased in value in the United States under our demonetization law and similar laws in Europe by at least 33 per cent., and must, under these laws, continue to increase. That is the same as if to all coin debts one-third had been added; the same as if one-third had been added to our whole bonded debt; the same in respect to the debt as if three and one-third hours had been added to every day's labor; for it is by labor or its products that in the end all debts must be paid. There is no other fountain to draw from. Is it not significant that this change in the money scale is sought to be made at a time when national debts are not less than $25,000,000,000? To change the value of money is the same in effect as to change all weights and measures. Suppose, instead of being payable in dollars, obligations were made dischargeable in quantities—say so many days' labor, or so many pounds, or so many bushels, and that debts amounting to half our whole wealth were to be discharged in this way, and then that the Government should increase, whether by imperceptible increments or suddenly—it would not matter—all weights and measures until two days' labor were required to discharge an obligation where good faith only required one, or double quantities were required to make the same number of pounds or bushels, what would you say to that? A foot-rule might be called a foot still, and be divided into twelve inches, though the inches be double the length of the present inch. But would you say that was the way to make an honest measure?

Well that is exactly the way the kind of "honest" dollars we hear so much about now-a-days are made. Everybody knows that a dollar, by legislation, has been made twice as large, and more than twice as large (that is, has twice the value) as it was in 1865, or even in 1873. The gold dollar even, since 1876, as a consequence of silver demonetization and the hoarding of gold in public treasuries, has been made practically a 125-cent dollar. And let us not forget that a silver dollar of 412½ grains, in consequence of the withdrawal of paper money, is worth more as compared with labor and commodities than it was in 1876. It will buy more of everything you have to sell now than it would then, and you must give more of what you produce to get it to pay taxes with, if you would pay taxes with silver. Let me illustrate this a little further: In 1864 men who were facing death in the field and fighting battles took their pay without murmuring in paper, when they had a right to coin, and when $18 in paper would not buy more than $5 or $6 in silver. On the other hand, when victory had been achieved, the bondholder, for every $5 or $6 of silver he lent the Government, got $10, $12 and $13 in bonds. Since then his bonds have doubled in value, through the alteration in the value of money, as compared with your property or your labor, or with what you produce, and now he calls you dishonest if you are not willing to double them again, and at that rate let them rest as a mortgage, not only upon your fields, farms and workshops, but upon all future earnings of yourselves and your children to the third and fourth generation. The words of the old prophet have a new significance in these days: "We have borrowed money for the King's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards. * * * And lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants. * * * Neither is it in our power to redeem them, for other men have our lands and vineyards."

It is in this aspect that the recent monetary schemes of the bond-holding class of the world become most alarming. Not only do they affect the distribution of present wealth, but control the distribution of future earnings, and thus influence to a degree no one can foresee the future condition of the inhabitants of this country. I will risk wearying you by an illustration that will, I hope, throw some light on this important phase of the question. The value of the total products of the United States in 1878, as measured by the money scale then existing, was about $7,000,000,000. The value of the same products measured by the money of to-day would not be more than $4,000,000,000. Then, there was a net gain in national wealth in 1878 of $700,000,000, which is not far from the actual net increase in wealth—that is, if there was left at the end of the year over and above all consumption $700,000,000 worth of products, as rated in the money of that year (1878), the value of the same surplus that year would be worth in money of to-day but $400,000,000. And, of course, with the increase of the gold dollar, "as time goes on," the value of the same products, expressed in gold, grows less. [illegible] net profits of 1878 was $400,000,000, and it was and more if all classes of debts be included, then there were left $300,000,000 to be shared by those who helped to produce this wealth and were not themselves creditors.

But if the same number of dollars are now required for interest, as they are, then, there being but $400,000,000 of net profits, all is required to meet the interest charge, and there is nothing left for those who have created the wealth to share.

It is plain, then, that by the alteration that has already been made, and which must still go on if mono-metalism is to be the final goal, that the great mass of laborers and producers, not only in this country but in all others where interest charges absorb net gain, are virtually cut off from any possible share in future gains. It is my boast that the chains of slavery have been stricken from one race, but by these measures we have forged chains heavier not only for them but for our own race, and less easy, it may be, to shake off. We are told, too, that in the South the colored race, under the conditions of liberty, have had but a bare existence. Millions of the Anglo-Saxon race, too, in the North have had no more, and not because they were not willing to labor or did not save. There has been nothing for them under the distribution effected by the change in the value of money.

By no possible means can a people be subjugated so effectually and lastingly as to make it impossible for them to share beyond a bare existence in what they create. As aristocracy of wealth on the one hand, with the great body of the people toilers without hope of gain on the other, is the necessary condition of a people whose debt charges consume the net additions to their national wealth, and that is a condition of slavery. Such is absolutely the present condition of countries like Tunis, Egypt, Turkey, and, in part, Italy, Austria, and other states having great permanent debts, and England, too, with all her wealth. The people of such countries are doomed to pay tribute, if not to other countries, then to one another. With national debts aggregating $25,000,000,000 resting upon the world, then what an enormity the proposition to change all valuations from gold and silver to gold alone becomes! It concerns not merely the people of this country, but is world-wide in its effects. It concerns, more than any other question, the great mass of the population of the whole Western world. In this light how contemptible the "honest-money" pretense becomes. These are not good times for pious frauds, but a large part of the sentiment on this subject that floods the Republican press, especially in the East, is of that character. Why, you let a bill be introduced in either house of Congress proposing to banish silver altogether and cancel all the greenbacks, or in any other way to increase the value of money and bonds, and in flaming headlines the next morning it would be announced as an honest-money step, and be advocated as a wise and just measure; and the next Sunday, in all probability, the pulpit, reflecting the press, would respond with their amens.

YAZOO CITY.

A True Statement of the Alleged Dixon Bulldozing Affair.

At a recent meeting of the citizens of Yazoo City, Miss., the following was unanimously adopted:

Whereas many false reports have been promulgated through the newspapers, not only in this State but throughout the West, as to the occurrence that took place here on the 25th of July last, and feeling and knowing that gross wrong has thereby been done to the people of this county; now we, the citizens of Yazoo City, as an act of justice to ourselves, as well as to the people of this county, feel it our duty to give a true statement of the affair, as well as the causes which led to it. The people who assembled here on that day were no lawless and infuriated mob, but men of respectability, intelligence and property, of honest vocations, identified with the prosperity and material interests of this county, as well as the preservation of peace and good order of its society. A race issue had been inaugurated by H. M. Dixon, a man of violent and desperate character, whose career here has been marked by strife and turbulence, who has been reckless of human life and the law. This man was the originator and leader of this race issue, or so-called Independent party, assuming first the name of Independent Democrats; and was a candidate for Sheriff of the county. The people felt that if this course on the part of Dixon continued it would sooner or later culminate in actual and bloody conflict. Our best citizens looked with gloomy forebodings to the recurrence of the scenes of anarchy, strife and bloodshed which marked the race contest of 1875. They contemplated with horror the saturnalia of lawlessness, crime and misrule which would follow the inauguration of such a man and his satellites into the Government of the county. To avert these calamities, and from an instinct of self-protection, and to save the reputation and character of the county, to avoid more strife, many citizens did assemble here on the 25th of July. From their number they sent four unarmed men to Dixon, who was at his house, to request him to leave the county. This he refused to do. Within less than a half hour after their return to the assembly on Main street, some friends of Dixon came from him saying that he would pledge himself to withdraw from the canvass. Three of Dixon's friends, with one citizen opposed to him, then repaired to Dixon's house, distant a quarter of a mile, obtained a card of withdrawal, and were returning to the crowd on Main street, when they were met by three gentlemen who were sent by the same citizens who sent the first four unarmed men, and who insisted that Dixon should, in addition, pledge himself not to raise the race issue again, which he, Dixon, agreed to. We deny and charge the statement as wholly false that any armed men opposed to Dixon entered or were near his premises on that day. No armed men were in view of his house during the whole day. It is not true, as is stated in the sensational reports of this "affair," that the Mayor or any one else with shot-gun arrested the mob from crossing his threshold, because there was no mob at his house. Neither did the assembled citizens hold parley with him. They simply, through a committee, demanded that he should leave the county, which he refused to do, and right on the heels of this refusal he authorized his friends to say, for reasons set forth in his card, that he would withdraw. It is not because Dixon was an Independent that he was asked to withdraw, but because of the strife between races that he was engendering; because he was appealing to the prejudices of the negro and arraying them in solid body against the whites, and because his course would have led, as we believe, to the spilling of innocent blood both of whites and blacks. We declare ourselves opposed to mob law and violence. But the Almighty has given to us the right of self-protection and self-defense, and the people have this right, and whenever the occasion arises it should be exercised by the people in the same manner as by individuals. That we may not be misunderstood, we now declare that we are now and have ever been in favor of equal rights to all men before the law; that the colored man is secure in the enjoyment of all his rights, and that the step taken by the white people was in the interest of white and black alike, and that it had no political significance, as the question was one of self-preservation; the Democracy of this country being at all times willing to submit to the ballot-box all political issues fairly presented.

INDIANA ITEMS.

WHITE river has not been so low for twenty-five years.

IT is thought that the potato crop of the State will rival the great wheat crop.

THE Seventeenth Indiana regiment will hold a reunion at Martinsville, Sept. 11.

A THREE days' soldiers' encampment is to be held at Terre Haute, beginning on Oct. 3.

THE St. Joe river is being surveyed for the purpose of ascertaining its navigability.

THE citizens of Vincennes are going to furnish the money to rebuild the starch and sugar works lately burned.

DURING a storm, twenty sheep belonging to Elias Morris, a farmer residing near Cambridge City, were struck by lightning and killed.

DR. A. MCKEIL, of New Albany, has received the $100 prize from Chicago, for the best essay on diphtheria from a homeopathic standpoint.

THE Fort Wayne Gazette advocates the erection of a monument to Gen. Anthony Wayne on the site of the old fort which gave that city its name.

MRS. M. S. SCUDDER, a resident of Lafayette since 1827, and the mother of the first white child born in the then town of Lafayette, has died after a lingering illness.

GEORGE BARON, a tailor of Connersville, and his wife, are celebrating the birth of their twenty-third child. This in twenty years of married life. The mother is but 39 years of age.

THE Indianapolis Tile-Works, one of the largest manufacturing establishments in that city, was destroyed by fire the other night. Loss, $30,000 to $40,000; insurance, $30,000.

THE question of erecting water works at an estimated cost of $200,000 was voted upon by the people of Fort Wayne, resulting in a majority of 2,544 in favor of the proposition.

AMOUNTS appropriated in the last River and Harbor bill to Indiana harbors were:

Michigan City harbor	$40,000
White river	25,000
Wabash river	20,000
Total	$85,000

MRS. DR. HAVERFIELD, a highly educated lady of Indianapolis, has been appointed State Medical Examiner of Indiana for a large foreign insurance company. She is the first woman ever chosen in this country for such a position.

WHILE thrashing on the farm of Mrs. Keiths, three miles east of Warsaw, a boiler exploded, throwing several pieces a distance of 300 feet. Six persons were seriously injured by flying iron and scalding water. Oscar Thompson was instantly killed, and James Thompson, his father, so badly scalded that he cannot possibly recover.

THE following are reliable statistics concerning the wheat product in Southern Indiana: The acreage in Posey county for 1879 was 63,000 acres, and the yield, at a low estimate, 2 bushels to the acre, making the yield 1,260,000 bushels; in Gibson county the yield is estimated at 1,500,000; in Pike county, 70,000; in Warrick county, 750,000; in Crawford county, 220,000; in Harrison county, 650,000; in Knox county, 850,000; in Orange county, 450,000; in Duboisecounty, 450,000; in Washington county, 500,000; in Clark county, 500,000; in Floyd county, which grows but little wheat, being cultivated principally in fruit and garden products, 100,000.

Indiana's Wheat Crop for 1879

The Indianapolis Sentinel compiles the following estimate of the wheat crop for this year from reports of county Auditors and other sources, only six counties being estimated:

Adams	500,000	Madison	1,000,000
Allen	800,000	Marion	742,000
Bartholomew	900,000	Marshall	1,250,000
Benton	60,000	Martin	15,000
Blackford	150,000	Miami	810,000
Boone	900,000	Monroe	308,000
Brown	175,000	Montgomery	1,000,000
Carroll	1,004,500	Morgan	900,000
Cass	948,000	Newton	40,000
Clark	489,000	Noble	1,050,000
Clay	150,000	Ohio	125,000
Clinton	1,225,000	Orange	150,000

Jennings	150,000	Warrick	880,000
Johnson	750,000	Washington	200,000
Knox	1,290,000	Wayne	860,000
Kosciusko	1,250,000	Wells	300,000
Lagrange	780,000	White	....
Lake	....	Whitley	342,000
Laporte	1,500,000
Lawrence	357,500	Total bushels	53,929,453
Estimated crops of Jay, Lake, Porter, Starke, Tipton and White, bushels			1,070,547
Grand total, bushels			55,000,000

Assuming the population of Indiana to be 2,000,000, and that six bushels per capita is required for home consumption, these figures show that the State will have for export 43,000,000 bushels.

No More Hazing at Princeton.

The authorities of Princeton College have taken a wise step in advance of the opening of another academic year. They have notified the parents or guardians of every member of the Sophomore class that any student found guilty of hazing will be at once and irrevocably expelled. This notification, it may be hoped, will "clear the atmosphere" of the college effectually before the reassembling of the classes, and it promises well for the peace and comfort of the Freshman of 1879-80.—Trenton Gazette.

FOR PRESIDENT.

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

Yellow fever is still on the increase at Memphis.

The great temperance Jubilee at Laporte, closed last Sunday after a successful meeting of forty days.

The Decatur Democrat calls Tilden "that great and incomparable statesman." We are forced to exclaim, "Good Lord deliver us!"

A heavy rainstorm accompanied by gusts of wind crossed southern Indiana last Sunday afternoon and night, doing great damage to the corn crop.

Casanave's demand upon Hayes, Sherman & Co, for the amount of the attorney fee for defending the Louisiana returning board when indicted for forgery, was honored to the extent of $1,750, $500 of which was paid by Hayes. This is less than half of the amount claimed.

The South Bend Herald intimates that Dr. H. T. Helmbold of Philadelphia, and Dr. Johnson of Detroit, are not good paymasters. We suspect that Murray, like a great many other publishers, has been running ads for the parties named, at about one fourth regular rates. It such is the case he ought to be swindled.

The Journal office at Fort Wayne has been purchased by Senator T. J. Foster, recently editor and proprietor of the New Haven Palladium, and the first issue under the new regime will appear next week. We anticipate a marked change in the Journal, in more ways than one, and will await its advent with interest.

Of the $1,750 recently paid on the claim of the lawyers who defended the Lousiana returning board, $1,000 was raised in New York, and $250 in Washington, besides the $500 paid by Hayes. Sherman was not allowed to pay anything because he had already paid several thousand dollars as the cost of being "a visiting statesman."

"My name's Locke" said Petroleum V. Nasby to a Cincinnati policemen last Saturday evening. "Very well" answered the policeman, "I'll just 'lock' you up. You've been drinking so much of your cross-roads whisky that it's made you cross and cranky, and it will do you good to lock you up until you cool down a bit." And he did; and Nasby had to call on some of his Cincinnati friends to secure his release. Nasby will soon be prepared to enter the field as a temperance lecturer. A few more drunks will fit him for the business.

On the 30th of June, 1865, the steamship Brother Jonathan, while on her way from San Francisco to Portland, Oregon, struck a rock and sunk. The ship had in her safe $340,000 in currency and $500,000 in bullion. The currency was packed in water-tight rubber bags, and these were again packed in tin cases and hermetically sealed. The wreck has been recently discovered in twenty-two fathoms of water, and an expedition is being fitted out to recover the lost treasure. As the ten years within which the government could claim a moiety to any treasure recovered has expired, the wreckers will be entitled to all they may bring to the surface. The parties engaged in the enterprise are John Mallov, John E. Miles, W. C. Wood and John Vogel.

Murders and suicides have taken place this week with their accustomed regularity, amongst which is the killing of a sporting man at Toledo, named Ross Salsbury, by Jacob J. Nohl, a policeman, who immediately afterward shot himself. This occurred Saturday morning last, and both were dead within a short time after the tragedy. Another occurred on the same morning at San Francisco, it being the shooting of Rev. I. S. Kalloch, the workingmen's candidate for mayor, by Charles DeYoung, editor of the Chronicle. The trouble arose from an article published by DeYoung, in the Chronicle, reflecting on the personal character of Kallock. The latter, at last accounts was still alive and slowly improving, while DeYoung and his brother, W. H. DeYoung, are in the city prison awaiting future developments.

Don't Miss It.

An excursion to Michigan City, over the Eel River road, from Butler and Logansport, including intermediate points, will take place Thursday September 11, 1879; fare for the round trip from Butler or Auburn only three dollars. Train will leave Butler at 5 a. m. and Auburn at 5:29, arriving at Michigan City at about noon without change of cars. This excursion will afford an excellent opportunity to visit the prison and other places of interest, for those who have never had so good a chance. A day of pleasanter recreation cannot be found anywhere, and we advise all who can to take it in. Remember the time from Auburn—5:29 a. m., Thursday, Aug. 11.

The Okolona Southern States Again.

[Decatur Democrat.]

For the first time in our life we have been granted the privilege of perusing a copy of the Southern States, published at Okolona, Miss. For this privilege we are under obligations to our esteemed friend, Mr. L. A. Conter. The copy in question is the property of a very prominent republican of Decatur. The States is published by O. Y. Harper and W. H. Kernan, nincompoop hirelings of John Sherman and other leaders of the party whose every move is tainted with Hamiltonian ideas. The States is kept alive by republican patronage. It is published in the interest of the republican party. It is a little seven column, patent outside sheet. Its "make-up" would be a disgrace to the youngest amateur paper in the country. There are three advertisements in it, the three making less than one half column. And this is the Southern States! Sherman, your game is such a palpable fraud that even Harper & Kernan, your paid hirelings, can laugh and make sport over your contemptibleness. But don't stop; keep up the circulation of the States. It is not a democratic paper; it never was, and never will be. The Messenger is the only democratic paper published at Okolona, Miss. It has a circulation of 1,180, while Harper's has but 900. Bah, it's too silly to think about.

According to Mr. Tilden, "in the contest of 1876 the issue was the restoration of the government its practical working and administration, to the original ideas of its founders. The defeat of the popular will, as declared in that election, has raised a vastly greater issue—that is, the integrity of the system of self-government through elections by the people. This issue transcends all others, and it would be a betrayal of the most sacred duty to mankind to permit it to be sacrificed to inferior and transient questions."

By this the public is to understand that "duty to mankind" means duty to Samuel J. Tilden, and upon that theory his claims will be presented to the democracy of the country, with a demand for renomination. The justness of the claim, so far as Mr. Tilden is personally concerned, carries with it little weight, and dwindles into insignificance when compared with Tilden's betrayal of the democratic party in 1876.

Sherman and Casanave.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Times interviewed John Sherman at Pittsburgh a few days since, in reference to Casanave and the claim against him, for defending him and other members of the Lousiana returning board. Below we give that part of the conference relating to the matter named:

"What do you think about Casanave's method of trying to raise money to pay his counsel fees?

Will he raise enough money in Washington to settle the indebtedness?"

"I do not know, but I think he will. I am sure I shall be glad to pay part of it. I consider it my duty to help pay the amount. I shall do it open and above board. I think that it is a damned cowardly piece of business for the republicans to be afraid to help Casanave. He incurred this debt for the good of the party, and as far as I know, he never did a wrong thing. I think that prominent republicans should at once send him money enough to free himself from this tangle. Five thousand dollars is a large fee, but they charge big prices down in Louisiana. Casanave is only a livery-stable keeper down there, and the democratic counsel who defended him will sell his horses and stock unless he gets aid from those who should be his friends in the north. Part of the counsel fees have already been paid by the other members of the returning board and this five thousand dollars is a balance which is due by Casanave. I don't know whether his property is good for the amount or not. Wells and Anderson are good, but their real estate would have to be sold, and real estate does not sell well in Louisiana just now."

"How was it that Casanave did not get an office?"

"Simply because he never applied for one," said Mr. Sherman. "I think—no, I may say I am sure—that Casanave never tried to get an office under the government since 1876. On the contrary, he has said he did not want any."

"Was he ever offered an office?"

"No, sir," said the secretary, with emphasis. "As he never applied for an office he never was offered one; and still further than that, nothing has ever been done for him by the party in any way."

"Did he write to you of his trouble before he came north?"

"No, I knew nothing about it until he told me. He never wrote to any body about it as far as I know. If he comes to me in the right way I shall be glad to do all I can to help him: but if he comes and blusters and threatens, then I shall not feel disposed to do much for him."

"You have no hesitation in saying you will give him some money to aid him?"

"None whatever, and any republican who hesitates to do so is a damned fool. Instead of hesitating he should put his hand in his pocket, just as I am willing to do, and help the man out of his trouble. It does not do any good to be afraid of meeting a thing of this kind. Instead of being afraid of it I court it, and would rather have people know it than not."

Political Buncombe.

The republican press of the north is busily engaged in an attempt to make political capital out of the murder of the desperado Dixon, at Yazoo City, Miss. The effort to make the democratic party of the whole country responsible for the murder will fail, notwithstanding it may have grown out of politics. The tragedy has no significance outside of the vicinity where it occurred, but, in order to correct the wrong impressions that our republican cotemporaries will try to convey to their readers, we give the following particulars from a reliable source. Some time since in Yazoo county, Miss., one Henry M. Dixon, who was publicly branded as a thief, a liar and a murderer, having gained some influence among the negroes, announced himself as an independent candidate for sheriff. At the same time James A. Barksdale was a candidate for chancery clerk. Between these two men a personal animosity existed, the former having reason to believe that the latter had in his possession certain facts and papers that seriously affected his (Dixons) character for honesty. Dixon frequently threatened Barksdale's life, and as he had in January, 1878, killed Samuel Harrison in the streets of Yazoo City for precisely similar reasons, his threats had considerable significance. So much so, indeed, that Barksdale was fully satisfied of Dixon's intentions to assail him, and remarked that he did not know what moment he might be fired on and killed by Dixon in ambuscade.

On Tuesday, the 19th instant, he was told to be on his guard, as Dixon meant to kill him that day, and he accordingly prepared himself.

About 9 o'clock a. m., in the heart of the business portion of the city, on Main street, the two men encountered each other, and Barksdale addressing Dixon, said: "We will settle our difficulty now."

The evidence as to who drew first is conflicting, and probably will not be definitely ascertained until the testimony is taken at the trial, but after an exchange of five shots of which Dixon fired three and Barksdale two, the former fell mortally wounded and expired about 4 o'clock p. m. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that he fell on almost the precise spot upon which his victim of the year before had fallen.

Dixon was a gambler by profession, and a desperate, violent man, and on several occasions announced in the presence of a number of gentlemen that he would not hesitate to pack a jury, if necessary to acquit a friend. This too while he was a candidate for the office of sheriff.

At a mass meeting of the democrats of Yazoo, held on the 15th of August, they made a lengthy declaration setting forth their objections to the man, and among other things, said:

"Here, then, we have a man who is a candidate for sheriff of our county who publicly acknowledges himself base enough to pack a jury to acquit a friend. A man who will pack a jury to acquit a friend will do the same thing to convict an enemy. Of all the officers in the county the sheriff has most to do with the grand and petit juries; he has access to them at all times; he has every opportunity to corrupt them, if he is base enough to do so. Dixon admits he is base enough, and shall we allow him to get into a place where he can exercise such infernal baseness? We believe he is a murderer. Passing by the cases of many men who have died at his hands in this county, we believe that Dixon murderered Mr. Samuel Harrison in cold blood. The mayor of Yazoo City, Mr. J. H. Holt, thought so, and committed him to jail without bail. Our circuit judge, Hon. S. S. Calhoun, thought so, and remanded him to jail without bail. For months he filled a felon's cell, and we believe that he only escaped a felon's doom and a felon's death for want of intelligence and virtue in the jury that tried him."

This affair has been, and is now shamefully misrepresented by the press of the north, all for the purpose of making political capital, and at the same time creating a prejudice against the people of the south. The parties were both democrats.

The Opera.

Last Monday evening an immense crowd, composed of Auburn's elite, assembled in Ensley's Hall to see the comic opera of "Pinafore," as performed by the New York Comic Opera company, under the management of Tom C. Mays. The performance has been pronounced as decidedly the best ever presented to an audience in this place. The company is not as large as some other Pinafore troupes, but it more than makes up in quality what it may lack in numbers. The leading characters, such as "Admiral Porter," "Josephine," "Hebe," "Little Buttercup," "Dick Deadeye" and "Ralph Rakestraw," were admirably rendered, and the audience gave frequent manifestations of their delight. To-night they appear at Waterloo, and the two succeeding nights at Angola and Kendallville, at all of which places we bespeak for them overflowing houses.

A Compliment to Dentists.

Of all professional men, dentists should be the neatest, and as a class they are. Those who require a grateful, refreshing, delightful aroma, while working about the organ of smell, should wet their hands in Dr. Price's Floral Riches. Its fragrance is not only as pleasant as can be imagined, but decidedly stimulating.

St. Joe.

—Fred. Meyers and lady, of New Haven, were visiting friends in this vicinity Saturday and Sunday.

—Mrs. J. A. Reed is in Pennsylvania, visiting her mother, who is reported very sick.

—W. H. Dills, of Auburn, was in town Saturday.

—Phi. Smith and Geo. DeLong, of Newville, were in town Saturday, on their way to Kendallville.

—The brick work on the new store is nearly completed.

—Alex. Donaldson, contractor, has the frame up for Mort. Olds' new store at Spencerville.

—From the racket gained in the vicinity of the saloon nick-named "Blue Ruin, or "Elephant's Den," we imagine times are quite lively.

—The farm formerly owned by William Tustison, now deceased, was sold last Saturday for $3,500 by Com. J. D. Leighty, Geo. Houk, of Spencerville, being the purchaser.

Every Flavor True.

By a process entirely his own, Dr. Price is enabled to extract from each of the true select fruits and aromatics, all of its characteristic flavor; and place in the market a class of Flavorings of rare excellence. We know Dr. Price's True Flavoring Extracts will give perfect satisfaction.

The Fair.

The Northern Indiana agricultural and horticultural association holds its fair at Fort Wayne from September 22d to the 26th, inclusive, and in addition to the general premium list, they are offering a large number of special premiums, particularly in stock, open only to Allen and adjoining counties. They solicit the entry of horses in what is termed the "green race," where only such horses are allowed to enter as have never won a race, and there are a number of horses in this county that could make good time and should be entered; DeKalb county ought to make her showing with the others. The fair this season offers numberless attractions, and a large attendance is anticipated. For any particulars, or for full premium list, address the secretary, I. D. G. Nelson, Fort Wayne.

—Recent advices from Mrs. F. E. Davenport, indicate that her health is not improving as rapidly as was hoped for.

—Misses Meam and Aletha Horn, of Colon, Mich., are visiting with the family of J. A. Anderson, Esq., of this city.

—Half of the married folks of Allen county, the News says, are trying to be separated from each other. Happy family.

—Wm. Meeks, the details of whose case appeared in last week's Courier, was conveyed to the insane asylum last Monday.

—Miss Electa Strong, of Steubenville, was in the city for a short time yesterday, on a transient visit to Miss Mollie Matheny.

—The south end of town is destined to be the center of all our manufacturing interests, unless the east side folks wake up.

—The 4th Ohio Light-Artillery, Capt. O. P. Hopkins, commanding, will furnish the heavy music for the soldiers' re-union.

—Duplex corsets for $1.00, other corsets at from 30c. to $1.00. Back combs from 10c. to 25c. at McQuiston & Ralston's. 30-6w.

—The doctors report less general sickness at this time than in any year since 1872, yet they are all kept "comfortably busy."

—Have you read the advertisement of W. H. Kiblinger & Co. in another column? If not we advise you to do so before buying stoves.

—You throw away a golden opportunity if you fail to join the excursion to Michigan City, September 11, over the Eel-River railroad.

—The Northern Indiana fair commences at Fort Wayne, Sept. 22d, and closes on the 26th. See mention of it elsewhere in this issue.

—Joe Copper looks like the shadow of a fat lead-pencil; and so does Fred. Clark. Not that they are meagrely fed, of course, but it's the shakes.

—Miss Carrie Berry, a niece of Mr. E. Berry, who has been visiting here for two weeks past, returned to her home in Huntington Tuesday morning.

—If all the leading citizens of Auburn were as public spirited as Mr. Eckhart, we would soon have a city of at least ten thousand inhabitants.

—Fred. Yesbera says a man not long since brought a hay-fork into the jewelry store to be repaired. Fred. directed him to the other blacksmith shop.

—Misses Jennie and Annis Cowan returned home Monday evening from a visit to Decatur. The were accompanied from Fort Wayne by Dr. Allyn.

—Dave Snyder came near "giving himself dead away" Tuesday morning, down in Kiblinger's door-way, when that committee on machine shops was here.

—When a man has an opportunity to benefit himself, and at the same time benefit the town, he should embrace it, and not delay for the sake of a few dollars,

—A black horse hitched at the court-house square, yesterday, owes its rescue from an untimely end to the heroic efforts of Charlie Pommert and Coop. Ralston.

—The Hicksville agricultural society offers a premium for a "district trot" which is open to horses in DeKalb county that have never beaten three minutes.

—A tight-rope walker—or a tight rope-walker—was in our midst this week, but failed to exhibit himself, "owing to circumstances over which he had no control."

—We have two full moons this month, on the 2nd and 30th.—Angola Herald.

The moon has been acting rather "full" here for several nights past; out nearly all night.

—Hereafter the contests for the location of manufacturing establishments will be between the east, west and south parts of the town; at present the south has the advantage.

—There are two disorders that we are all liable to be afflicted with—love and the measles. But the former differs from the latter in that we are subject to relapses at any moment.

—While Mr. Geo. Ensley received a fair price for his land sold to Mr. Allen, he also made another step toward the building up of Ensley Avenue. Mr. Ensley has an eye to business.

—Among the wants of Lagrange, the Standard mentions: "A new brick hotel, an archery club, better sidewalks, a railroad to Toledo and a rest from foot-races." Better buy a new town.

—The new floral hall on the fair grounds at Waterloo will soon be completed. It is two stories high, and will be conveniently arranged for the display of all articles in that department.

—A B. & O. through freight got somewhat "out o' whack"—or off the track—at the junction last Saturday night, and was detained seven hours thereby. A switchman did it with his little switch.

—Owing to a rush in our job department this week, which occupied the attention of our "lightnin' typo," we are a little late in getting to press, and must necessarily miss one or two early mails.

—Among the numerous improvements on the fair grounds at Waterloo, we notice a circle for the exhibition of horses and cattle. This is a good improvement, and will be appreciated by exhibitors.

—The ground for the new machine shop, boiler shop and foundry is located opposite the end of Main street, south of, and adjoining the Eel-River railroad, and contains two and one-tenth acres.

—Persons who have a "failing" for that delicious berry called the watermelon, can procure them at Sherm. Hollister's. He received a large invoice yesterday, and through his generosity the Courier corps wrapped themselves around a few.

—Mr. Allen having completed the arrangements for the location of his shops, left for his home yesterday afternoon, to return in about ten days. In the meantime Mr. Hollopeter will superintend the laying of the foundation for the new buildings.

—Where is the man to come to Decatur and establish a foundry and machine shop?—Decatur Democrat.

We cannot speak for Decatur, but we know where the man is that will come to Auburn and start one. Particulars elsewhere in this paper.

—Deputy Sheriff Somers informs us that he saw Mrs. Humes at the asylum last Tuesday, that she now has the consumption, and that the superintendent considers her case hopeless. Benjamin Lawhead is improving rapidly, and will soon be declared of sound mind.

—"Honest John," well known for several years past by the guests at the Swineford house, but who left there a short time since, has tackled the mower in the court yard, and he sticks right to it like a little man. No mistake about it, John is a faithful hand.

—A tomb stone man recently wrote us to see if a marble shop would pay well in Hicksville. The best answer that we can give him is that there are seven resident physicians here, all well supported.—Hicksville News.

That must be fun for the physicians, but isn't it rather hard on Hicksville?

—The Misses Prichard did not take their northern trip last Saturday. We never said it. They did start for Hillsdale on Tuesday, however, and will be here again a few days when returning to their home on the other side of lake Michigan. Then what will Fred. do?

—Rob. McClellan heaved nails and screws and log-chains and stoves and "sich" in Kiblinger's hardware store this week, during the absence of the boss. Rob. tackles most anything that turns up, and he does it with the ease and grace of a person that knows how.

—Elkhart Democrat: "It seems to be the prevailing opinion among the masses that it requires a certain amount of brains to run a sausage stuffer, but that almost any 'damphool' can edit a newspaper. This we say is the prevailing opinion among the m—asses." We have heard some of the same animals growl.

—We learn with regret of the serious illness of Miss Nellie Wheelock, who was first taken sick Sunday evening, with an ordinary ague chill, but since has become worse, having had a nervous spasm on Tuesday afternoon. At the present writing, however, she is some better.

—Our townsman, Mr. Gilliland, has met with encouraging success in his sale of the electro-magnetic liver pad. We believe it is worth many times its cost to afflicted ones, since reading the numerous testimonials, upon the strength of which it ought to be given a fair trial, at any rate.

—Having engaged in a partnership in business, for the future, we desire speedily to close up all past accounts. Those knowing themselves indebted to either of us on open account will please call and settle the same, either by cash or note. And oblige, T. G. Matheny,

33-tf J. B. Casebeer.

—Our subscribers who prefer to pay for the Courier with wood are notified that the wood must be delivered before cold weather sets in. First-class wood will be accepted at the market price, and must be full measure. A load or two of 20-inch stove-wood, split fine, would be acceptable just now. Bring it along at once.

—All citizens of Auburn who are interested in the success of the soldiers' re-union on the 19th and 20th of next month, are earnestly requested to meet at the soldiers' headquarters, next Saturday evening. The boys are trying to get up a big demonstration, and ask the people of the town to help them.

—The Ligonier Banner gets off the following, and it is about as clear a case of "hitting the nail on the head" as we have seen for several centuries:

"The man who gets the maddest at a newspaper joke on himself is the same party who goes around showing the paper to everybody he meets when the joke is on some other fellow."

—A fact. We know a woman who ate at one meal nine ears of green corn, the cobs of which measured an even yard. And yet she complained of being unwell.—Cor. Ligonier Banner.

Unwell? Great heavens! Does that man mean to say that each cob measured an even yard, or have we misinterpreted him?

—The second N-E Indiana and N-W Ohio fair will be held at Hicksville on September 23d, 24th, 25th, and 26th. The list of premiums is complete in every department. The secretary says: "At this early day the prospects for a successful fair are very encouraging." We acknowledge the receipt of complimentary tickets.

—Messrs. Wm. Sheffer and S. H. Rush have formed a copartnership, under the firm name of Sheffer & Rush, in the harness, saddle and carriage-trimming business. A full stock of light and heavy harness, saddles, collars, whips, &c., &c., always on hand. Carriages and buggies trimmed in first-class style, at low rates. Give the boys a call, at the old stand of G. Rhodenbaugh.

—The whole Courier outfit returns its thanks to W. L. Smith, who lives southwest of Auburn, for a whopping watermelon which he rolled up stairs with a block and tackle last Tuesday morning. It measured 23½ inches from head to foot and 25 inches around the waist, and when we had used it for a moment or two there wasn't any "waste" left.

—H. J. Long—familiarly known as "Hank"—of the Kendallville Standard, and a brother to our Mike, was in town last Friday, on his return from the editorial (?) excursion to Colorado. He expressed himself as pretty thoroughly disgusted with the excursion part of it, but says that, after the unanticipated expenditure of several dollars extra, he saw the elephant and had a good time.

—Here is a chance for some enterprising young man. There is a young lady in town who has engaged the minister to perform her wedding ceremony, and all that is wanted for the consummation of the happy event is the groom. Won't some young man respond?—Angola Herald.

Yes; if she is the right color, and can talk United States, just hold on to her a few years, until we can get thirty-five or forty cents raked together, and we'll fasten right to her for life.

—Deputy Clerk B. D. Harris got home Saturday last from a two weeks' sojourn at Waukesha, Wisconsin, to which place he had taken his wife for the benefit of her health. She accompanied him on his return as far as Logansport, where she stopped for a few days to visit friends, having been quite noticeably improved by the celebrated Bethesda waters.

—An old duffer, full of family disturbance, went into the C. O. D. store a few days since and wanted to furnish Jay with potatoes "from now till Christmas." As they don't handle garden truck, and Jay not being a family man, he respectfully declined, in spite of the old man's determination to make a contract then and there.

—D. S. Houghton and George Foster had a little difficulty on the street Tuesday afternoon which resulted in some shedding of ber-lud on George's side. The trouble arose about a wood contract which it seems that George only alludes to when he gets "off," and nearly everybody knows how often that is—once a year. No bones broken or arrests made.

—We admire the energy and grit of our Garrett friends in their efforts to secure the location of Mr. Allen's shops at that point. They made very liberal offers of assistance, but Mr. Allen had decided to locate in Auburn and no inducements could change his mind. The enterprise of some of Garrett's citizens is worthy of emulation by the citizens of Auburn.

—On Wednesday evening of last week a large number of the citizens of Auburn and Waterloo met at the residence of our popular townsman Mr. J. L. Davis, in honor of his son Fred, who is spending his vacation at home. We delayed a mention of the party until this week, expecting to be able to give the names of those present, but have been unable to secure them. The pleasures of the evening were continued until a late hour, and a tip-top time is reported.

—A party of young ladies and gentlemen, consisting of as many as four persons, three of whom went to behold the wonders while the other acted as pilot, last Tuesday evening visited the famous spring located about half a mile north of town. It may have been, at some time in by-gone ages, an entrancing spot; but, like the roses of summer, it has faded away—so much so that the neighboring porkers which abound in the vicinity have found in it their "heart's desire," where, on lazy days, they roll in luxury, grunting satisfactorily the while. The pilot enjoyed the disgust of the other three amazingly, and, after baptizing one young lady in the limpid waters, the party each cut off a piece of the spring as a souvenir and wended their way slowly and sadly homeward. Hence these weeps.

—The Waterloo Press of last week, says:

"If the Courier will consult its issue of the 24th of last month, it will find where the cholera infantum story started."

In the issue of the Courier named, we said: "Cholera infantum among the children is reported in this vicinity.' In the next issue of the Press, our item was enlarged upon as follows:

"The Courier says that cholera infantum which proved such a scourge there two years ago, is again prevailing at Auburn."

This last item from the Press is the one copied by neighboring exchanges. The Courier said nothing about "a scourge," neither did it say "at Auburn." Bro. Baxter should know by this time, that his repeated attempts to prejudice the public against Auburn are of no avail.

That Waterloo Game.

In last Thursday's Press, Mr. Baxter intimated in very assuring terms that the "Stars" of Waterloo were the "boss" ball-tossers of this region; he said, at all events, "The Waterloo club has not been defeated this season, and are, therefore, the champion ball players in this section." Our boys saw this statement, but couldn't be convinced that it was just precisely a fact; so they shouldered their little bats and went up there that same day. They played nine innings, with the exception of putting one man out, when the shades of night prevented further play, and the score stood 54 to 18 in favor of—Auburn! In fact, the game became such a clear walk away for our nine that they batted out purposely on the last inning—three men in succession batting the ball to the pitcher and not attempting to make first base. The "Stars," however, took their punishment good-naturedly and like gentlemen, for which, in view of the customary wrangling between amateur clubs, they are entitled to commendation. The Garrett nine visited them on the following Saturday and also came away victors; score, 12 to 11. "The Waterloo club, therefore, are NOT the champion players of this section." Call again.

Our Claims.

We claim that there is greater certainty and uniformity in the production of good bread, biscuits, etc., in the use of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and that the articles made with it are more wholesome and digestible than if made with any other kind Test it by the most reliable and truthful test—in the oven.

ANOTHER LIBEL SUIT.

Tom C. Mays the Victim.

During the time that Mays was publishing the Courier (on the 20th day of September, 1877,) an article was published in said paper over the signature of Dr. Collar, indirectly charging Dr. J. B. Casebeer with immorality, dishonesty and incompetency. Suit was instituted by the latter against the former for damages, and was finally compromised, in consideration of which Dr. Collar published a retraction. No further action was taken in the matter until last Tuesday, when Dr. Casebeer by his attorneys, Messrs. Best and Penfield & Emanuel, filed a complaint in libel against Mays as publisher, for allowing the article of Dr. Collar to appear in the Courier, demanding damages in the sum of $10,000. The case will probably attract considerable attention when it comes to trial, and we prefer to allow the public to judge as to the merits of the case, being disinterested, except in so far as the rights and privileges of newspaper publishers are concerned.

Quick Work.

Mr. Wm. L. Allen, who is now running an extensive machine shop, boiler shop and foundry at Vincennes, Indiana, being on a trip through this part of the state, stopped off at Auburn last Saturday. He at once realized the importance of Auburn as a manufacturing point, and proposed to remove his machinery and fixtures to this place, upon certain terms and conditions. During the afternoon of the same day the Courier office furnished printed dodgers and caused them to be distributed, calling a meeting of the citizens at the court-house that evening. The business men and citizens met, called Maj. Sprott to preside, heard the proposition of Mr. Allen, and at once proceeded to raise the necessary amount to secure the shops. Seven cars will be required to transport the machinery, which is valued at $16,000. The ground has been secured and the erection of the necessary buildings will commence at once. The prompt action on the part of the citizens warrants us in saying that Auburn is on the road to prosperity and that no enterprise offering reasonable inducements will be allowed to pass. Manufacturers seeking a location will find Auburn the most desirable point in the state.

PETTY CARES.

BY HATTIE E. A. CRESSY.

'Tis not the mighty cataract,
 That swells and surges for a day,
Then comes with its fury spent,
 That wears the flinty rock away.

'Tis not the griefs which tempest-like
 Sweep through the soul with mighty strength,
Then by God's mercy are assuaged,
 That leave their lines in greatest length.

But constant dropping weareth stone,
 Howe'er minute the drops may be,
And the petty cares and griefs of life
 Wear upon our minds continually.

Yet there is no escape from them:
 They follow us both night and day,
Making such havoc of our lives
 As moth worms make upon their prey.

No [illegible]
 No form but bows beneath their weight,
No eye but dims with tears they start,
 Alike they haunt both small and great.

The monarch on his dazzling throne,
 The peasant in his lowly cot,
Must each his separate burden bear,
 Neither troubled at the other's lot.

But though we are beset with cares,
 Let's look for comfort from above;
Clouds will not always darken down,
 For heaven is fair and God is love.

PUFFS, RUFFLES AND FRIZZES.

BY LIZZIE R. M'KINNEY.

"See! There—there she is—that young lady in blue with the little golden curls around her face; isn't she perfectly bewitching?"

"Who? where? what?" and the gentleman's companion turned around in a somewhat bewildered manner.

"Why, Lilian Percival to be sure! The young lady of whom I was telling you. Come and be introduced."

"Ah! I remember the young lady whose perfections were detailed to me in full last night, but I must confess, nephew, that I am much disappointed in the lady and also in the judgment displayed by you in the selection of a wife, for I believe you stated that your choice had fallen on this Miss Percival."

"Yes, uncle, to be sure, but I must confess that I am amazed, astonished, astounded, etc. Disappointed in Lilian Percival! The very idea is amusing. Why, uncle, do you know that the only fear I have had was that my handsome bachelor uncle would be captivated at first sight, and carry off my little Lilian before my very eyes, and I be forced to stand meekly by, powerless to prevent it; but come, let us hear what has caused this sudden opinion," and, taking his uncle's arm, Herbert Eastlake turned in an opposite direction from the group of which Lilian Percival was the center. "You surely can not deny," he continued, "that she is exquisitely beautiful, interesting and lovely in appearance?"

"No, that I do not deny, and can but acknowledge that the young lady certainly possesses all those attributes and is altogether as lovely a little bundle of puffs, ruffles and frizzes as one could wish to see," and he smiled somewhat sarcastically, "but, my dear boy, I was looking at her from the standpoint of what your wife ought to be, the wife of a poor young physician, with name and fortune both to make. Pardon me, but it seems a very thoughtless judgment in such an one to select for a wife a woman who, from all appearances, must prove a beautiful and expensive toy, rather than the earnest helpmeet the wife of every poor young man should be," and a great deal of stress was laid on the word poor, much to Herbert's annoyance.

Not appearing to notice, he replied, though rather warmly:

"But are you not judging rather hastily my dear uncle? Let me suggest that you make the acquaintance of the young lady before you form opinions you may some day regret. As for Lilian Percival, I have known her long and well, and am convinced that she is possessed of a true nobility of character that will yet shine out bright and undimmed by surroundings, whether of poverty or luxury, and despite the unfortunate puffs, ruffles and frizzes."

"Come, come, my boy, I have no quarrel with the frizzes and ruffles, ever so necessary to woman's happiness, provided their possessors also have some of the more practical commodities of life, or provided these dainty little packages of flesh and blood are possessed by some one who can afford useless and expensive ornaments."

"Such a person, for instance, as the Hon. Hugh Matherton, of the Supreme Court, who possesses very extensive financial resources, and who is at present visiting his nephew, Dr. Herbert Eastlake, at Memphis, Tenn.," interrupted Herbert, with rather a bitter smile, as they seated themselves on a shaded rustic seat on the opposite side of the park from where the conversation had begun.

"Don't try to entangle your old uncle in the web of tender passion, Herbert, my boy. Every dog has his day, and I've had mine long ago, when you were a mere toddler, but, you know, 'The best-laid plans oft gang aglee,' and I think, had I possessed better judgment in those days, I might to-day have been a happier man than honor and extensive financial resources alone can make one." This last was said with a sigh, which gave evidence of a heart, whose existence Herbert had often doubted as being part of the make-up of this cynical man of the world, and this morning more particularly than ever.

"Tell me something of Miss Percival's family," asked the Judge, after a short pause in the conversation. "Are they wealthy? I should suppose so, judging from the young lady's appearance."

"No, they are not at present. Before the war they were one of the wealthiest families in the city, but since have lived on an exceedingly limited income. Lilian's appearance is all owing to the ingenuity of those useless-looking little hands of hers. I've seen the same dress and hat turned into almost every shape imaginable; and yet there is not a more stylish young lady makes her appearance on S—— avenue than Miss Lilian Percival."

"And, pray, why doesn't Miss Lilian Percival go to work and earn new clothes, instead of manufacturing them out of old ones?" interrupted the Judge. "Teach school, clerk, or do anything respectable. This toil to keep up appearances out of nothing is the worst toil in the world."

"True, true," acquiesced Herbert, with a flushed face. "Lilian appreciates the state of affairs, and would gladly do so would her parents consent; but they are extremely aristocratic, and will hear to nothing of the kind. Lilian has begged and pleaded to be allowed to seek a position, as you recommend, but has only succeeded in being sternly forbidden to mention the subject in the presence of either father or mother. Her parents are both of the most refined and highly cultured of people, and naturally shrink from their daughter being brought in contact with people of all kinds and character."

"Unfortunate—unfortunate—all of it!" answered the Judge. "Culture, aristocracy and poverty are a bad combination. Now, my dear boy, take my advice and give up this fanciful idea of yours. Love, moonshine, and music do very well to talk and read about; but for practical purposes are very debilitating diet. Leave Miss Lilian to some one who can enjoy the luxury. For instance, that elderly cavalier, with whom she is so industriously flirting at this present moment. He looks as if he might, judging from his heavy gold-headed cane and that monstrous diamond on his little finger."

"Uncle, you must not speak carelessly of Lilian Percival," said Herbert, rising hastily. "She is my betrothed wife, and I cannot hear even you speak lightly of her. That gentleman with whom she is talking is a millionaire, whose hand and fortune she refused only a few days ago; so, if money were her only desire, she had the opportunity of gratifying it. But I presume this conversation might as well be discontinued, as it is, not especially satisfactory to either of us. Will you join Miss Lilian with me? I should be very happy to introduce you."

"Not this morning—thanks," said the Judge, rising haughtily. "In fact, Herbert, as you have already seen, I most heartily disapprove of this infatuation, simply from the fact that I have before seen men who were among God's noblest works, both married and single, ruined by vain, frivolous, helpless women. Hence, if this matter goes on, it must be without any encouragement from me, either personally, verbally or financially." And, with a stiff bow, Judge Matherton turned and, with his most stately air of displeasure, left the park.

And Herbert Eastlake, as he crossed over to join Lilian, felt that he had offended his truest friend on earth—except the little blue-eyed girl who had so effectually entwined herself around his heart-strings. A friend with whom it was a pet hobby that every one should be capable of making their own way through the world entirely upon their own responsibility. Yet one who had ever been generous and kind to him; had educated and taken every pains to prepare him for a life work, which it was distinctly understood he was to accomplish by himself. It was a favorite remark of his that, of all things that most delighted him, was to see a young man taking hold of life in earnest; battling with adversity, and, finally, through his own hard struggles, win the victory and make life a success. All through his own energetic efforts, and such Herbert knew were his ideas concerning himself, yet he had always been perfectly conscious of the fact that, should he ever need a friend, he would never turn in vain to his Uncle Hugh, and now he had gone from him in anger. Herbert felt grieved and disappointed, but the cloud soon melted away in the sunshine of Lilian's bright smiles, as she rallied him on his forlorn appearance. As he looked down into her bright face, he felt that all else was nothing compared with her love. And she, foolish child, looking up into his earnest brown eyes, was thinking that very same thing in regard to himself.

Two months later, in July, as Judge Matherton got off the train at Memphis, after an extended trip to the far South, he found himself a prisoner in that almost-deserted city. The yellow fever, that dread destroyer, was at work. The death angel was abroad in the land, gathering from out the household, the hedges and the highways, regardless of condition or rank. The only sounds that greeted Judge Matherton as he passed up the deserted streets were the groans of the sick and wails for the dead, floating out from the windows open to let in a purer atmosphere, which itself seemed freighted with disease and death. As he ran up the marble steps of the Grand Hotel, where he usually stopped, there was no appearance of life about the premises. All was quiet on the first floor, the elegant parlors closed, and in confusion just as hurriedly left; but, passing up to the second floor, he awakened to life a little negro boy who was fast asleep on the top stair by accidentally planting his foot squarely into him, which brought him to his feet, grasping his little empty stomach with both hands and uttering the most vociferous cries of "Ise got um—Ise got um!"

"Quiet, sir," roared the Judge, "got what?"

"Why, de yally feber, to be suah," whined the boy, still holding on to the little vacuum where the stomach ought to have been.

"You've got nothing, sir. I stepped on you and wakened you up, that's all."

"Golly, massa, 'lows you must be 'staken, kase ye'd killed me suah if ye'd stepped on me," and the boy measured the Judge's portly proportions with his great dilated eyes and therewith set up a renewed wail of, "It's de feber, it's de feber. I feel it yit. Oh, Lordy, it's caught little black Sam dis time suah."

And the Judge, finding any attempt to convince him to the contrary useless, passed into the vacant room just in front of him. In a moment he heard a very sweet voice talking to little Sam, who rose comforted, and followed the voice into the adjoining room.

The twilight deepened and Judge Matherton still sat at his open window. He was thinking, thinking. It seemed as if his whole life was passing in review before him, but of all that haunted him most was the grieved, troubled face of his nephew, as he last saw it that morning, scarce two months before. Then he thought of the little white paper laid so carefully away in his trunk, which cut Herbert Eastlake off without a cent, and made the Educational Institute, of his native State, richer by $50,000. He got up with a hardened face and began hastily pacing the floor, when suddenly, on the sultry evening air, there floated in from the next room the notes of that tender pleading hymn, "Even Me," sung in soft, low, tender tones, by the sweetest voice he had ever heard; suddenly turning he followed the sound of the voice, and in a moment stood on the threshold of the next room unobserved. The only occupants of the room, beside the occupant of the bed, were little Sam, again fast asleep on the floor, and a fair golden-haired girl, petite in form, clad in a long, flowing white wrapper, who at that moment hushed her song to bathe the fevered brow and hands of the sufferer.

"Sing 'Even Me; Yes, Even Me,'" and the great eyes of the dying woman were raised pleadingly to the fair face beside her, and as the girl turned to reach for the chair just behind her a moonbeam struggling in through the window opposite threw its silvery gleam just across her face and revealed to Judge Matherton, standing back in the shadow, none other than Lilian Percival. At that moment the most humble and sincere prayer of many years for forgiveness went up from that proud heart, wafted heavenward with the tender pleading refrain,

Thou might'st leave me, but the rather
Let Thy mercy fall on me,

sung by the low, tender voice at the bedside. Accidentally turning his head, he saw that another had noiselessly entered the room, and, looking still closer in the dim light, recognized Herbert Eastlake standing with bowed head as he, too, recognized the presence of death. One more step on the soft, noiseless carpet and Herbert's hand was caught in a warm, close clasp, and he was silently drawn nearer the bed, which at that moment was flooded in a bright, silvery light by the now well-risen moon, revealing distinctly occupant and attendant. The latter was recognized—the Judge knew by the tightened clasp on his hand—as his nephew stepped forward, though not a sound was uttered. A weary sigh as the singer ceased—a murmured, "Even me. Let Thy mercy—mercy"—a slight fluttering only, and the bright, radiant moonbeams there smiled in upon the lifeless clay of another of the many whose spirits had winged their flight from out the stricken city that summer's evening.

As Lilian turned from the bed she was caught in the arms of Herbert Eastlake.

"My darling, my darling," he cried, "how came you here in the midst of this terrible pestilence? May God preserve and spare you," and he held her tightly, as if fearing she, too, might vanish away. "How long have you been among the sick?" he inquired.

"Since yesterday morning. I was about to leave the city, when I accidentally discovered the terrible extent of suffering, and instantly felt that my place was here among the poor sufferers. You know 'blessed is he that gives even a cup of cold water.'"

It seemed then to the two gentlemen, as they looked down upon Lilian Percival standing there, so slight, pale and spirituelle, in the soft moonlight, that it had turned into a halo of glory around her. Herbert turned and presented his uncle, who, taking Lilian's little hand in both of his, almost crushed it in his warm, hearty grasp. Herbert's face revealed a look of extreme satisfaction, almost of triumph, as his uncle ejaculated, "Praise the Lord for such a woman."

The next morning, as Herbert was alone in his room, his uncle came in, and, after some little conversation, abruptly inquired, "When do you expect to marry Lilian Percival?"

Herbert's handsome face perceptibly elongated, as he answered, with a sigh: "I presume not likely for four or five years, but Lilian is willing to wait until our circumstances are such that it will be best."

"Well, my boy, I have a request to make, and it is this, that you claim your bride at once as soon as this terrible scourge abates, and here is something you will probably have use for," and, pressing a folded paper in Herbert's hand, he left the room. The paper proved to be a check for $10,000. And one bright autumnal morning, a number of weeks later, the merry wedding-bells rang out from the ivy-draped church in the upper part of the city, and Lilian Percival became Lilian Eastlake.

And, kind reader, should you feel further interested in our friends, by stopping at the thriving town of L—, in the State of Ohio, where they took up their abode about a year since, and inquiring for the home of Dr. Eastlake, you will be directed to a lovely stone cottage, embowered in evergreens and blooming flowers, its vine-covered porches and cozy bay windows overlooking the bright, flashing stream on whose bank it is situated—a bridal present from Uncle Hugh to Lilian—and, should you enter, if it be in the morning, you will probably find the lady of the house in the neat, convenient little kitchen, with sleeves pinned above the dimpled, white arms, busily engaged in preparing some favorite dish for the doctor, whom, Uncle Hugh declares, she will persist in spoiling, despite all his warnings to the contrary. Or, should you call in the evening, you will find her on the front porch, with husband and uncle, enjoying the fresh, cool air, her fingers busy with the favorite knitting work; herself as fresh, piquant, lovely as ever, in the dainty, still-favored puffs, ruffles and frizzes.

The Logic of Madmen.

Vienna has some crazy writers. In a mad-house of Vienna a lithographic newspaper is published to which the inmates of the institution contribute. In a recent number, a lunatic wrote a most logical article to convince another that his beard was not of heather and required incessant watering. Yet this crazy writer believes his own nose to be of sugar, and drank water through a straw to prevent it from getting wet. How very like the logic of some philosophers, politicians and theologians who, while proving the fallaciousness of the views of opponents, have crazy notions of their own!

FACTS AND FIGURES.

WE ARE now going to have silks which will not be silks, and the French have already baptized the new-comer as simili-soie. It is a process for coating fiber of flax or cotton with liquified silk, giving it all the appearance of actual silk at a nominal cost.

GREAT BRITAIN now pays subsidies for ocean mail service amounting annually to $3,700,000, France over $4,500,000; Italy, $1,500,000; Austria, $500,000; Belgium, $300,000; and the United States Government has paid foreign companies in the last few years $3,500,000 for the same service.

THE CZAR of Russia gets $8,250,000 per year, or $25,000 per day. The Sultan of Turkey annually $6,000,000, or $18,000 a day. Napoleon III. had a salary of $5,000,000 annually, or $4,000 a day. Francis Joseph of Austria receives $4,000,000 a year, or $10,000 a day. King William of Prussia is paid $6,000,000 a year, and Victor Emanuel $2,200,000.

THE Roman Catholic Cathedral of St. Patrick's, in New York, is the largest and costliest church ever erected in America. The interior length is 306 feet, and is 140 feet across the transept; the interior height is 108 feet. The church was recently consecrated. The tower spires are approaching completion, and will be 330 feet high, and the cost thus far is said to be $4,000,000.

THERE are about 400 stock fire insurance companies in the United States, representing about $100,000,000 in capital, about $175,000,000 in assets, and having $8,750,000,000 at risk. There are about 600 mutual fire insurance companies, whose assets and amount at risk are not definitely known; but probably they do not exceed $30,000,000 nominal assets nor $75,000,000 at risk.

FROM the earliest times to the commencement of the Christian era the amount of precious metals obtained from the surface and mines of the earth is estimated to be $4,000,000,000; from the latter epoch to the discovery of America another sum of $4,000,000,000 was obtained; from the date of the latter event to that of 1852 an addition of $9,000,000,000 was made; the extensive working of Russian gold mines in 1843, added to the close of of 1842 $1,000,000,000 more. California and Australian gold mines in 1848 and 1857 added, to the close of 1877, $5,000,000,000, making a total of $23,000,000,000. The average loss by the abrasion of coins is estimated to be 1-10 of 1 per cent. per annum, and the average loss by consumption in the arts and destruction by fire and shipwreck at from $2,000,000 to $8,000,000 per annum. The amount of precious metals now in existence is estimated to be $13,000,000,000, of which gold furnishes $7,000,000,000, and silver the remainder. Of the amount now in existence, $8,000,000,000 is said to be in coin and bullion, $3,000,000,000 in watches, and the remainder in plate, jewelry, and ornaments. Of the amount now in existence, $7,000,000,000 is estimated to have been obtained from America, $3,000,000,000 from Asia (including Australia), $2,000,000,000 from Europe, and the remainder from Africa.

The Irish Language.

In a paper recently read before the Statistical Society, Mr. Ravenstein states that the Celtic portion of the population of the British isles makes a total of nearly 2,200,000 souls, of whom nearly one-half are Welsh. Further, we are told that in 1851 there were few Irish counties in which the old language had altogether died out; the localities in which Irish was then spoken makes a total area of nearly 10,000 square miles, with a population not far under 1,500,000, of whom 69.3 per cent. spoke Irish, while in 1871 the Irish area had sunk below 6,000 square miles, with a population under 600,000, of whom about 63 per cent., or considerably less than 400,000, spoke Irish only. Lastly, it appears that probably not 5,000 persons throughout Ireland were then able to read an Irish book, and not a single Irish newspaper was being published. This contrasts strongly with the Welsh, who print over thirty newspapers and periodicals of various kinds, while the Welsh in America have several flourishing newspapers and hold eisteddfods without number in the country of their adoption. We have no statistics of the Celtic element in North America, though it is well known to be considerable, but, so far as concerns the Irish portion of it, there would be no great error in supposing that the Irish language loses ground among the emigrants much faster than among those left behind in Ireland.—The Athenæum.

Strange Hallucinations.

Geo. C. Western, who lately returned to Albany, Ga., from a trip through the Seventh district of Worth county, describes a strange case of hallucination investigated by him in that section of the State. A few weeks ago a woman from the humble walks of life grew interested in the protracted meeting at a neighboring church, the Union Baptist. Shortly before the close of the meeting she joined the church. "Going back home," says Mr. Western, "her incoherent, maddened and rambling conduct was noticed by her husband and children, and they became terribly excited about it. She went raving about the house and yard with a bucket of water baptizing her husband and each one of her children, and while doing this sang the most beautiful songs—songs that she had heard but once or twice. Although an unlettered woman (her husband will swear this), she reads any chapter in the Bible readily, pronouncing correctly and distinctly, paying attention to punctuation points, etc. She preaches nearly all the while, uses the choicest words, and displays great wisdom and knowledge in the handling of different subjects. Although no Mason, she knows all the mysteries of that mysterious craft by heart. Dozens of Masons have gone to see her, and they all come away dumbfounded. Her husband has come to the conclusion that she is a witch. She has attempted acts of violence, but, as yet, has done no harm. He, with outside assistance, at one time tried to incarcerate her in one of the rooms of the house, but the doors became unmanageable and wouldn't stay locked. She hasn't slept in eighteen days and nights, and during that time has taken but a few morsels of food. Hundreds are flocking to see the frenzied woman."

How He Destroyed His Usefulness.

A deacon of a prominent Connecticut church, whose pastor had resigned, recently met a Hartford divine, when the following conversation ensued:

"I was sorry to hear that Brother Blank had resigned. I had always liked him. He is regarded as a very able man, isn't he?"

"We-l-l, y-e-s" (hesitating). "Oh, ye-es, he's an able man."

"But he is a first-rate preacher, isn't he?"

"W-e-l-l, y-e-s, he's a very good preacher."

"And he's a man of the highest Christian character, so we have always thought here."

"We-ll, ye-es. Oh, yes, he's a good Christian."

"But there must be something the matter, deacon? Why do you hesitate so, and say, 'We-ll, ye-es?' has Brother Blank been guilty of anything wrong? I know of a church that I think he is just the man for, and I mean to recommend him very highly. Have you any reason to suppose that he would not give satisfaction?"

"Well, doctor, Mr. Blank is all you say about him, but I'm afraid he's not calculated to make a successful pastor in the country."

"Why not, deacon? You surprise me very much."

"Well, I will tell you one reason. Mr. Blank lived next to a neighbor whose hens and chickens bothered him very much by digging up his garden. He spoke about it several times, but it did no good; those fowls kept in his garden all the time. And what do you think he did? Instead of shooting some of them or building a high fence around his garden, he came here to Hartford and bought the best game-cock he could find, and took him home and turned him loose in the garden. The next day that neighbor heard a great commotion among the poultry, and, when he looked over the fence, there were all his hens and chickens lying in windrows, and that game-cock walking over the bodies and crowing. Now, you can't say that that was un-Christian conduct, but it was certainly calculated to destroy Mr. Blank's usefulness in that section."—Hartford Courant.

From Little to Great.

In 1847, the ship New Era was wrecked off Deal, N. J. Three hundred emigrants were in the steerage, and the Captain, to "keep order," as he said, nailed down the hatchways tight.

He and part of the crew then escaped to shore, but the ship, with its throbbing freight of shrieking, praying human beings, went to the bottom. It is said that the Captain grew old before his time, and crept through but a few miserable years, starting at a shadow, and thinking that every sound was the cry of his drowning victims.

But this was not the end. It would seem as if that dying cry had been heard in heaven, and had not failed to bring down a blessing.

An old farmer who saw the shipwreck, and was appalled by it, went to the Congressman from that district (Mr. William Newell), told him the story, and urged him to do something to stop the frightful sacrifice of life on the coast.

Vessels stranded or wrecked had then no succor except such as the fishermen in their boats could give. On the lee-shore of New Jersey alone, the deaths from shipwreck amounted to thousands annually.

Mr. Newell procured an appropriation from Congress for surf-boats, etc., for the use of people on shore in saving life. What is everybody's duty is nobody's, and the fishermen neglected theirs for six years, when the wreck of the Powhatan on Manasquan beach, with 400 souls on board, roused Congress again.

The life-saving service was established, which, in 1871, under its present chief, Sumner Kimball, was thoroughly organized. It is now the best system in the world for saving life on the coast.

A complete cordon of stations is established along the Atlantic, part of the Pacific and lake coasts, manned for nine months with able surfmen, and equipped with life-cars, boats, mortars for shooting a ball, and lite signals, etc. The loss of life has been reduced yearly from thousands to units, a work which perhaps might never have been accomplished if the honest Jersey farmer had kept silent.

Plant your seed of good, however small. Some day, when you are dead, perhaps, it will grow to a goodly tree. You may never know it, but God will know.

A Man to Handle a Mob.

A mob like pluck, and, before it has tasted blood, can generally be managed by the display of a little firmness. For instance, John Parham, Sheriff and jailer at Forest City, Ark., had in his official keeping one Dr. Gray, charged with rape. The indignant citizens of Forest City sent a mob to the jailer, demanding that the doctor should be peacefully delivered to them, in order that they might rid the world of the nuisance. Instead of complying with this request, John Parham informed the lynchers that, sooner than do such a thing, he would die at his post. "When the issue," said he, "is death or the abandonment of a sworn duty, I prefer death." The mob respected this firmness, and quietly dispersed, while Parham carried his prisoner to another county jail where the public sentiment was not in such an excited condition. Here is a lesson to all persons holding official situations. A mob has no courage until it discovers that it is feared.

DRIFTING.

BY BELLE MONTICELLO.

Gayly drifting! gayly drifting!
 Down life's stream!
Not a care to mark my pathway,
 It doth seem.
A world of joy, so bright and fair,
With wonders rife and pleasures rare,
 A pleasant dream.

Idly drifting! idly drifting!
 Down life's stream!
Not a thought save for the present!
 Still I seem
Free from petty cares annoying,
Life is sweet! I'm now enjoying
 Love's young dream!

Slowly drifting! slowly drifting!
 Down life's stream!
Often now in troubled waters
 Changed the scene!
Storm clouds now before me rise,
Yet o'er the waves my bark still glides!
 'Tis no dream!

Gently drifting! gently drifting!
 Down life's stream!
Calm and peaceful now the waters
 Hope doth gleam.
Ere long my sailing will be o'er;
I soon shall pass to yon bright shore
 Of which I dream!

SABBATH READING.

The Books of the Bible.

(The following metrical arrangement of the books of the Bible, from the Christian at Work, will help children, especially, to remember their respective locality in the Bible:)

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The great Jehovah speaks to us,
In Genesis and Exodus;
Leviticus and Numbers see,
Followed by Deuteronomy;
Joshua and Judges rule the land,
Ruth gleans a sheaf with trembling hand;
Samuel and numerous Kings appear,
Whose Chronicles we wondering hear,
Ezra and Nehemiah now,
Esther the beauteous mourner show;
Job speaks in sighs, David in Psalms,
The Proverbs [illegible]
Ecclesiastes [illegible]
And the sweet Song of Solomon;
Isaiah, Jeremiah then,
With Lamentations, takes his pen;
Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea's lyres,
Swell Joel's, Amos', Obadiah's.
Next Jonah, Micah, Nahum come,
And softly Habakkuk finds room,
While Zephaniah, Haggai calls,
Rapt Zachariah builds his walls,
And Malachi, with garments rent,
Concludes the ancient Testament.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Matthew, Mark, Luke and John
Record the life of God's dear Son.
The Apostles' Acts are next disclosed,
And Paul's Epistle for Rome composed.
Two other letters to Corinth sent,
Are followed by one, for Galatia meant,
And one to Phillippi, one to Colosse,
Then Thessalonians, Timothy and Titus come on,
Together with the letter to Philemon.
The Epistle to the Hebrews now comes in view,
Which shows the Old Testament fulfilled in the New.
Now follow Epistles from James, Peter and John,
In numbers reverse, of three, two and one.
And now, at the close, is the Epistle of Jude,
With John's revealed vision, which in Patmos he viewed.

The Glorious Gospel.

Preach the gospel to every creature—that is, go tell every man, without exception, whatsoever his sins be, whatsoever his rebellions be—go and tell him these glad tidings, that if he will come in, Jesus will accept him, his sins shall be forgiven him, and he shall be saved.

The gospel method of salvation resembles a well-drawn picture, which seems to look every person in the room in the face. In like manner gospel truth has something in it suitable to every one's case that reads or hears it, and that as particularly as if it spoke to every gospel hearer by name.—W. Arnot.

How the Apostles Died.

1. Peter was crucified in Rome, and, at his own request, with his head downward.

2. Andrew was crucified by being bound to a cross with cords, on which he hung two days, exhorting the people till he expired.

3. St. James the Great was beheaded by order of Herod, at Jerusalem.

4. St. James the Less was thrown from a high pinnacle, then stoned, and finally killed with a fuller's club.

5. St. Philip was bound and hanged against a pillar.

6. St. Bartholomew was flayed to death by command of a barbarous King.

7. St. Matthew was killed with a halbert.

8. St. Thomas, while at prayer, was shot with a shower of lances, and afterward run through the body with a lance.

9. St. Simon was crucified.

10. Thaddeus, or Judas, was cruelly put to death.

11. St. Matthias; the manner of his death is somewhat doubtful; one says stoned, then beheaded; another says he was crucified.

12. Judas Iscariot fell, and his bowels gushed out.

13. St. John died a natural death.

14. St. Paul was beheaded by order of Nero.

The Old Scotchman's Prayer.

Prayer is a simple but a real interchange between the child and the Father in heaven. The child asks, and the Father gives. Many books have been written on the "Philosophy of Prayer," but not one has made it any clearer than our Lord's words recorded in Luke 11:9—13.

Many years ago, an old Scotchman, poor, pious, and hard of hearing, lived where he seldom heard a sermon. Learning that religious meetings would be held, for several days, at a distant place, he journeyed toward it on foot.

On his way he fell in with a young man, and as he was also bound to the meetings the two walked together. As they came near the meeting place, it seemed good to them to halt behind a hedge and offer prayer. The old man, a child when he knelt before God, prayed thus:

"Lord, ye ken weel enough that I'm deaf, and I want a seat on the first bench, if ye can leave me have it, so that I can hear thy Word.

"And ye see that my toes are sticking through my shoes, and I don't think it is much to Your credit to have Your children's toes sticking through their shoes, and, therefore, I want You to get me a pair of new ones.

"And ye ken I have nae siller, and I want to stay during the meeting, and, therefore, I want you to get me a place to stay."

The young man, shocked at the old man's familiar way of praying, gently suggested that it was hardly the proper thing to approach the Almighty as a child would a father.

"He's my Father," replied the old man, not accepting the suggestion of irreverence; "I'm weel acquainted with Him, and He's weel acquainted with me; therefore, I take great liberties with Him."

When they arrived at the large tent in which the services were held, it was full. For a few moments the aged man stood in the rear of the congregation, making an ear trumpet of his hand to catch the preacher's words.

His strained attitude of attention at last attracted the notice of some one near the pulpit. The old saint was beckoned forward and given a seat on the front bench.

During the prayer, the old man knelt. The reverential posture attracted a lady's attention. She saw his worn-out shoes.

"Are those your best shoes?" she asked, when he had resumed his seat.

"Yes, but I expect my Father to get me a new pair, very soon."

"Come to me after the meeting, and I'll give you a new pair."

At the close of the service, she conducted him to her house and gave him a pair of shoes.

"Will you stay through the meetings?" she inquired.

"I would, but I'm a stranger in the place, and have nae siller."

"You are welcome to make my house your home, as long as you care to remain."

The young man learned of his aged friend's good fortune. And he learned more—that even a child's earnest, simple, direct requests are not irreverent, when made to the Father in heaven.

"Perfect love casteth out fear;" child-like confidence in God as our Heavenly Father causes our prayers to be direct, simple and earnest, which is quite different from that flippant irreverence that characterizes so many petitions addressed to the throne of grace.—Youth's Companion.

The Most Wonderful of Calculating Boys.

When Bidder was 10 years old he answered in two minutes the following question: What is the interest of £4,444 for 4,444 days at 4½ per cent. per annum. The answer is £2,434 16s. 5½d. A few months later, when he was not yet 11 years old, he was asked, how long would a cistern 1 mile cube be filling if receiving from a river 120 gallons per minute without intermission? In two minutes he gave the correct answer, 14,300 years 285 days 12 hours and 46 minutes. A year later he divided correctly, in less than a minute, 468,592,413,563 by 9,076. I have tried how long this takes me with pen and paper; and, after getting an incorrect result in one and a quarter minutes, went through the sum again, with correct result (51,629,838), in about the same time. At 12 years of age he answered in less than a minute the question: If a distance of 9¾ inches is passed over in a second of time, how many inches will be passed over in 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 55 seconds? Much more surprising, however, was his success, when 13 years old, in dealing with the question: What is the cube root of 897,339,273,974,002,153? He obtained the answer in 2½ minutes, viz., 964,537. I do not believe one arithmetician in a thousand would get out this answer correctly, at a first trial, in less than a quarter of an hour. But I confess I have not tried the experiment, feeling, indeed, perfectly satisfied that I should not get the answer correctly in half a dozen trials. No date is given to the following case: "The question was put by Sir William Herschel, at Slough, near Windsor, to Master Bidder, and answered in 1 minute: Light travels from the sun to the earth in eight minutes, and, the sun being 98,000,000 of miles off (of course, this is quite wrong, but 60 years ago it was near enough to the accepted value), if light would take six years and four months traveling at the same rate from the nearest fixed star, how far is that star from the earth, reckoning 365 days six hours to each year, and 28 days to each month?" The correct answer was quickly given to this pleasing question, viz., 40,633,740,000,000 miles. On one occasion we learn the proposer of a question was not satisfied with Bidder's answer. The boy said the answer was correct, and requested the proposer to work his sum over again. During the operation Bidder said he felt certain he was right, for he had worked the question in another way, and before the proposer found that he was wrong and Bidder right the boy told the company that he had calculated the question by a third method.—Belgravia.

Superstition About Storms.

Caverns were supposed by the Romans to be secure places of refuge during thunder-storms, and they believed that lightning never penetrated more than two yards into the earth. Acting on this superstition, the Emperor Augustus used to withdraw into some deep vault of the palace whenever a tempest was feared, and it is recorded by Suetonious that he always wore a skin of seal as a precaution against lightning. That both precautions were equally unavailing needs scarcely to be mentioned. Lightning has been known to strike ten feet into the earth; but not even the marvelous accuracy of modern science can determine at what distance from the surface a safe retreat may be found from the descending fluid; and, even were this ascertained, the dangers from ascending electric currents remain the same. With regard to seal-skins, we find that the Romans attached so much faith to them as non-conductors that tents were made of them, beneath which the timid used to take refuge. It is a somewhat curious fact that in the neighborhood of Mount Cevennes, in the Languedoc, where anciently some Roman colonies were known to have existed, the shepherds cherish a similar superstition respecting the skins of serpents. These they carefully collect, and, having covered their hats withal, believe themselves secure against the dangers of the storm. M. Labossiere is disposed to see a link of interesting analogy between the legend yet lingering in the mind of the peasant of Cevennes and the more costly superstition held by his Latin ancestors. The Emperors of Japan retire into a deep grotto during the tempests which rage with such severity in their latitude; but, not satisfied with the profundity of the excavation, or the strength of the stones of which it is built, they complete their precautions by having a reservoir of water sunk in their retreat. The water is intended to extinguish the lightning—a measure equally futile, since many instances have been preserved in which the fluid has fallen upon the water with the same destructive effect as upon land.

A Wounded Eagle's Flight.

Dr. Landerer, a Hungarian naturalist, writes from Athens that a dead African eagle, gypaetes barbatus, was lately found at Maina, on the southern Greek coast. On examining the bird, an iron-headed arrow over a foot long, was found transfixed under one of the wings. Evidently the eagle had been fired at and struck in Africa by some native, and had borne the arrow in its body in its flight over the Mediterranean, until it fell dead from exhaustion on touching land at Maina.

THEY have had a very sad affair at West Point. A lady at Cozzens' told her mamma that all the cadets wear white pants; whereupon a man said: "So do their sisters, cousins and aunts," and he had to be shot through the heart.

FARM NOTES.

IT is said that cayenne pepper, sprinkled over cabbage plants, is a sure preventive of worms destroying them, and will not injure the flavor of the vegetable.

BURNING STRAW STACKS.—This is one of the swiftest methods of destroying a large amount of valuable organic matter which, when used as bedding and an absorbent of liquid manure, is of great importance.

WORK vigorously while you work—have your wits about you, and never take two steps when one will answer. Then, as soon as fatigue is felt, it is better economy to take a nap than to continue labor. No man can be prompt, happy, enthusiastic, or even systematic, that habitually overworks himself.

RYE, for soiling, in early spring, should, in the Northern States, be sown late in August or early in September, on rich, well-drained soil. With proper care in cutting it before it heads out, it will spring up again, and in this way three or four cuttings can be had at intervals of a few weeks, before other soiling crops are ready.

SOUR GRASS ON A SWAMP.—Timothy will not grow in a swamp vigorously enough to crowd out the wild grass, although the tussocks have been cut off. The land should be thoroughly drained and well limed, fifty to 100 bushels per acre, and then, after a few years' growing, the timothy will take the place of the sedges and keep it, if the drains are kept open. Manure will not help such land; lime will.

THOSE who cultivate hilly or rolling lands in corn ought to be sure to have the rows wide apart. If there should be much rain, the ground is well drained, and the yield will be good any way. But if the season should be dry, the narrower the rows the more the corn will suffer; and the wider the rows, in reason, the less the row about the stalk will be exhausted by the drainage of the middle furrow. In a field observed this summer, a short row that was very wide was very slightly affected by the dry weather, while the over-drained, narrow rows around it were much more seriously injured.

MULTIPLICATION OF WEEDS.—It has been found by careful and patient counting of the number of perfect seeds produced in a number of seed pods, and then counting the number of mature pods, that on a single plant of purslane (Portulaca oleracea) there will be one million seeds matured. This will furnish a seed for every square foot of ground on twenty-three acres. Suppose each of these plants of the second generation does as well as the single parent, we will have the enormous sum of 1,000,000,000,000, as the seeds of the second generation from a single plant, or a seed for every square foot of 23,000,000 acres.

HOLDING FOR HIGHER PRICES.—It will be found that to sell one's products, of whatever kind, as soon as they are ready for market, is the best in the long run. To hold for higher prices is to speculate; and, in the majority of cases, to speculate is to lose. If the price is not satisfactory, one may hold his property, but as soon as products are ready for sale, and they are not sold, losses of various kinds begin to occur, and wool is subject to loss as well as grain. If stored in a very dry time, it loses weight and depreciates in quality, and this should be considered. There does not seem to be any prospect of an excited recovery of business; after so long a depression, things will, probably move slowly, and the slower the surer, perhaps.

TO DESTROY THE CABBAGE-WORM.—Mr. O. S. Bliss tells the New York Tribune that the best thing he has ever found for the cabbage-worm is to dose it with pepper from the little four-ounce boxes so common in the stores now-a-days. It seems not to be a sure cure, but he has sometimes saved a crop by it. Instead of hellebore for currant-worms, he uses the root of the false hellebore (Veratrum viride), a plant found in all our low meadows and fields, and commonly known here as Indian poke, sometimes as wild hellebore, or black hellebore. He gathers in a few minutes roots enough for the year, and throws them upon some high shelf to dry. When the worms put in an appearance on the rose bushes or currant bushes, he puts a root or two into an old three-quart fruit can and sets it on the back of the stove for a few hours, when with a wisp of hay or an old whisk broom he sprinkles the bushes on a dry day. It is a little trouble, but no work, and does not cost over a cent a bush to keep the whole crowd of leaf eaters in subjection.

TIME TO CUT FODDER-CORN.—If a crop of fodder-corn is worth the trouble of growing, it is certainly of sufficient importance to be properly harvested. The corn plant, like every other, starts with a view, so to speak, to the reproduction of its kind—the formation of seed—and all its functions tend toward this end. We may divide the life of the corn plant into three distinct stages—germination, or getting established; assimilation, or the preparation of food material, and seeding, or the ripening of the seed or grain. Up to the time that seed begins to form it is engaged in rapidly collecting materials out of which to make and perfect the seed, but this work gradually diminishes, and when the corn is full grown no food is being gathered. Besides the fact that the nourishment passes from the leaves into the ear, where it hardens and becomes partially indigestible, the soluble substances of the stalk are also changed into hard woody fiber to make it rigid and capable of bearing the ear. To get, therefore, the full benefit of the crop, it should be sowed thin enough so that each plant can have a good wholesome and natural growth, and then cut it just as that growth is finished.

Nobody Hurt.

In the good old times we are told that a buffet from the hand of an Edinburgh or Quarterly Reviewer would lay a young author dead at his feet. If it was so, he must have been naturally very deficient in vitality. It certainly did not kill Byron, though it was a knock-down blow; he rose from that combat with earth, like Antæus, all the stronger for it. The story of his having killed Keats, though embalmed in verse, is apocryphal; and if such blows were not fatal in those times, still less so are they now-a-days. On the other hand, if authors are difficult to slay, it is infinitely harder work to give them life by what the doctors call "artificial respiration"—puffing. The amount of breath expended in the days of "the Quarterlies" in this hopeless task would have moved wind-mills. Not a single favorite of those critics—selected, that is, from favoritism, and apart from merit—now survives. They failed even to obtain immortality for the writers in whom there was really something of genius, but whom they extolled beyond their deserts. Their pet idol, for example, was Samuel Rogers. And who reads Rogers' poems now? We remember something about them, and that's all; they are very literally "Pleasures of Memory."—James Payn, in Nineteenth Century.

"The Old Oaken Bucket."

To the Editor of the Boston Herald:

Seeing a few lines in your issue of yesterday, stating that "The Old Oaken Bucket" was produced under the "inspiration" of a glass of brandy and water, I am sure that the particulars relating to said "inspiration" will prove interesting to many of your Sunday readers: "Samuel Woodworth, the author of 'The Old Oaken Bucket,' died at New York in 1842, aged 57. He was a printer, and served his apprenticeship at Boston, in the office of Major Russell, the publisher of the Sentinel. The popular and beautiful ballad, for which he is best known, is said to have had its origin under the following circumstances: He was employed in an office on the corner of Chestnut and Chambers streets, in New York. One day, with a knot of brother typos, he dropped in at an establishment kept by Mallory, on Franklin street, for the purpose of taking some brandy and water, which Mallory was famous for keeping. The liquor was excellent, and Woodworth seemed inspired by it; for, after taking a draught, he set his glass upon the table, and, smacking his lips, declared that Mallory's eau de vie was superior to anything he ever tasted. 'No,' said a comrade, 'you are quite mistaken; there was one thing which, in both our estimations, far surpassed this in the way of drinking.' 'What was that?' asked Woodworth, dubiously. 'The draught of pure fresh spring water that we used to drink from the old oaken bucket that hung in the well, after our return from the labors of the field, on a sultry day in summer.' The teardrop glistened for a moment in Woodworth's eyes. 'True, true!' he replied, and soon after quitted the place. He returned to the office, grasped the pen, and in half an hour 'The Old Oaken Bucket,' one of the most delightful compositions in the English language, was ready, in manuscript, to be embalmed in the memories of succeeding generations." An Honest Sale.

A day or two ago a motherly-looking woman of 45 entered a Woodward avenue clothing store, having a man's linen duster on her arm, and, when approached by a salesman, she said:

"Some one in here sold this duster to my son yesterday."

"Yes, ma'am, I sold it myself," replied the clerk, as he looked at the garment.

"Did you tell my son that this duster could be worn either to a picnic, funeral, bridal party or quarterly meeting?"

"I did, madam, and so it can."

"Did you tell him it made a good fly-blanket when not otherwise needed?"

"I did."

"That it could be used as a boat-sail, a stretcher, a straw-bed and a bed-spread?"

"Yes, ma'am, I did."

"And many people used them as table-covers?"

"I did."

"And that they would last for years, and then make excellent stuff for a rag carpet?"

"I did."

"And you only charged a dollar?"

"Only a dollar, ma'am."

"Well, when John came home last night and brought the duster and told me all you said, I made up my mind that he must have been drunk, and I was a leetle afraid he stole the garment. I'm glad it's all right."

"It certainly is all right, ma'am, and since he was here yesterday we have discovered that the duster is a great conductor of sound, a preventive of sunstroke, and that no man with one on his back ever dropped dead of heart disease."

"Land save us!" she gasped, as she waited for the bundle; "but who knows that they won't fix em so 'fore long that they'll raise a mortgage off the farm?"—Detroit Free Press.

Grasshopper Gruel.

In Sierra and Martis valleys the Indian huts can be seen, and in and around them are congregated the warriors and squaws of the tribe, their sisters, cousins and their aunts, all intent upon the accomplishment of the grand result. As usual, the squaws do the work while their noble lords loll upon the green swards, smoke their pipes and dreamily and lazily gaze upon the countless myriads of buzzing hoppers that fill the air and devour the vegetation. The squaws, carrying cone-shaped baskets of great capacity, scoop the grasshoppers with a fan-shaped implement into their baskets, and when loaded carry the wiggling mass of insects to camp, and then prepare them for food. The grasshoppers, killed and subsequently dried, are mixed with mashed pine nuts or cracked wheat and made into a kind of flour, which is afterward made into a bread, most delicious to the palate of the Washoe. White visitors at the camp are always invited, in accordance with Indian hospitality, to partake of the compound, and great is the astonishment of poor Lo at the disgust expressed by the white man for this kind of food. To the limited mind of the Indian it is incomprehensible that any one should reject food which, in his vernacular, is defined as being "muchee good."—Truckee (Nev.) Republican.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

GREEN CORN PUDDING—Take a dozen ears and grate them; add a teacupful of milk, a spoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, and some grated nutmeg; mix well together; put in a pan, place in a hot oven, and bake for an hour.

STUFFED TOMATOES.—Cut in halves and hollow out in centre; take whatever cold meat you have, chop with onion, some herbs, crumbs of bread, and add to it two yolks of eggs; fill up your tomatoes, and put in a buttered pan; let them bake slowly.

WHERE there is any suspicion that glass fruit-cans are not perfectly air tight, they can be made so by putting putty around the crevices after the cans are filled and screwed down. It is prepared the same as for putting in window glass. Stone jugs for fruit may be sealed in the same way, and with less trouble than with ordinary sealing-wax.

DURING the semi-annual house cleanings, as well as at other times, the neat housekeeper should avoid making a wholesale destruction of written papers, tax receipts, or indeed receipts of any kind. Sometimes old letters prove to contain information which becomes valuable to the possessor. Every house should contain some receptacle for such business papers, and they should be filed and preserved for future use, if necessary.

BROILING MEAT.—Success in broiling depends on having a thick, fleshy piece of tender meat, a clear fire, a clean gridiron, and on the meat being turned repeatedly. Broiled meat should not be sprinkled with salt until after it is cooked, and it should never be cut into in order to ascertain whether it is done, as, if again put to the fire the juice escapes from the cut, and the meat becomes dry and less nutritious.

GRAHAM BISCUIT.—I set my sponge with wheat flour over night; in the morning I put the batter in a large pan, and add as much warm water as I need, two large table spoons of shortening (for a large dripping pan), spoonful of soda, teacup of sugar, salt, stir all together, then add all Graham, or part flour is good for a change. It is not to be too stiff. When it will drop off the stick easily it is right. Leave it in the pan to raise, then mold in biscuit.

AN economical lady says that when she buys cotton stockings, she selects a good article, and, before wearing them at all, she lines the feet with new thin muslin, that is the part that wears most quickly—the heels and toes. She says they wear twice as long as they do without. The linings must be nicely fitted and run on smoothly, or they will not answer the end desired; but a little practice enables one to do it quite easily.

RHODE ISLAND SUCCOTASH.—Good succotash wants tender young corn. Have a dozen young ears, and remove with a sharp knife the kernels. If your corn is tough, do not cut too close to the cob. String a quart of young beans, and cut them in three. Boil the beans with the corn, in half a pint of water. Boil for quite three-quarters of an hour. When cooked, cover closely, add a piece of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, and some pepper. If cream is obtainable, add half a pint at the conclusion.

FRENCH POLISH.—Take three-quarters of an ounce of seed lac, three drachms of gum juniper, two drachms of gum mastic, and four ounces of spirits of wine, avoirdupois; powder the ingredients, and mix them with the spirits in a glass bottle that will contain double the quantity. Set the mixture in a warm place, and shake it twice or thrice a day, taking care to loosen the cork during the shaking. Four or five days will be sufficient for dissolving the resin, when it will be fit for use.

KEEPING CORNED BEEF.—Cut up the meat in suitable pieces; pack in a cask or vessel; then make a brine as follows: To one gallon of water add one and a half pounds of salt and one ounce of saltpeter; bring the brine to a boil, and then, while boiling hot, pour on the meat; it will keep as much as it will cover. The meat must be kept entirely under the brine. In the spring again boil, skim and pour it on the meat while hot. Some add one pound sugar and one ounce saleratus to 100 pounds of corned beef.

"Probabilities" from Josh Billings.

Josh Billings, who is as usual spending his summer in the White mountains, has put it in the way of the editor of the White Mountain Echo to print a few component parts of his new book, to be published in the fall. Its title will be "Old Probabilities: Perhaps Rain—Perhaps Not;" and it will have for its leading motto: "Truth iz sed to be stranger than fickshun—it is to most pholks." The selections are these:

About the hardest thing a fellow kan do iz to spark 2 gals at one time and preserve a good average. Try it.

Don't dispize your poor relashuns. They may be taken suddenly ritch sum day, and then it will be awkward to explain things to them; undoubtedly so.

Next to a klear konshience for solid comfort cums an easy boot. Try both.

If a young man hain't got a well-balanced head, I like to see him part hiz hair in the middle. Don't you?

I don't take any foolish chances. If I wuz called upon to mourn over a dead mule, I should stand in front of him and do mi weeping.

Thare is no man so poor but what he can afford to keep one dog, and I hav seen them so poor that they could afford to keep three.

I say to 2 thirds on the rich people in this world, make the most on your money, for it makes the most of you. Happy thought.

I never argy agin a success when I see a rattlesnaix's head sticking out of a whole; I bear off to the left and say to myself that hole belongs to that snaix.

The infidel argys just az a bull duz chained to a post. He bellows and saws, but he don't git loose from the post, I notiss. Not much.

I thank the Lord that thare is one thing in this world that money kant buy, and that is the wag ov a dog's tail. Yure unkle.

I have seen men so fond of argument that they would dispute with a guide board at the forks ov a kuntry road about the distance to the next town. What fools.

There are but fu sights in this life more sublime and pathethick than to see a poor but virtuous young man struggling with a mustach. It is thus.

I notiss one thing, the man who rides on the kars every day is satisfied with one seat; but he who rides once a year wants 4. That's so.

HOME DOCTOR.

TANNIN will cure canker sore mouth by applying dry three times a day.

DYSENTERY.—The following is a translation of a receipt for the cure of this complaint, which was published by the physicians of Spain in the gazettes of Madrid during 1840: "Prepare a draught of albumen by taking the whites of forty eggs or more, and, after whipping them well, sweeten the same, if necessary, with a small portion of the best double-refined sugar. Let the patient drink large quantities of this repeatedly, insomuch as to fill his stomach, administering clysters of the same as often as possible. The patient must maintain a total abstinence from diet of any kind. In a few hours after the pain will abate, and in twenty-four hours the disease will disappear; if it does not, it will be sure to disappear in forty-eight hours, provided the patient repeats the draught as usual. The addition of a few drops of orange-flower water is highly beneficial."

REST FOR HEADACHES.—Dr. Day says, in a late lecture: Whatever be the plan of treatment decided upon, rest is the first principle to inculcate in every severe headache. Rest, which the busy wife and anxious mother cannot obtain so long as they can manage to keep about, is one of the first remedies for every headache, and we should never cease to enforce it. The brain, when excited, as much needs quiet and repose as a fractured limb or an inflamed eye, and it is obvious that the chances of shortening the seizure and arresting the pain will depend on our power to have this carried out effectually. It is a practical lesson to keep steadily in view, in that there may lurk behind a simple headache some lesion of unknown magnitude, which may remain stationary if quietude can be maintained. There is a point worth attending to in the treatment of all headaches. See that the head is elevated at night, and the pillow hard; for, if it be soft, the head sinks into it and becomes hot, which with some people is enough to provoke an attack in the morning if sleep be long and heavy.

A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.—Numerous cures of rheumatism by the use of celery have recently been announced in English papers; but the following, more in detail, is given on the authority of a New York paper: "New discoveries—or what claim to be discoveries—of the healing virtues of plants are continually making. 'One of the latest is that celery is a cure for rheumatism;' indeed, it is asserted that the disease is impossible if the vegetable be cooked and freely eaten. The fact that it is always put on the table raw prevents its therapeutic powers from becoming known. The celery should be cut into bits, boiled in water until soft, and the water drunk by the patient. Put new milk, with a little flour and nutmeg, into a saucepan with the boiled celery, serve it warm with pieces of toast, eat it with potatoes, and the painful ailment will soon yield. Such is the declaration of a physician, who has again and again tried the experiment, and with uniform success. He adds that cold and damp never produce, but develop the disease, of which acid blood is the primary and sustaining cause, and that while the blood is alkaline there can be neither rheumatism nor gout. English statistics show that in one year (1876) 2,640 persons died of rheumatism, and every case, it is claimed, might have been cured or prevented by the adoption of the remedy mentioned. At least two-thirds of the cases named heart disease are ascribed to rheumatism and its agonizing ally, gout. Small-pox, so much dreaded, is not half so destructive as rheumatism, which, it is maintained by many physicians, can be prevented by obeying nature's laws in diet. But if you have incurred it, boiled celery is pronounced unhesitatingly to be a specific.'"

Is Edison's Electric Light a Failure?

It would be interesting to know how much has been made and lost by the fluctuations in gas stocks here and abroad, caused by the announcement one week that Edison had finally succeeded in perfecting his electric light, which would render lighting by gas a thing of the past, and the counter-statement the next week that this report was either wholly fallacious or premature. It would be still more interesting to know by whose skillful hands this game of seesaw in gas securities has been carried on. Every one can remember how strongly the panic in gas stocks set in about a year ago, when Edison's alleged discoveries and inventions were first extensively promulgated through this country and in Europe. Since then, and until a few weeks ago, the fluctuations in gas stocks were violent, and these securities, which hitherto had been considered as among the most stable and satisfactory, have been made the football of speculation. It is now some weeks since anything has been heard from "the sage of Menlo Park." His last manifesto was to the effect that everything was ready save the discovery of an indefinite quantity of platinum, under such conditions that it could be mined and brought to market at the price of lead or iron ore. Writers in the public press are now beginning to openly say, what has long since been whispered, that the so-called inventions of Mr. Edison have no practical value, and that at the best they are but adaptations of former appliances and contrivances. This may or may not be so, but it certainly will require a very extraordinary degree of credulity on the part of any one who now holds gas stocks to induce him to sacrifice them on the strength of any reports concerning Edison's much-vaunted and universally advertised inventions.—New York Graphic.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR SEPTEMBER,

Presents many striking novelties, and in excellence of illustration is superior to even the August number. In fiction this Magazine is now remarkable for its three serial novels by Miss Mulock, William Black, and R. D. Blackmore.

One of the most novel features of this number is a ghost story by Howard Pyle, with eight illustrations drawn by the author.

Not less striking, though of a more stately order, are Mr. Reinhart's admirable pictures illustrating Mrs. Champney's "Newport Society in the last Century."

Lucy Larcom's spirited lyric, "My Mariner," is accompanied by an equally spirited illustration by Fredericks.

In excellence of engraving nothing could be superior to the sixteen pictures illustrating Barnet Phillips's interesting paper, "The King Collection of Engraved Gems," recently purchased for the Metropolitan Museum.

Mr. Ernest Ingersoll's "Gold-Mining in Georgia" takes us into a new and very interesting field, of which little is known.

Besides the fiction already mentioned there is a piquant short story by Mrs. Annie Howells Frechetti. William Gibson contributes a beautiful poem, "The Last Rose of Summer."

The Editorial departments are full of interesting matter. In the Editor's drawer is a very amusing burlesque operetta, entitled "Il Jacobi," by Mrs. E. T. Corbett, with six illustrations.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW FOR JULY

(republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay street, N. Y.) opens with a long article on 'Free Trade, Reciprocity, and Foreign Competition,' denies that the stagnation of British trade is due to Free trade policy, and combats the principal arguments urged in favor of Protection; discourages any change in England's commercial policy; recommends a reform in the land laws; discouragement of the liquor trade; discontinuance of the manufacture of heavily-sized cotton goods; and the encouragement of inventions.

"The Federation of the English Empire" dwells fully on the subject of emigration, and shows that it would be wise for England to send emigrants to her own colonies than to let them benefit foreign nations.

"State Papers Charles I." A very interesting chronicle of many events in that reign taken from state papers recently published.

'The Life of the Prince Consort.' Sets aside the political portion, and treats only of personal matters.

'Theophrastus Such.' This, George Eliot's latest work, is described as a book of valuable essays on feelings and foibles, enlivened here and there with the most genial humor.

Price, $4 a year, and the postage is prepaid by the Publishers.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE FOR JULY

Has been republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay street, New York.

"With Coloned Pearson at Ekowe, by one who was there," is not an exciting narrative, but gives a good idea of the difficulties to be encountered in South African warfare.

'Reata' is continued, and a small cloud seems to be rising on the horizon.

'The Ghost of Morcar's Tower.' A tragic story illustrating a theory of Mesmerism, i. e., the power of a strong will to influence a spirit.

'Hidden Treasures' is an account of a 'matchless collection of sculpture,' the property of Prince Torlonia of Rome, and kept entirely private. There are five hundred and twenty pieces, consisting of statues, vases, and busts, many, if not all, of wonderful beauty.

Price, $4 a year and the postage is prepaid by the Publishers.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, JULY,

Has been promptly republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay street, New York. The public have been looking for this number with much interest, as it has been announced that Mr. Gladstone would be one of the contributors. His article is entitled, 'The Evangelical Movement: its Parentage, Progress, and Issue;' and in the course of it he shows that although it never became dominant in England, yet that it altered the general tone and tendency of the preaching of the clergy after the Tractarian movement had begun.

St. George Mivart is the author of the article entitled, 'The Feelings and the Intellect,' which is an inquiry into the true meaning and nature of our different feelings, and the real nature of those of them which accompany the most estimable or blameworthy of our volitions.

The article on "Irenæus," by Dr. Quarry, gives a general idea of the Gnostic heresies, as a prelude to a sketch of Irenæus and his views, especially those respecting Holy Scripture and ecclesiastical tradition.

Other papers are: 'The City Companies,' 'The City of Glasgow Bank Failure,' and 'England and the Greek Question.'

Price, $4 a year, and the postage is prepaid by the Publishers.

SCRIBNER FOR SEPTEMBER.

Considerable educational flavor is imparted to the September Scribner by the three essays of the number,—1. Professor Boyesen's interesting illustrated paper on 'The University of Rome,' an institution but little known in America, 2. Mr. W. C. Brownell's exposition of the unique methods of teaching in The Art Schools of Philadelphia, and 3. Professor T. R. Lounsbury's discussion of the arguments for and against 'English Spelling Reform,'—the writer taking strong ground in favor of the proposed reform.

To balance this element the number contains a large quantity of light summer reading, including the following papers: 'Signs and Symbols,' by Mr. Frank B. Mayer of Annapolis; 'My Lord Fairfax, of Virginia,' an interesting sketch of the sixth lord and some of his more noted ancestors, by Mrs. Constance Cary Harrison; 'An American Home on the Amazons,' by Mr. Herbert H. Smith accompanied with drawings by Mr. Champney; 'Sandy Hook,' by Mr. George Houghton, with picturesque drawings by Mr. F. S. Church; and a sketch of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, of 'Pinafore' fame, by Miss Kate Field, accompanied by a portrait.

Dr. Holland's 'Topics' are entitled 'European Travel,' 'A Word About Newspapers,' and 'Write it Yourself.' 'Home and Society' is given over to sensible and practical suggestions about Domestic Nursing 'by a trained nurse'. In the department of 'Culture and Progress,' Mr. Mallock's last book is reviewed by a writer who takes him to task for his 'ignominious and unspiritual stand;' decided changes in George Eliot's style and method are noted by a reviewer of 'Theophrastus Such;' a full account is given of the 'long-concealed and lately [illegible] History of the Revolution;' there is an interesting discussion of Madame Bonaparte's 'Life and Letters,' and other books are noticed.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR SEPTEMBER

Helps the boys and girls to begin the new year of schooling with a great variety of amusing stories, pictures, and interesting articles. It begins with a large frontispiece, drawn by Addie Ledyard, and, near the end, it gives young Lewis Napoleon's life-history, with a portrait engraved from a photograph taken a little while before his death.

There are eight short stories, all illustrated. First comes "Three Drews and a Crew," a tale of terrible floods and wonderful escapes; then an amusing story of "Bob's Missionary Work" in the effort to improve a poverty-stricken quarter of his native town. A third tale recounts the excitement and pleasure of 'A Run After Sword-fish'; another details the mishaps of a girl who persisted in wearing fine winter clothes in the wild places of Florida; a fifth narrates a lively episode of Pennsylvania child-life; another deals with elves and a tender-hearted German girl; yet another describes the bad and good fortunes of a miner's orphans in the great oil-regions; and the eighth, with a comical picture by Hopkins, tells the triumph of a wise old man who could say 'Buttered Pease,' in Choctaw.

"On Wheels,' with twelve quaint outline pictures, gives a concise account of wheeled carriages of all sorts and times; and "The Frolicsome Fly's" queer and interesting history is told with the help of two illustrations.

A Crane with a Wooden Leg.

In London—in St. James' Park—there once lived a crane. By some accident he broke one of his long legs, and a kind doctor who saw him in pain cut it off above the knee. The bird got well, but how was he to get about in the world? He couldn't use a crutch, as a man with one leg can, nor had he any friends to wheel him about in an invalid-chair, as some sick people have when they can't walk.

I don't know what the poor bird would have done; but a soldier who knew how to do a good many things, saw the crane's trouble, took pity on him, and went to work to help him. he made a wooden leg, with a joint for a knee, and he managed to fasten it to the poor cripple, so that he could walk about and take care of himself. It was not a pretty leg, like his other, but it was useful, and he was satisfied with it. For a long time this wooden-legged bird was one of the sights of the Park, and very proudly he bore himself before the crowds of curious boys and girls who came to see him.—"Jack-in-the-Pulpit;" St. Nicholas for September.

Woman's Strategy.

"Jack," said a pretty girl to her small brother the other day, "I want you to do something for me—that's a good fellow."

"What is it?" growled Jack, who is the brother of the period.

"Why, you know that wig and mustache you used in the theatricals?"

"Well?"

"Well, won't you just put them on and go to the concert to-night? Augustus and I will be there, and, Jack, I want you to stare at me the whole evening through your glasses."

"What! you want me to do that?"

"Yes, and as we come out you must stand in the door and try to slip me a note—take care that Gus sees you, too."

"Well, I declare!"

"Because you see, Jack, Gus likes me, I know; but then he is awful slow, and he's well off and lots of other girls are after him, and—and he's got to be hurried up a little, as it were."

COMFORT.

A single word is a little thing,
But a soul may be dying before your eyes
For the lack of the comfort a word may bring,
With its welcome help and its sweet surprise.

A kindly look costs nothing at all,
But a heart may be starving for just one glance,
That shall show by the eyelid's tender fall
The help of a pitying countenance.

It is easy enough to bend the ear
To catch some tale of sore distress;
For men may be fainting besides us here,
For longing to share their weariness.

These gifts no silver nor gold may buy,
Nor the wealth of the riches men bestow;
But the comfort of word, or ear, or eye,
The poorest may offer wherever he go.

Here is a Specimen

Of the administration idea of Civil Service reform unalloyed: Charles Lemos was recently promoted to a $1,400 clerkship in the office of the Third Auditor of the treasury. He is a colored man, and does duty at the White House as tonsorial artist. He is expected to shampoon the president, bathe the courtly Rogers, put cosmetic on the skimpy mustache of Webb Hayes, and lather and shave the clerks at the executive mansion. He is not only expected to do it, but he does it. For the promotion he received there was a soldier applicant. After deliberating some time on the merits of the soldier and the barber, the secretary of the treasury concluded that one who could bathe Rogers and put him up in perfumed blotting paper, did a service equal to facing a confederate canon; so the soldier was cast aside and the barber was given the promotion.

One of the Sharks.

Mr. John Mitchell, banker, of Kendallville, it seems, is the "innocent purchaser" of the notes the patent right sharks swindle the farmers out of through this section of the country. He has a partner in a town in New York, to whom all notes of $500 and over are sent, in order that they may be sued in the United States court, which cannot be done by a citizen of this state. Mr. Mitchell is an old resident of Kendallville and no doubt well posted, or can easily become so, as to the financial condition of the farmers of adjoining counties, and probably makes his scoundrelly partners who take the notes divide with him. Mitchell is a member of a leading church of Kendalville, a prominent republican, a son of the late "Billy" Mitchell, at one time congressman for this district. He is evidently not laying up all his treasures in heaven.—Goshen Democrat.

The newspapers as well as all respectable citizens condemn the sharks promptly, and in words that cannot be mistaken. Some of these sharks make a great show of piety, but their hypocracy is so transparent that it deceives but few. Brand them as they deserve. —Kendallville Standard.

Ohio Politics.

[State Sentinel.]

There is little doubt about the situation in Ohio. The democracy is confident and jubilant. Calico Charley can not stand the pressure. His yardstick excites no enthusiasm. Kissing babies and handshaking does not answer the demand when the liberties of the people are in peril. It is claimed that he makes a dozen speeches every day, but he does not say anything that the people care about hearing. He deals in twaddle. The republican conspirators are trying to dodge the great issues of the campaign, but Ewing and his democratic co-laborers compel them to face the music, to hesitate, prevaricate, flinch, dodge, back down and virtually confess judgment. John Sherman's appearance in Ohio is an injury rather than a benefit to his party. His record as a perjury-broker, his recent contributions to the black and tan Casanave blackens his record, and his inability to explain his connection with the First National bank of New York, by which the government is likely to be swindled out of thousands of dollars, is another count in the indictment, and the people of Ohio regard him with the suspicion his infamous record invites. The appearance of Carl Schurz in Ohio does not help Calico Charley or the ticket of the republican conspirators. He, like Sherman, has abandoned his department at Washington, and for a stated salary is advancing to mislead the public, while his Indian agents are swindling the savages on the frontier. The antecedents and purposes of these men are understood in Ohio. To make up for these damaging features the republican conspirators bray and place their majority at high figures, while the democrats, discounting every possible drawback, fix their "hard-pan majority at 10,000."

People Advanced in Life Should Not Run.

The Am. Exchange and Review thus comments upon the sudden death of Mr. William Adamson, of the firm of Beader & Adamson, extensive manufacturers of glue and curled hair, which was the loss to Philadelphia of a valuable citizen. He resided at Germantown, and on June 16th, desiring to reach a train of cars which was about starting for the city, he ran a considerable distance. Upon arriving at Ninth and Green streets he complained of being unwell, and stopping at a coal-office in that neighborhood, died in a few minutes. This unfortunate circumstance is another verification of a warning, given some years ago, by an eminent English surgeon. He stated that, on no account, except that serious fires were on hand, or to save a life, should any person ever run after having reached fifty years of age. The reason alleged was, that a tendency to heart disease, apoplexy, etc., might suddenly be brought to a climax by violent exertion, and especially with corpulent persons. Mr. Adamson was fifty-six years of age, and very stout; a post-mortem examination showed that he had died of heart disease.

Tattooing Among English Ladies.

The custom is said to have lately grown up among the young ladies of good social position in England of having various devices tattooed indelibly on one or other of their legs. This peculiar freak of the aristocracy of Great Britain has been made public through an advertisement announcing the mysterious disappearance of a well-connected young lady. But in this very advertisement is displayed a comical want of knowledge of the customs of this country. The friends of the missing girl evidently believe she has fled to America, and they tell us she can be identified by a cross in tattoo on her right leg. This is doubtless an infallible sign; but who is to make the investigation which shall reveal the fair runaway? If aboriginal styles of dress prevailed here, as our British cousins evidently think they do, all would be easy enough, but when the very clocking of a damsel's hose is largely a matter of conjecture to the most assiduous of lookers on, how could even a Paul Pry among fashion writers get at the cuticular ornamentation beneath the silk? The task is hopeless. The missing maiden might [illegible] among us with both legs fi[illegible] pair of Cleopatra Needles [illegible]d not be the wiser for it. W[illegible]ave a more extended bill of partic[illegible]. A squint, a wart on the left forefinger, even a strawberry mark on the nose, would serve to establish her identity; but, so far as the pictured leg is concerned, she has "the receipt of fernseed" and walks invisible.—Philadelphia Record.

Trichina in American Hams.

It seems that some effort ought to be made to prevent the increasing occurrence of trichina spiralis in American hams and bacon, which is injuring the sale of these articles in foreign markets. We learn from an exchange that large numbers of this dangerous parasite have been detected in cured meats imported into Alsace from America. In Switzerland, too, the discovery has been made that American hams are full of the trichina, and a government commission has been appointed to decide upon the precautionary measures to be taken. The cantonal authorities are recommended to warn the people against the use of American hams, especially in the half-raw state, and to arm the police with discretionary powers over the sale of the article. As meat can become infested with trichina only through impure food, it would appear possible to find a preventive. A most intelligent dealer in salted provisions, who has given great attention to the subject, recently expressed the opinion to us, that pork derives the trichina spiralis principally through the devouring of rats by hogs confined in pens. The rats are attracted into these enclosures in search of food, are caught by a rapid movement of the hog's forefoot, which pins them to the floor, and are immediately devoured entire. Examination of the bodies of dead rats, with the aid of a good microscope, will, the same gentleman assures us, afford ample evidence of their efficiency as distributors of the pest. It has, of course, long been known that this was a cause of pork being thus infested, but, in the opinion of the gentleman referred to, it is the chief cause, and a war upon rats would almost eradicate all danger of human life from that source.

Tricky John Sherman.

[State Sentinel.]

That John Sherman has been guilty of most flagrant dishonesty, while at the same time practicing upon the people a deliberate deception, there is now little doubt in the minds of business men. That he had done this to aid his presidential aspirations, is widely believed, and it is quite as infamous as if he had divided the proceeds of the shameful proceedings and thereby became an embezzler directly. The First National bank of New York has been all the time John Sherman's pet. It is said to be a legitimate outgrowth of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co.'s concern, and has on deposit money belonging to the government variously estimated at from $17,000,000 to $37,000,000 which it can not pay. The bank has asked for an extension of time, which John Sherman has granted. As a consequence, the conclusion is that the First National bank of New York has not got the money it owes to the government. The amount as stated represents the balance of the 4 per cent. bonds subscribed for by the bank—which it has not sold. "There are," says the New York Sun, "two ways of looking at the situation, and both are bad for Mr. Sherman. If the bank is regarded as an agent of the treasury department in its refunding operations, then the 4 per cent. loan has been a failure, and the refunding of the 6 per cents. has not been accomplished. If the bank is regarded as the debtor of the government to the amount of the unsold bonds for which it subscribed, then Mr. Sherman is leaving from $17,000,000 to $37,000,000 of the people's money in the hands of a corporation whose capital is half a million. A decline of 2 per cent. in the value of the bonds would wipe out almost the entire capital of the bank. From first to last the favors extended to this bank by Mr. Sherman have been a scandal in Wall street. In the matter of an increase of commissions to large subscribers, forcing small investors in this 'popular' loan to buy through the First National bank, instead of directly of the department, and in the matter of the extension of time allowed the bank for settling with the treasurer, Sherman's course toward the successors of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., has been extraordinary. How much has the First National bank, with its capital of $500,000, made by the refunding operation of the past twelvemonth? And where have its profits gone?"

It is well known that John Sherman wants money for the Ohio campaign. Calico Charley and his yard stick represent the Sherman "boom." The corruption fund, raised by putting the screws to government employes, does not yield enough, and there are reasons for believing that the First National bank has subscribed liberally, and that in this way John Sherman is obtaining dividends to help on his "boom." At any rate we conclude that the matter will be subjected to a little healthy investigation when congress meets.

More Trappists Coming.

The Trappist order of monks have bought a large tract of land in western Pennsylvania for the purpose of establishing a monastery. This community, according to the Eco d'Italia, consists of 200 monks from France, Ireland, and Turkey. There are artisans, scientists, mechanics, agriculturists, artists, architects, lawyers, and physicians, some of whom attained distinction in their native countries. They will themselves build their monastery. The Trappist is the most austere of all the monastic orders. They rise from bed at 2 o'clock in the morning, dedicate twelve hours of the day to reflection and prayer, and the rest to severe labor, especially in the fields. No conversation is permitted with one another or strangers. They salute each other with the exclamation, "Remember death." They drink only water and eat only vegetables. They sleep on a table, with a pillow of straw, and never undress, even when sick. There are monasteries of the same order at New Haven in Kentucky; at New Melleray in Iowa, and at Tracadie in Nova Scotia. Most of the members of this ascetic organization are persons who, for one cause or another, have become disgusted with the world, and have determined to pass the rest of their days in seclusion and in contemplative repose. They renounce the battle of life, separate themselves entirely from temporal affairs, and concentrate all their thoughts on death and eternity. It is an institution savoring more of the spirit of the Middle Ages than of modern times.

Near Forest, Ohio, last Monday, a party of thirteen threshers were accidentally poisoned by the use of strychnine in biscuit, instead of soda, through mistake. The parties are said to be in a critical condition.

Pillage Must Cease.

New York Sun.

It has been said that since the accession of the democratic party to power in both houses of congress the lobby has disappeared. This fact speaks louder than platforms or speeches. The people know that it means smaller appropriations and lighter taxes. The ruthless application of the knife to executive estimates, and the large reduction of expenditures made by the lower House in the Forty-fourth congress, had much to do with the election of Tilden and Hendricks in 1876.

Mr. Blaine, Mr. Sherman, the third termers, and the fraudulent administration may make speeches, and do what they will to turn the public mind off upon other questions; but the real issue is this of honest and economical government. The people are determined to stop the plundering and the squandering, to reduce their taxes, and pay for nothing but the support of their governments. They know that extravagance is the parent of every other evil, and that a people who permit the earnings of industry to be taken and enjoyed by their rulers, either with or without the forms of law, are mere slaves. The political history of the last few years shows that this great truth has leavened the whole public mind. The real struggle now is for emancipation from corrupt combinations, rings, and corporations, which, in ways too numerous to mention, prey upon the people and eat out their substance.

The campaign in Pennsylvania shows perhaps more clearly than any other the fact that the popular apprehension is fully alive to these issues. There reform seemed to be hopeless. In the State and in the chief cities, rings of political criminals, growing visibly rich from public plunder, controlled everything, and their espotic rule was scarcely questioned. The treasury ring embezzled millions, with but a feeble popular protest, which the leaders of both parties took care should find no effectual expression. The Pennsylvania railroad debauched and used the legislature, and, in collusion with the rings, owned and directed the state administration.

But they overdid the business. The recent attempt to filch $4,000,000 from the commonwealth by bribing the legislature to give it away was too startling. Men began to figure up how much it was proposed to steal from them individually, or from their counties, by this single tremendous grab. Had this operation been successful, Lancaster county, for instance, would have been required to pay up, as her share of the ring's booty, $121,000; York, $76,000; Chester, $77,000; Franklin, $45,000; Berks, $106,000, and so on through the list. Decent house-holders over there have begun to cipher—it is high time—and while they are about it they propose to find out to what extent they are robbed by the unconstitutional freight discrimination against them by this same Pennsylvania railroad, which they created and endowed not to be their master but their servant.

When they get this sum done, there will be a revolution in the old Commonwealth, and the republican ring, which openly sustains these iniquities, refuses to let its convention condemn the four million steal, and forces it to declare against "honest men in office," will be broken into fragments. The people are evidently determined that pillage must cease.

The State Fair.

The present propitious season, remarkable for the extraordinary crops produced, is felt in every department of trade and has invigorated and infused renewed energy into business life. Especially is this manifested in connection with the State Fair, commencing September 29, and ending October 4th.

The very successful and profitable fair of 1878, both to exhibitors and the treasury of the board, has prompted the management to renewed efforts to sustain its well-earned reputation, and if possible to excel the fairs heretofore held in this vicinity. In this it is heartily seconded by exhibitors, who are emulating each other in active interest, and the busy throng at the agricultural rooms, who have to await their turn to receive attention, even at this early day, together with the mass of correspondence concerning the business connected with the fair, indicates unusual preparation, and one of the most extensive and varied exhibits ever held in the State.

Several important changes in the location of the buildings on the grounds and other improvements are being made, looking to greater comfort of both exhibitors and visitors, and additional attractions will be presented to interest, amuse and instruct the old and the young, the grave and the gay, and make this a grand holiday week.

The visit of President Hayes and party is a fixed fact. The old pioneers will be there, and a good time is confidently expected.

The railroads have authorized the following announcement:

I., P. & C., half fare.

Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw, half fare.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R., operating Cincinnati, Richmond & Fort Wayne and Traverse City R. R., half fare.

Wabash R. R., excursion tickets.

Eel River R. R., half fare.

Ft. Wayne, Muncie & Cincinnati, half fare.

Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan, excursion tickets.

And all will return freight free on certificate of Secretary that it has not changed ownership.

Posters containing particulars will be issued soon. ALEX. HERON, Sec'y.

Bob Ingersoll will be in attendance at the convention of liberals at Cincinnati, on the 13th and 14th of next month. The object of the meeting is to consult as to the propriety of forming a new party that will be non-sectarian, to do away with the ghosts that haunt, and the superstitions, that control, and all laws that deny civil rights to honest men. The following questions and answers are a part of a recent interview with Col. Bob concerning the proposed new party.

"How about the church property that is not now taxed?"

"Tax it all. Why, do you know there are $800,000,000 worth of church property not taxed in this country? I would have it all taxed, and relieve from taxation homesteads to the value of, say $1,000. Tax the church property and take the burden from the poor. Do you think God would object to that?"

"Then the object of your party is to relieve the poor?"

"That is one object, but we also wish to do away with unjust laws. For instance, there are two or three states of the Union—Tennessee, Delaware and South Carolina—in which ministers are not allowed to become members of the state legislature. This is wrong. Clergymen should have every right that is extended to another citizen. The civil rights of all should be the same. There are several states in which free thinkers are disfranchised, not allowed to hold office, and in most of the states in the Union they are not allowed to testify. The greatest and best men in the world would not be competent to testify, while the smallest and meanest would, provided they believed in hell; and such men always do. So in many states it is a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment to publicly deny the inspiration of the Bible. Think of a book that has to be protected from ridicule by law!"

"What effect will the crystallization of the new party at this precise juncture have upon the present important campaign in Ohio?"

"That I can not tell. The liberals of Ohio will, of course, decide for themselves. For myself, I want to do what I can toward effecting the absolute divorce of church and state, the divorce of church and school, the repeal of all laws discriminating against men on account of religious or irreligious belief, of all laws that exempt the property of churches from taxation, or in any way abridge the freedom of thought. That, in short, is my platform."

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Hon. John C. Ten Eyck, who served as United States Senator from New Jersey for six years (1859-'65), has just died at his home in Mount Holly, N. J., aged 69.

Edward Payson Weston, the last winner of the Astley belt and champion pedestrian of the world, arrived at New York last week in the Nevada, accompanied by his wife, three children and a valet. Rowell, the English pedestrian, reached New York on the same day, coming by a different steamer. They come to participate in the great international walking match which begins at Gilmore's Garden, Sept. 22.

A Boston dispatch says the schooner Stephen Bennett, from that port for Baltimore, capsized. Capt. Bennett and the crew of five persons and three passengers are supposed to be lost....After many years of agitation, the Oneida Community, perhaps the best-known and most successful body of real Communists in the world, have abandoned the system of stirpiculture or thoroughbreeding of men, and will no longer permit complex marriage. This reform is made in deference to the mandate of public opinion....R. B. Conklin, of Greenpoint, L. I., has sold the trotting horse Rarus to Z. E. Simmons, of New York, for $36,000. Rarus was entered for a race at Hartford, Ct., on the day the sale was effected, and, failing to appear, Conklin and the horse were promptly expelled from the track, which amounts to expulsion from all association tracks.

THE WEST.

Police Sergeant Jacob Nohl, of Toledo, Ohio, had a personal difficulty with a man named Saulsbury, and killed him, and then killed himself, both dying in a short time. ....W. R. Bell, cashier of the American Express Company at Kansas City, Mo., has absconded with $10,000 of the company's funds.... Nathan Cobb and his wife engaged in a hair-pulling at Van Wert, Ohio. The husband, getting the worst of the tussle, bravely drew his pistol and sent a bullet through her brain. Mrs. Henry Eagy, a daughter of the Cobbs, went to the assistance of her mother, and was struck a terrible blow on the head with a brick hurled by the father, producing a mortal wound. The fiend then made his escape. The family have long borne a bad name....Dan Logan and one McCormick were taken from prison at Trinidad, Col., by a mob of 200 indignant citizens, and hanged to a tree. They were charged with attempted rape....A savage and deadly duel was recently fought near Kansas City, Mo., by two farmers named James Dobbins and Michael Burns. They met at close quarters and commenced firing. After emptying their revolvers and riddling each other with bullets the desperate men began clubbing each other over the head with their weapons, finally falling from sheer exhaustion, covered with blood. They died glaring one at the other like two wild beasts.... One-half the business part of Farmer City, Ill., has been destroyed by fire. Twenty-four dwellings, seven of them brick, were burned. The total amount of property destroyed is $85,000; insurance, $47,000....A family reunion was held at the residence of Capt. Sample, of Keokuk, Iowa. The family and guests partook copiously of ice-cream, and were so badly poisoned that medical attendance was called in to save the lives of some of them. The vanilla extract used in flavoring the ice-cream is said to have caused the poisoning.

As has ever been the case in Chicago, the people flocked to see John Dillon last week in "Our Next President," which is continued for the first three days of the present week at McVicker's elegant and commodious theater. Then a new comedy, written by a Chicago journalist, called "A Quarter to Eleven," is the attraction for the last half. John is supported by a first-rate company, and is as laughter-provoking as of yore.

Chicago packers, since March 1, have salted 1,362,000 hogs, against 1,440,000 for the corresponding period last year, and 1,048,000 in 1877.

A man entered S. S. Rickly's bank at Columbus, Ohio, and engaged in a conversation with the proprietor, who was the only person in the bank, concerning negotiations for some bonds. While the two were thus engaged, a pal of the stranger gained an entrance to the bank by the rear window, and carried off $5,000 in currency and $15,000 in registered bonds. The theft was not discovered until some time afterward....Mark Bangs, United States District Attorney at Chicago, has resigned, and J. B. Leake steps into his shoes....Chicago elevators contain 844,079 bushels of wheat, 2,283,014 bushels of corn, 253,842 bushels of oats, 115,358 bushels of rye, and 87,386 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,583,879 bushels, against 5,318,320 bushels at this period last year.

A Chicago commercial paper publishes advices from 308 counties in the Northwest regarding spring wheat. The increase in acreage is 12.26 per cent.; the average yield per acre, 12.92 bushels, against 11.42 last year. The aggregate yield is placed at 137,849,615 bushels, against 108,744,374 bushels last year. The quality is generally reported better than last year.

The protracted fight of the Western railroad lines has been brought to a conclusion, through a vigorous pressure exerted by the Eastern trunk lines. The old schedule is again operative, and the days of riding for nothing, with free drinks and chromos thrown in, are ended for the present....After nearly four weeks of imprisonment for contempt of court and refusing to obey its order, the executors of Brigham Young's estate have been released through a successful appeal to the Supreme Court of the Territory, which reversed Judge Boreman's order of commitment and ordered the discharge of the prisoners.

THE SOUTH.

Taylor Ake, a negro convicted of rape, was hanged at Austin, Tex., in the presence of 4,000 spectators, mostly negroes. He declared his innocence in a speech to the crowd, and maintained his composure until the black cap was drawn, when he deferred the hanging by various pretexts. The drop fell while he sang "John Brown's Body."

For the three days ending on the evening of Aug. 24 there were 27 deaths from yellow fever in Memphis. During the same period 45 new cases were reported to the Board of Health. For the week ending with that date there were 148 new cases and 31 deaths. The total deaths from yellow fever since the breaking out of the epidemic numbered 177. The State Board of Health had promulgated an order prohibiting citizens from leaving their places of business or abode between the hours of 9 p. m. and 4 a. m. The thieves continued their depredations, notwithstanding the vigilance of the police authorities.

One of the landmarks of the Rebellion era in Richmond, Va., the building known as "Castle Thunder," has been destroyed by fire....Near Corvalle, Texas, officers traced a party of horse-thieves, led by one Jenkins, to a camp-meeting, and determined to arrest them. During the service the attacking party closed around Jenkins and his friends, when six-shooters were drawn on both sides, and shooting began. It seemed like a skirmish in a battle. The firing lasted three minutes. The mourners, preacher and congregation arose and fled into the bushes, accompanied by the shrieks and screams of women and the crying of children. Jenkins was shot in the arm, another man through the ankle and a third in the hip. Several horses were shot and one killed. The posse gained the battle and carried off Jenkins.

At Memphis, for the three days ending at 6 o'clock p. m., Aug. 27, there were twenty-two deaths from yellow fever, and ninety-four new cases. Several prominent citizens had been attacked by the disease. Among the deaths was that of Miss Fannie B. Moores, of Little Rock, Ark., a daughter of the late Solon Borland, ex-United States Senator, and a lady of fine literary ability. The Governor of Tennessee has issued a proclamation urging the people of the State to contribute aid to suffering Memphis. Several cases of fever are reported at New Orleans. The wife of the ex-Confederate Gen. J. B. Hood died of the disease, and Gen. Hood himself and one of his children were down with it. Two deaths from yellow fever are reported from St. Louis, and there are said to be other cases scattered about the city.

Mrs. Chisholm has gone to Kemper county, Miss., to attend, as a witness, the trial of the parties accused of the murder of her husband, Judge Chisholm. She was accompanied by Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, United States District Attorney at New York, who will assist in the prosecution.

GENERAL.

A lively street battle between Orange Young Britons and Irish Catholics occurred in Montreal the other night. About 500 were engaged in the row, many of whom came out with bruised heads. There was no shooting, the weapons consisting of clubs and stones, consequently nobody was killed....An official report from the American Consul at Quebec says there are about 7,000 workingmen out of employment in that city, and that the condition of the working classes in that part of the Dominion is deplorable.

An agent of the Dominion Government in England has contracted for 45,000 tons of steel rails, to be used on the Canada Pacific railroad.

A Washington dispatch says news has reached there of the death of Col. L. D. Ingersoll, of Iowa, for some time past Librarian of the War Department. He has been suffering for a number of months with consumption, and left Washington a few weeks since for Colorado in the hope of checking the disease. He is well known in the Northwest through his newspaper work.....Visible supply of grain in the States and Canada: Wheat, 16,027,000 bushels; corn, 12,140,000 bushels; oats, 1,6[illegible]5,000 bushels; rye, 404,000 bushels; barley, 306,000 bushels.

An independent telephone line from Georgetown, D. C., to Cumberland, Md., is nearly complete. The longest distance between stations is seventy-two miles, and the working of the Edison instruments is found to be perfect. They have recently been used from Washington to Richmond and Lynchburg, Va.

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of War has reviewed the proceedings and findings of the court-martial of Jan. 16, 1864, by which Surgeon General Hammond was dismissed from the service, and recommends that the findings and sentence be annulled and set aside, and that in accordance with the authority conferred by the act of March 15, 1878, the name of William A. Hammond be placed on the retired list of the army as Surgeon General, without back, present or future pay, or allowance of any kind whatsoever. The recommendation of the Secretary of War has been approved by the President.

FOREIGN.

It is said that the Grand Duke Nicholas and Grand Duchess Catherine, of Russia, will act as sponsors at the marriage of King Alfonso.

Among the Nihilists convicted by court-martial at Odessa and sentenced to Siberia is a "woman" of the dangerous age of 15. The gallant officers of the Russian military courts will soon be overhauling cradles in quest of conspirators. Three of the male associates of the "woman" above mentioned have been hanged. In spite of the terrorism of martial law, the Nihilists appear to be still about as active as ever.

Bartholdi's colossal statue of Liberty for New York harbor is making rapid progress towards completion at Paris....The Russian Czar has written to the Pope declaring his readiness to make peace with the Catholic church in Poland....By an imperial trade just issued, the Turkish standing army is to be reduced to 100,000 men—a measure made necessary by the deplorable condition of the finances of the empire, which have been badly demoralized by the subsistence of 500,000 Mussulman refugees in addition to the standing army....The Sultan of Turkey has written, stating his desire to give the Catholic church full liberty in his dominions.

The revolution in Hayti has come to an end. The army of the provisional Government has subdued the insurrection, capturing the towns of Gonaives, Cape Haytien and Port de Paix....Vienna dispatches assert that there is not only a marked coolness in the diplomatic relations of Austria and Russia, but that the long-standing friendship of the two courts has also been interrupted.... The Paris Figaro lately published reports of the existence of cholera at Ostend and Bruges, and the authorities of the former city have decided to bring suit against the newspaper for circulating slanderous and injurious reports. ....It is estimated by a leading financial house in Paris that, owing to the shortage of crops, England, France and Germany will need to purchase at least $100,000,000 worth of grain in the United States.

The two prisoners recently sentenced to be hanged at Odessa were found guilty of preparing explosives to kill the Czar when visiting Nicolaeff. The three other Nihilists, of the five sentenced by the military tribunal, were hanged on the race-course at Odessa. These make twelve executions for political offenses in Russia in about a year....Continued heavy rains are reported in the English agricultural districts, and British workingmen seriously talk of wholesale emigration as their only means of relief.

From South America there comes news of serious riots at Santiago, the capital of Chili, in consequence of popular discontent at the conduct of the war....Sir Rowland Hill, of England, the founder of the cheap-postage system, and one of the original movers in Australian colonization, has just died in London, aged 84 years.

A report comes by way of Japan that the store-ship of the Nordenskjold Arctic expedition has been lost....Not long ago the Cuban Junta in New York threatened to renew the insurrection in the island. The threat has been fulfilled. Two bands of insurgents have taken the field—one in the Holgin district, on the north shore; the other in the Santiago de Cuba district, on the south—both near the eastern end of the island.

Amphibious Chinamen.

The boats called sampans are each the habitation of at least one family of fresh-water sailors. Sometimes they contain the representatives of several generations, from the great-grandfather and grandmother to the new-born babe. All have to pass their whole lives on board together, cooped up in that narrow space which, more frequently than not, they are obliged to share with passengers. Their life is a hard one, constantly exposed to sun and rain, often up to their waists in water; when they have to push their sampan off a sandbank where it has grounded. Descendants of a peculiar race, probably autochthonal, they have always been kept at arm's length by the Chinese. They can neither possess, nor even dwell on land; they have the run of the water and that is all. Their children cannot take part in any public examination, unless three preceding complete generations have renounced the oar for some nobler trade, which in reality amounts to absolute prohibition. These poor despised sampaneers are ready enough to render you a service, and, in many respects, resemble grown-up children.—All the Year Round.

Revenue Receipts—Interesting Facts.

A Washington telegram says the total receipts from internal revenue sources during the past year were $113,445,830. The revenue came from six different sources, namely, the tax upon whisky, highwines and distilled liquors; on manufactured tobacco, beer, and other fermented liquors; on the capital and deposits of banks; from the sale of adhesive stamps to be placed upon bank checks, perfumery, watches, patent medicines, and other things, and from a few other smaller sources. The following table will show the exact amount obtained from each:

Distilled spirits	$ 52,520,264
Tobacco, cigars and snuff	[illegible]
Fermented liquors	10,729,320
Banks and bankers	3,198,288
Adhesive stamps	6,657,537
Miscellaneous sources	517,802
	$113,445,830

The increase in the production of distilled spirits within the last year has been greater than in any year since a record was kept, being more than 25 per cent. In the fiscal year 1879 the production was $71,896,853, while in 1878 it was but $56,103,053, making an increase of $15,789,800 in one year.

The amount of distilled spirits remaining in warehouse at the close of the fiscal year of 1878 was valued at $14,098,773, while the amount remaining at the close of the fiscal year of 1879 was $19,208,603, an increase of $5,119,830.

The increase in the exportation of liquors from this country during the last few years has been very remarkable, and from a mere trifle five years ago it has grown to be one of the largest branches of exportation. We are sending liquors to the countries from which we imported them five years ago. The following shows the value of liquors exported during the last five years:

Fiscal year 1875	$ 567,418
Fiscal year 1876	[illegible]
Fiscal year 1877	2,529,548
Fiscal year 1878	[illegible]
Fiscal year 1879	14,587,787

The Census of 1880.

We learn by dispatches from Washington that Gen. Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of Census, is vigorously pushing forward the preliminary work of his office, and completing as rapidly as practicable the classification of subjects to be confided to the charge of specialists. Mr. F. H. Wines, Secretary of the Illinois State Board of Charities, has been engaged to conduct the inquiries respecting the blind, deaf, and dumb idiots, inmates of prisons and reformatories, etc. The statistics relating to these classes have hitherto been so defective that, as Gen. Walker expressed it, they were not worth printing. Not only is this true, but, like all other worthless statistics, they were worse than useless, because they have been quoted and false conclusions built upon them. An important feature of the new Census law is that which requires the Superintendent to obtain the facts relating to the condition of each railroad corporation, and to the condition, characteristics, and operations of each railroad. The schedules for these inquiries have already been prepared, and are now being sent out. If anything like full replies are received, the people of the United States will be placed in possession of a mass of most complete and valuable information respecting railroads to be found in any country. Gen. Walker says that he finds the matter of obtaining statistics of State, county and municipal debts the most difficult and important of any with which he will have to deal. No plan for gathering this class of statistics has yet been determined upon.

Civil Service and Politics.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.

Charges have been preferred from different parts of the country before the President against Federal officials for active interference in the management of political conventions, and he has been asked whether his Civil-Service order is still in force, or whether, as has been stated in various quarters, he now regards it as a dead-letter. To one of these correspondents the President, a few days since, addressed the following reply:

My Dear General: I have your note as to the inteference of Federal office-holders in the Republican County Conventions. This is the first I have heard of it. I agree with you that the interference of public officials with partisan political management ought to be stopped, and that the order on the subject be enforced. The truth is, that the less public officers have to do with partisan political management the better it is for the public service and for their party. A public officer can best promote the interests of his party by rendering faithful and efficient service in performing the duties of his office. If you will send me the names of those you complain of, with a brief statement of the facts against them, I will see that the affair is looked into and justice done.

I am glad to know that the rule on the subject is more generally complied with as it is better understood, and that the public sentiment sustains it.
R. B. HAYES.

Novel Treatment of Croup.

According to Les Mondes, Dr. Durodie has successfully treated a case of croup, in a child 7 years old, by scraping the larynx. The method is to introduce rapidly the left index finger into the pharynx, so as more surely to reach the upper laryngeal opening; then, with the right hand, a piece of curved whalebone is introduced, having a small piece of sponge fixed at the end, soaked in tepid water. After three or four movements up and down, the instrument was quickly withdrawn, this being done three different times at each seance. The sponge was covered each time with debris of false membranes. The instrument has a reflex as well as a mechanical action, causing spasmodic movements, which provokes the ejection of the false membranes. The child rapidly recovered.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.

The Northwestern Veteran Soldiers' Reunion at Aurora, Ill.—A Big Attendance—A Sham Battle, with All the "Pomp and Circumstance of Glorious War."

The great volunteer soldiers' reunion of the Northwest, held at Aurora, Ill., on the 20th, 21st and 22d days of August, was one of the biggest affairs of the kind ever witnessed. There was a good deal said, a good many things done, and a good time generally, and we regret that our limited space will not warrant an extended report of the affair.

The first day was devoted to the business of reporting, organizing camp, equipment of companies and assignment of quarters.

On the second day there was competitive rifle-shooting by the veterans, company and battalion drills, an address of welcome by Gov. S. M. Cullom and response by Hon. J. C. Sherwin, an address to the soldiers and sailors by Gen. John A. Logan, skirmish fighting and artillery and battalion drill.

But the grand feature of the encampment—the sham battle and capture of the Confederate Fort Wade—was reserved for the third and last day. An immense crowd, variously estimated at from 60,000 to 80,000, witnessed the exciting event.

This fort was named after a Col. Wade, who assisted Gen. Henderson in commanding the rebel fortifications, only a slight stretch of the imagination being required to suggest the name of that well-known Confederate, Wade Hampton.

The Rebs had pickets thrown out before the fort, and a line of skirmishers, besides a regiment of cavalry. The guns—four in number, being the Altoona battery, captured at Atlanta, Ga., at the time of the war—were ably manned, and the orders were given by an experienced gunner. They are cast-iron, twelve-pounders, and, considering their age, material, etc., it was feared that they might be honey-combed and unsafe. No accident happened from this source, but one of the pieces refused to do duty.

The Union army besieging this fort consisted of three divisions, reported in all as 75,000 men. The right wing was composed of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was commanded by Col. E. D. Swain, of Chicago.

The right wing commenced the engagement by throwing out a company of skirmishers, who crept in, in true military fashion, until within rifle-range, when they opened fire upon the Rebel outposts, lying upon their faces in the grass. The firing was returned by the skirmishers (supposed to be dressed in gray), and was kept up for some time, the Federals steadily advancing and making it warm for the Johnnies.

The cavalry company, which was made up of men costumed in the genuine butternut garb of Secesshdom, with calico hatbands, huge straw hats, and calico sashes, rode up to the fort and, after obtaining orders, made a gallant charge upon the enemy's skirmish-line, scattering them in confusion, and taking a few prisoners.

Then the First Regiment threw out skirmishers, which drove a portion of the Rebel troops into the fort. From this time firing began to get quite general. The "heavy artillery" in the fort opened its iron mouths and belched forth fire and smoke with deadly effect, causing the Federal lines to fall back a trifle.

At length a slight breathing spell was taken, in which Maj. Tarble, a member of Gen. Mann's staff, galloped up to the fort bearing a flag of truce, consisting of a white handkerchief upon the point of his sword, and delivered a message to the effect that Gen. Mann would like to have an interview with the commander of Fort Wade, agreeing that there would be no firing by the skirmish-line while the treaty was going on. Gen. Henderson declined the interview in a peremptory manner, and the firing was resumed with increased vigor.

And now one of the grandest sights of the battle-field is presented, that of eight men, stretcher-bearers, with stretchers, wearing white shirts, and having their heads tied up with white handkerchiefs, rushing about the battle-field at full speed, picking up the wounded and dying, and carrying them back into the trenches to a place of safety. But this was burlesqued to a certain degree, for one alleged corpse arose from the ground and started on a dead run when he saw the stretcher-bearers approaching him. Two of the bearers ran him down, and endeavored, by main strength, to get him upon the stretcher, failing at last in the attempt.

The left wing began to advance, drove back the Confedera[illegible] line into the rifle-pits, were in tur[illegible] rallied and routed the Rebs effectu[illegible] off prisoners.

In this wa[illegible] was kept up until at last the engag[illegible]e general, the Confederate skirmish [illegible] were driven into the fort, and the Union troops advanced in solid phalanx, the wings simultaneously closing about the fort. The Joliet battery, consisting of a park, or four pieces, of light artillery, commanded by Maj. Young, was now brought into active service by the Federal forces for the first time. The guns were trained upon the fort, the heavy timbers of which were supposed to have suffered from the effects of the firing to an alarming extent, and deafening shouts arose from the assembled thousands. The right wing, commanded by Col. Swain, which commenced the battle, was also the first division of troops to scale the walls of the fort. A desperate hand-to-hand encounter took place, the rifle rattling and the cannon roar, coupled with the yelling of the contesting parties, making a bedlam as perfect as one could imagine. Gen. Swain's troops were speedily reinforced by the left wing undr Gen. Hilliard and Col. Owen Stewart, the latter force scaling the walls on the opposite side and pouring destruction into the ranks of those who were attempting to hold the fort. Directly afterwards the First Regiment, under Col. Knox, closed in upon the only remaining gap, and the combined forces soon caused the surrender of the besieged. Shouts of victory went up from thousands of throats, and the day was won by the Union troops—which was a result, of course, in accordance with the programme.

And now an incident occurred which struck terror into the hearts of a number of brave men, who were not backward in admitting their superstition to the extent that they considered it an evil omen. Directly upon scaling the walls by the Federal troops, there was, of course, a grand rush for the flag-staff over which the Confederate flag was still proudly floating, and a score of hands seized the rope and attempted to pull it down. It caught at the pulley and refused to budge an inch. In the attempts of the men upon it, the rope parted high up in the air, fifteen feet above the reach of the tallest. A young man pulled off coat and boots and essayed to climb the smooth pole. He ascended only a few feet when his strength gave way, and he was compelled to give it up. Another tried it and failed; but, finally, Pete Gardner, a powder-monkey of the Joliet battery, undertook to haul down the Rebel colors. He ascended higher than any of his predecessors; he reached the rope amid the encouraging cheers of the multitude, and pulled with all his strength. The flag still refused to come down, but waved saucily in the breezes, as if taunting the feeble efforts of the young man to destroy its greatness. But still the boy climbs upward. He has gotten within reach of the bunting itself, and grasps it with his slender hand. A great shout goes up from below as the banner comes tumbling down with a weight that throws young Gardner from his precarious position. He holds on, however, wraps the Confederate colors about him, and slides easily to the ground, where he is caught up and borne off the field upon the shoulders of strong and admiring men. It was agreed that he should keep the flag as a trophy. The men who had confessed their belief that the obstinacy of the rag in letting go its hold was an evil omen were overjoyed at seeing it laid humbly in the dust, while they shuddered at the prospects of another long, tedious struggle in bringing about the desired end. They were men who had been through the appalling scenes of a prolonged and cruel war, and they wanted no more of it.

After the capture of the fort, Gen. Mann made a thrilling speech, thanking the men for the service they had done their country by their brave deeds of the last few hours, and the troops were marched off the field to their quarters.

The sham battle practically ended the three days' encampment. Tents were taken down, luggage packed away, and preparations were made for leaving. Several of the visiting bands gave samples of their work before Gen. Sherer's and Col. Swain's headquarters, and were gratified, in one instance, by a speech from the latter. The thing broke up in some confusion and considerable haste, but without any rows, as might have been expected in a crowd of 60,000 persons.

SAN FRANCISCO'S SENSATION.

The city of San Francisco has just passed through a scene of turbulence and her people have been stirred to a degree of excitement that has not been witnessed on that coast since the days of vigilance committees and mob rule, when violence and bloodshed were of almost hourly occurrence, and law and order were unknown. The occasion of this wave of excitement was the shooting of Rev. Isaac S. Kalloch, candidate of the Workingmen's party for Mayor, by Charles De Young, senior proprietor of the Chronicle newspaper. From the reports of the affair telegraphed to the metropolitan press we glean the following particulars: After Kalloch was nominated by the workingmen of the city as their candidate for Mayor, Charles De Young, in a speech at the State Convention of the Honorable Bilks, announced that he would compel Kalloch's withdrawal from the contest. Subsequently he notified Kalloch that, unless he withdrew, he would rake up his record in the columns of the Chronicle. Kalloch sent back word for him to go ahead; that he could tell worse things about the De Youngs than they could bring against him. On Wednesday last the Chronicle came out with a long article, reviewing Kalloch's career in Boston and Kansas, dwelling particularly on his reported amours, and also ventilating his political and business record. On Thursday and Friday the Chronicle contained similar and more elaborate articles, and dragged in Kalloch's father, now dead, recounting sundry immoralities on his part. Kalloch had advertised a mass-meeting at the Metropolitan Temple last night, at which it was given out he would read a copy of an article published some five years ago by B. F. Naphtaly in a little paper called the Sun. This article was an attack upon the personal and family record of the De Youngs of the most pronounced character, and led to an attempt on their part to kill Naphtaly, which failed. De Young sent Kalloch word that if he read that article he would shoot him on sight. Last night an immense audience gathered at the Metropolitan Temple, and the street outside was packed with a crowd numbering thousands. Kalloch addressed the in-door meeting, scoring the De Youngs mercilessly and reflecting on their personal records and family antecedents in the most direct manner. After adjourning the meeting in the hall he went outside, mounted a stand, and spoke briefly. After reviewing the attacks of the Chronicle upon himself, he said: "In maligning the reputation of my father, who has filled an honorable grave for many years, these journalistic vipers have rendered the most vicious retaliation on my part necessary and justifiable. These disgraceful records make such an attack possible, and I am justified in pronouncing them the bastard progeny of a prostitute." He said he had the Sun article in his pocket [Cries of "Read it, read it!"]; but he did not wish to expend all his ammunition at once. It would be published immediately in full in the Workingmen's paper, the Open Letter, and next Tuesday evening he would take it up and comment upon it.

Charles De Young evidently considered the proceedings of the evening equal provocation to the actual reading of the article. He accordingly drove to the Metropolitan Temple in a coupe at a time when Kalloch was about stepping into a carriage with Carl Browne. De Young sent an American District messenger-boy to him to say that a gentleman wished to speak with him. As Kalloch approached the coupe De Young fired, hitting him in the breast, just above the heart. Kalloch staggered and turned to escape. De Young fired again, hitting him in the hip or thigh. It would appear that trouble had been anticipated, as quite a number of workingmen were in the vicinity of the Temple. They at once made a rush for the coupe, seized the horses' heads, and endeavored to get De Young out. He kept them at bay for a moment with his pistol. Meantime an officer arrived on the scene. The crowd seized the coupe and overturned it. As it went over De Young got out. He and the officer were at once attacked, the officer knockedd own and trampled on, and De Young beaten about the head and face, though not very seriously. The officer, De Young, and the driver of the coupe struggled through the crowd amid cries, "Hang him!" "Kill him!" At the corner of Fifth and Market streets two more officers made their appearance, and with their assistance De Young was taken to the Baldwin Hotel, and, escaping by the other entrance, got into a carriage and drove rapidly to the police station, the crowd following.

De Young was at once taken to one of the tank halls, while a crowd, numbering thousands, surrounded the prison and evinced a desire to make an attack.

Meantime the police rapidly assembled, ropes were stretched across the streets leading to the prison, and every preparation made to resist an attack. The Chief of Police at once called Gen. McComb in consultation. Gen. McComb ordered the military to assemble at their armories.

News of the tragedy spread like wildfire through the city, and the streets were soon crowded with excited throngs. Strong guards were placed over the Chronicle business and printing offices to prevent their being sacked.

In the afternoon there was an immense gathering of workingmen, at which there was manifested a general desire to march on the jail, take De Young out and hang him. It was decided, however, to await the arrival of Dennis Kearney, who was a short distance out of the city, before proceeding to extremities. Kearney hastened back, arriving in the evening. He was met by a crowd of several thousand, who received their leader with almost a frantic exhibition of joy. Three of the workingmen's military companies, numbering 100 men, with rifles and fixed bayonets, were on hand as an escort. With Kearney at their head, the procession moved up Market street for the sand lots, filling the streets for several blocks, and making the air ring with cheers for Kearney and cries of "Hang De Young." Kearney addressed the excited multitude, advising the preservation of law and order. His counsel was willingly accepted by the populace, and at the conclusion of the meeting the multitude quietly dispersed to their homes.

Public sentiment seems mainly to run against De Young, partly on account of the manner of his attack, giving his victim no chance for defense or escape, and partly because the Chronicle in its assaults upon Kalloch has been abusive beyond all precedent in political campaigns.

The Chronicle editorially contained the following defense of Charles De Young:

"To our political friends: For the information of the New Constitution party in the interior, where the affair between I. S. Kalloch and one of the proprietors of this paper may be altogether misunderstood, we say that the occurrence was entirely a personal matter, which in no sense whatever affects or concerns the political principles of the Chronicle or the party which it supports. We put it to any brave and honorable man in this community, who has a mother or the memory of one, and who loves, respects and reveres her, if such language as that used by Kalloch in the hearing of thousands does not challenge and provoke personal chastisement to the death. It would be infinitely worse than death to hear such an insult put upon one's mother, and no man has a right to give it without being prepared for the worst of consequences. The man who would not resent it is meaner than a dog, and the mode of resentment in such cases is the same throughout the civilized world. Let those who have made haste to condemn Charles De Young for shooting Kalloch calmly reflect upon all this—mentally put themselves in his place—and then say whether they desire that a slander-loving mob should be permitted to take this case out of the hands of the law."

A San Francisco dispatch of the 25th says that Charles De Young was arraigned in the Police Court on a charge of attempting to murder Kalloch. He was committed without bail. Kalloch's condition was improving, and the chances were very favorable to his recovery. The dispatch further says: "Mrs. De Young knows nothing of Charles' shooting, special editions of the Chronicle being printed for her. Charles conducts his paper and new constitution campaign from his cell. Five cells and an airy corridor are at his disposal. The authorities are perfectly easy. No outbreak will occur."

Falling Asleep Together.

About six years ago a certain prominent man died in a neighboring village, leaving as the only survivors of a highly respectable stock represented by his family his mother, aged about 90, and an invalid sister, aged about 30. There also survived him his second wife, a woman about 40 years of age. The deceased left his mother, sister, and wife comfortably well off in a nice home. This spring the wife turned the aged mother and invalid sister out of doors. "Mammy," as the old lady was familiarly known by the villagers, and "Libbie," the daughter, were both on the very verge of the grave, "Mammy" from old age and "Libbie" from the ravages of consumption. They were beloved by all of the villagers on account of their purity of heart and beautiful character. The kind-hearted neighbors secured an upper room for them in a house near their old home, and contributed articles of furniture, food, medicine, and anything else which love could suggest to make as comfortable as possible the few remaining days which they might have on earth. Lying in separate beds in the same room the last days were passed by the mother and sister. The wish of each was that they might enter the dark valley together. Libbie could not move, but "Mammy" would insist on being taken over to Libbie's bed every little while to assure herself that her daughter was still alive. The conversations of the two were most affecting; they were of resignation, hope, and mutual love. One night while "Mammy" was asleep Libbie breathed her last. When the old lady awoke her first question was concerning her daughter. When told she was dead she said, "I am so glad she is out of pain. I wish now that I could go to sleep and not wake." And her wish was granted, for, closing her eyes in a peaceful slumber, she soon passed into that sleep which knows no waking. A single funeral sermon was pronounced over mother and daughter.—Syracuse Herald.

The Great Kung Foo Wing.

The Chinese have long regarded telegraph wire as a very convenient source of tea-box nails, while some of these child-like individuals caught in the act of cutting down the posts have been known to plead that they thought they grew there. The Celestials have hitherto shown a peculiar spite against the telegraph, both cable and land line, and it is satisfactory to learn that they are now much better disposed to it, the telephone having opened their eyes to its advantages. The fact is, they did not understand the former telegraphs, and they were unsuited to the Chinese language, which has no alphabet. But now the telephone enables them to converse, and transmits with peculiar fidelity the metallic twang of their monosyllabic language. They are vastly delighted with it, and have just discovered for the first time that it was originally Chinese, having been invented in the year 960 by Kung Foo Whing, an announcement which will satisfy their self-complacency without disturbing the equanimity of Prof. Bell.—Chambers' Journal.

The Old Khedive's Vengeance.

In 1833 the Colonel of one of Mohammed Ali's regiments in Mecca had rendered himself odious to the soldiers, and while on parade, firing with blank cartridges, the officer was shot. No notice was taken of it at the time, and it was thought that the thing was all forgotten. Two years afterward, in the regular course of exchanges, the battalion returned to Cairo, marched into the citadel, and piled arms. A court-martial was immediately called, and the battalion found guilty of murder. As the individual could not be discovered, the battalion was decimated, and 134 were marched outside the gate in separate squads, and shot by their own comrades. My informant happened to be riding outside the walls, and, attracted by the roll of musketry, saw the execution of the luckless soldiers, some sitting, some standing, and some on their knees, according to the humor of the officers.—North American Review.

Since July, 1878, no gold has been coined at the London Mint. This is due to contraction of trade and influx of gold from Australia.

THREE sons of the Siamese twins, Chang and Eng, are now living in Sumner county, Kan. They recently appeared at the United States Land Office in Wichita, in a contest in which one of them was [illegible] and the other [illegible]. They are said to be enterprising business men.

CONNECTICUT newspapers are now discussing with some vigor the proposed amendment to the State constitution making sessions of the Legislature biennial. The amendment will be voted upon next autumn. Twenty-six States of the Union have already adopted amendments of this kind.

THE Lieutenant who ran away and left the Prince Imperial to be speared by the Zulus has been received with great enthusiasm at Portsmouth, England, where a large number of people welcomed him with an address, certifying their "entire confidence in his valor as a British officer and honor as a gentleman."

THE French are proposing to open up Africa in right good earnest. The Government is about to extend the railway system to Senegambia, and contemplates the laying of some 1,200 miles of railway, which will enable it to throw into the hands of Frenchmen the bulk of the trade of an immense populous region in Northwestern Africa.

THE editor of the Cleveland Plaindealer has seen Mrs. Langtry, the professional English beauty, who lives sumptuously from the sale of her photographs, and pronounces her far inferior in personal appearance to many Cleveland ladies. He calls her a scant-haired, ill-dressed, rather sweet-faced woman, but without striking beauty of form or face.

THE leading newspaper of Canada the Toronto Globe, disapproves of the course of the United States in calling upon foreign Governments to stop Mormon emigration—or, as it calls it, putting foreign countries into religious quarantine. But it speaks favorably of the suggestion that the United States should check the immigration of Mormons by prohibitory laws to be enforced at each seaport.

A CHINAMAN in a prison-cell at Virginia City, Nev., had some opium, but no pipe to smoke it in. He got a vial, into one end of which he drilled a small hole by working industriously for a week with a nail, which he whirled between the palms of his hands. A stem was made by splitting a stick, grooving it and tying the halves together again. The pipe thus constructed was held together by sticking paper on it with paste made by soaking bread in water.

OLIVER BODFISH, of Syracuse, aged 84, decided to marry for the third time, but he went about it deliberately. Remembering that a certain girl in his old Massachusetts home was very pretty fifty years ago, and being informed that she had lately become a widow, he made her a matrimonial proposal by mail, a condition being that she should still seem comely in his sight. He offered to pay her fare to Syracuse, and, if he did not like her looks, to send her back again. She made the journey, he was pleased with her, and they were married.

THE recent dismissal of four West Point cadets for hazing has stirred up a great excitement, and strong efforts are making to secure a modification of the sentence at Washington. It appears that the original order of dismissal included six cadets, four of whom were corporals, but the other two were finally relieved from expulsion and punished by being put back a year with the "plebes" whom they had hazed. The friends of the four corporals are now working hard to get the same terms for them, and it is thought most likely that the President will so order. Curiously enough, General Schofield, the present Superintendent of the academy, got into trouble for hazing when he was a cadet, and Phil Sheridan was turned back a year for the same offense.

SANGUINE railroad people are predicting the construction of three transcontinental roads in the next ten years, two of them to be done in five. With one route, the Northern Pacific, the country is familiar, and it will not take many more wheat crops like that in the Northwest this year to make its construction easy. The second, to the Guaymas on the Gulf of California, by way of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, will be built in the next two years. As this road, instead of linking itself to the Southern Pacific, expects simply to use that road as a connection to San Francisco, the latter will be extended to Eagle pass, on the Rio Grande; and it will there meet the Galveston, Houston and San Antonio railroad, which is to be carried on from San Antonio, Tex., by its largest owner, Albert Pierce, giving the Southwest a connection with the Pacific ocean via the Southern Pacific. This would make the construction of a road along Tom Scott's Texas and Pacific, El Paso route useless, and rob its extension beyond Fort Worth of any future value as part of a transcontinental subsidy. Should the Darien ship canal be also built in the next ten or twenty years, as is now confidently expected by its projector, it would occupy the same relation to these transcontinental roads which the Erie canal does to the great trunk lines, regulating freight rates and reducing fares; and the essential features of through railroad traffic now would remain unchanged.

A SUB-COMMITTEE of the English Parliamentary commission appointed to study the agricultural depression in Great Britain will visit America in time to investigate our present harvest, and report on the influence of American production on the agricultural interests of Great Britain. The members of the committee who are coming to America are Messrs. Albert Pell and Clare Sewall Read, both of whom are men admirably qualified for the task. Their deductions from their observations and experiences in this country will be quite as valuable here as in England, and their report will be awaited with much interest.

MRS. STELLA LEVY has been arrested, in Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, for a novel attempt to swindle. She appeared at the office of the County Commissioners one day recently, and prayed that she be given support for two small children, she being unable to keep them without assistance. She was allowed $8 a week. Some time afterward it accidentally came to light that the children were not Mrs. Levy's, but that they belonged to Mrs. Clara Robinson, who was paying her $10 a week to board them. Investigation showed that Mrs. Levy had branch establishments, and was playing the same game in neighboring counties.

SHORT CATECHISM.

Some Sockdologers for Secretary Sherman to Answer—Has His Policy Proved Such a Shining Success?—A Few Facts and Figures Which Would Seem to Indicate Otherwise—How Widows and Orphans Are Plundered for the Benefit of the Syndicate.

[Washington Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Secretary Sherman has left here for Ohio. He goes into the State to make campaign speeches—to induce the voters to cast their suffrages for Charles Foster, his creature. In view of the fact that the impending campaign is one in which Secretary Sherman is the central figure, and who will reap all the advantages of a Republican victory, the following catechism, for the guidance of those who will listen to his speeches and see fit to ask him some questions, is prepared:

Secretary Sherman will tell the people of Ohio that he has closed all refunding operations. This he told the people of Maine. He deliberately deceived them, and will likewise attempt to deceive the people of Ohio. He has on the contrary, not yet closed his recent contract with the pet Syndicate, which at one fell swoop got control of all of the 4 per cent. bonds. Of the $180,000,000 subscribed in these bonds by the syndicate, $45,000,000 yet remain unpaid for; and Secretary Sherman, in that spirit of liberality which he has always extended to a few Eastern banks, has extended the time for final settlement until Oct. 1st, although the original contract, which he has violated at discretion, provided a final settlement should be made on July last. The immediate result is that the banks have the use of $45,000,000 until Oct. 1st which belongs to the people, and should have been in the treasury thirty days ago. With money worth 2 per cent. at call, it will require the aid of a lightning calculator to find how much money the syndicate will make out of the $45,000,000 which Secretary Sherman allows them to use.

This is not the only reason, though, that Secretary Sherman gave the Syndicate an indulgence. Had a settlement been made according to the contract, 4-per-cent. bonds would not now be at a premium—they might be held at par. Sherman, fearful of this decline, indulged the Syndicate rather than pressed them, because he wanted to keep the bonds up until after the Ohio election, so that he could point to the negociation of the 4-per-cents. with pride; and the higher the premium at which they were held, the more pride he would take in the transaction. It may be well, also, for the people of Ohio to know, while Secretary Sherman is among them, that on the day the contract with the Syndicate for the 4-per-cents. was made the United States had on deposit in the hands of the national banks the sum of $300,000,000, and these same banks still have about $40,000,000 in 4 per cent. bonds to loan Western farmers at 2 per cent. per month to enable them to get their crops into market. The syndicate have three months to pay for these bonds, during which time they collected the interest, which at 4 per cent. per annum is 1 per cent., aggregating $180,000 profit before they were called on for one cent. This is not all. The monopoly thus put in the hands of these bankers made a corner on the bonds, and they were enabled to charge 2 per cent. premium on the bonds, which makes a clear profit of $360,000, or, altogether, the profits of this transaction between the national banks and John Sherman was $540,000.

Now, who does this money come out of? During the extra session of Congress a widow of a Union soldier wrote a member of Congress that she had certain United States bonds in trust for her children, the proceeds of her deceased husband's pension; that she had applied for the interest on her bonds, and for the first time ascertained that her bonds were among those called in, and the interest had ceased. She requested the member of Congress to go to the Treasury Department and exchange her bonds for four per cents. The matter was presented to the United States Treasury, and the reply was that the party could get the face value of the bonds in money, but the Government had no securities for sale. The consequence was that the poor woman had to pay a premium of 2½ per cent. (the small dealers must have their profit, hence the half cent. additional), and the exchange for transmission was half of 1 per cent. more, entailing a loss equal to nine months' interest on her little patrimony. While the great capitalists of the country are lauding Sherman's financial success, somehow the poor widows and orphans are not able to appreciate it.

THE county of Lawrence, in the Black Hills, shows a lower death-rate than any other county in the United States, except one in Kentucky. This seems in conflict with the general opinion that mining is an unhealthy occupation.

A BOARD BILL

Presented to Hayes and Sherman by One Casanave, of Louisiana,

Accompanied by a Meaning Threat to Show Them Up if They Did Not Come Down.

Seventeen, Hundred and Fifty Dollars Paid to the President-Maker After Considerable Delay.

Meaty Letter from Casanave to the President.

He Protests Against Being Left to Hold the Bag While the Other Fellows Get Away With the Swag.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

John Sherman, when he went to Louisiana to manipulate the Returning Board in Mr. Hayes' interest, saddled himself down with a crowd of Louisiana men who are continually howling for more rewards under threats of exposure of his complicity in their peculiar political transactions. The number of people who have been cared for simply to stop their troublesome mouths is as notorious as it is extraordinary. In caring for the political remnants of the Returning Board the administration has overlooked one. Casanave. He is a saddle-colored brother, and, perhaps, here lies the discrimination. Some time ago the members of the Returning Board were prosecuted for their fraud. They employed attorneys jointly and have since been sued by their counsel for their fees in defending them, judgments being obtained. As Casanave has never received any reward from the administration, he has had no money to satisfy these judgments. This has resulted in a trip to Washington and a cool demand that Sherman put up the money for him. How Sherman has partly complied with his demands is related in an extraordinary statement, in the form of an interview, prepared and corrected by Casanave himself just before he returned to New Orleans. After a tediously-egotistical introduction, in which he describes himself as "a pleasant and agreeable gentleman of culture and polished manners so characteristic of educated gentlemen of his nationality—he is of French extraction—and exhibits in his manners that fine sense of honor so universal among his people," he goes on as follows:

"When these criminal proceedings were begun, Messrs. Anderson and Wells, against whom the prosecution was particularly and especially directed, employed Messrs Cullum and Castillane, attorneys, to defend them. I assented to it upon assurance from Mr. Anderson, who showed me a letter, which he said was from Washington, and, I supposed, written by Secretary Sherman, to the effect that funds would be sent to defray all the expenses incurred for our defense. After the trial, and the acquittal of Anderson, Messrs. Cullum and Castillane demanded their fee, and, after repeated efforts to collect it, they sued the board and got judgment. The other members having nothing, my property was seized and advertised for sale by the Sheriff to pay the amount. The judgment was originally $5,000, but $1,875 has been paid, leaving a balance of $3,125."

"Do the other members of the board refuse to pay this amount?"

"Well, they have failed to do it."

"Are they not holding good offices in the New Orleans Custom House?"

"Yes. Anderson, Wells and Kenner, and all their family connections, numbering not less than forty persons, are drawing money from the United States Government, besides the stealings, which, if what everybody says is true, amount every month to as much as this judgment."

"How did you happen to come here about this matter? I should think that the other members, having such good places in the Custom House, would not care to have this case brought to the attention of the administration?"

"Before coming here I called upon Anderson and Kenner, who refused to pay anything. I went to Wells' office frequently to see him, but could never find him. He has been absent from his office a long time, and it is difficult to find him. Seeing that I could get no assistance from the other members, and being pressed continually for payment by the attorney, who threatened to sell me out at Sheriff's sale, if I did not pay speedily, I thought I would come to Washington and seek relief from those I had helped into the high and lucrative offices which they now hold. This is what brought me here. I could get nothing out of the officers in Louisiana. Therefore I came to try those higher up, but no less the creatures of the Returning Board. I had great confidence in my mission here, remembering the ancient Spanish saying that 'it is not much to give a leg to him who gave you the fowl.'"

"How many appointments have Anderson, Wells and Kenner of their family connections and friends in the New Orleans Custom House?"

"Not less than fifty, including sons, sons-in-law and fathers-in-law and their sons.

"To illustrate: There is Anderson, deputy collector, salary, $3,000; Anderson's son, clerk, salary $1,400; Ben Bloomfield (Anderson's son's father-in-law), auditor, $2,500; Geo. Bloomfield (son of Ben, and brother-in-law of Anderson's son), clerk, $1,200; R. Notilie (friend of Anderson), salary, $1,460; Louis Demaraise (friend of Anderson), salary, $2,500; William R. Johnson (friend of Anderson), $1,600; and Louis E. Salles, also a friend of Anderson, $2,000 per annum. Mr. Salles has charge of the dead-head and sinecure roll which has drawn from the treasury from $1,500 to $3,000 for each month since Anderson and Wells have controlled the New Orleans Custom House, and this fact must be well known to the Secretary of the Treasury. Then there are Louis M Kenner, deputy naval officer, salary, $2,500; a brother (Alexander Kenner), clerk, $1,600; another brother (Dick Kenner), $600 per annum. Wells is surveyor of the port, at a salary and fees amounting to upward of $3,000; his son (Alex. Wells), deputy surveyor, at a salary of $2,500; R. B. Robinson (son-in-law of Wells), salary, $1,800; S. S. Wells (son), salary, $1,080, and others of the family connections."

"Who have you seen about this matter of relieving you from paying this judgment?"

"I called on the President in company with Gen. Sypher the next day after my arrival. He treated me courteously, but made no offer to relieve me and remarked that he had nothing to do with it, but advised me to see Anderson, who, he thought, would settle it. Gen. Sypher suggested to the President that he convey his wishes in this regard to Mr. Anderson in authoritative form, which would no doubt induce Anderson to pay, but for me [Casanave] to return to Louisiana with the President's verbal message would be useless. The President took alarm at this suggestion and retreated behind the Cabinet, which was about assembling. I also called on Secretary McCrary, who expressed much sympathy for me and said: 'If I was able I would pay this judgment myself, but I am a poor man and live entirely on my salary. It should be paid at once.' Of course I was very grateful to the Secretary for these kind expressions. I next saw Messrs. Shellabarger and Wilson, to whom I explained my case. They advised me to see Assistant Secretary Hawley, which I did in company with Gen. Sypher. Mr. Hawley referred me to Mr. Shellabarger, who, he said, would attend to it. I saw Messrs. Shellabarger and Wilson, who assured me, on the promise of Mr. Hawley, that the money would be raised on the return of Mr. Sherman, who was then in Maine and would be home in a week. I waited contented a week, believing it would be satisfactorily arranged. I called on Mr. Sherman on his return, who received me very cordially. I stated my case to him, explaining how my property was about to be sacrificed, and showed him a copy of the Sheriff's writ. He answered that he knew nothing about it, and that he did not see why Anderson did not settle this matter, but that the money ought to be raised, and that he would give me $100, which he attempted to take from his pocket, remarking, at the same time, 'You go and see some of the leading Republicans and collect something from them.' My reply to him was: 'I have been to see the President and yourself, and I know no other leading Republicans. Is that the best you can do for me, Mr. Secretary?' He answered: 'That is all I can do. I am only here on a salary, and I can't pay everything.' I then took my hat, as I did so, saying: 'I thank you, sir. That amount would not pay my traveling expenses to Washington!' Then I left his office, being very much disappointed and depressed at the thought that I was going to be sacrificed and ruined while others were being enriched in the high offices into which they had climbed on the ladder I helped to set up. For the first time in my life I realized the force of the French aphorism, 'Serve a great man and you will know what sorrow is.' I again sought the advice of Shellabarger, to whom I expressed my great disappointment at the manner in which I had been treated by the Secretary after having been assured upon the word of Mr. Hawley that the matter would be arranged on the return of Mr. Sherman from Maine. In my excited feelings I said to Mr. Shellabarger that I would expose the whole matter of the Returning Board proceedings and go home and pocket the loss. He very kindly advised me not to throw the handle after the pot, but wrote a letter setting forth the facts in the case, and advised me to wait results for a few days. I acted upon his advice and prepared a letter, a copy of which I will furnish you, which I delivered to the President and a copy to Mr. Sherman. In a few hours after the delivery of this letter, I was informed that $500 had been sent to Collector Badger at New Orleans, to apply in payment of the judgment, and that more would be sent. The next day I was told that $500 more had been forwarded to be applied in the same manner, which I have since learned is not correct.

"The second installment of $500 was not sent. On the morning of the 13th I received this dispatch from home:

"NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 9, 1879.

"G. Casanave, Washington, D. C.:

"The stable and contents advertised to be sold Saturday, 16th. What am I to do? P. CASANAVE.

"This alarmed me very much, and I went at once with the dispatch to Messrs. Shellabarger and Wilson, and appealed to them to see Secretary Sherman immediately, and get a definite answer whether relief would be given me, and if so, when, as the time for the sale was only three days off; for if no relief was to be expected from the administration I would go home at once and try to save my property. In a few hours, affording time for a conference between Sherman and his attorneys, this dispatch was handed me by Mr. Shellabarger, which he asked me to send, and I did so at my own expense:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 13, 1879.

"To E. North Cullum, New Orleans, La., Exchange Alley, near Custom House street.

"Should we send $1,000 more on Returning Board judgment, will you give reasonable time for balance? SHELLABARGER & WILSON.

"To which the following is a reply shown me by Mr. Shellabarger:

"NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 13, 1879.

"Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson, Washington, D. C.:

"If you send me $250 more, making a total of $1,750, and Casanave will give security not to dispose of his property, I will wait till Jan. 1.

"E. NORTH CULLUM.

"After reading this dispatch I said to Mr. Shellabarger that I desired the matter definitely settled, so that I could be relieved and my property released from the custody of the Sheriff, and that I could not give security for the payment of the balance of the judgment. Mr. Shellabarger wrote this substantially on the back of the telegram inclosed in an envelope, and I carried it to Mr. Sherman. In about an hour after I called on Mr. Shellabarger to learn if he had received any answer. He said, yes. Webb Hayes had just been there, and said that a detective reported that there was fraud and collusion in this matter, and that the whole thing was dropped, and that I should go to see the President. This statement overwhelmed me with surprise. I was completely dumbfounded. I finally said that I would go to the President if Mr. Shellabarger would give me a note to him saying that he desired to see me. He gave me this card:

"I recommend Casanave to call on the President to give him the opportunity to speak to Casanave about the fraud that the detective spoke about, provided the President so desires. S. S.

"I called at the White House and learned that the President had gone for the day. This thing worried me terribly, and I went to my room thinking about Hayes charging me with fraud and collusion. Fraud and collusion for $3,000! And even that amount, if raised, would not be paid to me! I might have made $50,000 once if I had committed a fraud, and I think it would have been in the interest of the country and good morals if I had taken the money. For not doing so I have been pronounced a fool. After sleeping on the matter I concluded that if I did not want to lose my character, as well as my property, I had better quit the company of Mr. Hayes and his Secretary of the Treasury. I may be able to stand the loss of my property, but to be charged with fraud and collusion by this administration ought to shame the devil. I determined to return home at once, and made preparations to do so, but before doing so I concluded to call once more on Mr. Shellabarger, who had been so kind to me. I did so, and stated my grievance again, including the fraud story, which I denounced as false and infamous. He went to the Secretary again and in a little while returned and handed me this despatch, which I signed and sent to Mr Cullum:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 15, 1879.

"E. North Cullum, Exchange alley, New Orleans, La.:

"Will cause $1,000 to be mailed to-day, provided you wait till January for the balance and stop sales to-morrow. Answer immediately.

"G. CASANAVE.

"To which I received the reply:

"NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 15, 1879.

"G. Casanave, Washington, D. C.:

"I will not. Sale goes on. E. NORTH CULLUM.

"I handed the dispatch to Mr. Shellabarger, who indorsed on the back as follows:

"I telegraphed that I would send the $1,000 if the sale would be stopped and the plaintiff wait for the balance until January. This is the answer. What shall I do with the $1,000?

"To Secretary Sherman.

"I delivered this to Mr. Sherman at the Cabinet meeting through a messenger. He returned it to Mr. Shellabarger written upon as follows:

"You may offer the twelve hundred and fifty dollars. J. S.

"Upon receiving this I telegraphed Cullum as follows. (Mr. Shellabarger wrote the telegram):

"If stop sale and wait for the balance till January will send twelve hundred and fifty to-morrow and arrange the security you ask.

"To which I received the following reply, which I handed to Mr. Shellabarger late Friday evening:

"NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 15, 1879.

"G. Casanave, Washington, D. C.:

"See my telegram to Shellabarger and Wilson. I must have in hand $1,750 by 10 a. m. to-morrow. If not sale shall go on. The security you offer satisfactory. E. NORTH CULLUM.

"On Saturday morning Mr. Shellabarger telegraphed Collector Badger to turn over the $500 for Cullum and deposited $1,250 to Cullum's credit in Riggs' Bank, and he said Mr. Riggs had telegraphed Cullum to draw for that amount. About 2 o'clock I received this telegraph from my brother:

"NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 16, 1879.

"G. Casanave, Washington D. C.:

"All proceedings stopped until Jan. 1.

"P. CASANAVE.

"Here ends the first chapter."

"Then, if I understand you correctly, the administration has paid on this judgment against the Returning Board, for the payment of which your property was seized by the Sheriff, $1,750."

"Yes, sir. After pleading and begging for seventy-five days I wormed out of the administration this amount."

"How much will remain unpaid?"

"The balance of the judgment unpaid will be $1,375, besides the costs of court and the Sheriff's costs, which will amount to perhaps $1,000 more."

"Who do you expect to pay for all this?"

"I can't tell; but according to the arrangement made with Mr. Cullum, who received the $1,750, I am expected to give security for its payment when I get home."

"You seem to have been badly treated."

"Yes, sir; I have been. I have suffered both socially and materially. For my services in 1872 I received State warrants, which I negotiated at a heavy discount. In 1876 I received no compensation whatever, but was dragged from my home and business to Washington and confined thirty-three days in the Capitol, as I have before stated, and afterwards incarcerated in the parish prison in New Orleans, and when I was discharged here, in company with others of the board, I went to the Sergeant-at-Arms, John G. Thompson, to inquire what provision had been made for defraying our expenses, and to ascertain how we were to get home, and we were politely informed by that dignitary that we might walk home. My present visit is an additional expense. I have already been here three weeks. If a part of the judgment falls upon me, which is now possible, I do not know what the whole of my outlay will be. Heretofore my standing and credit have been good, as any honorable man in New Orleans who knows me will cheerfully testify. My business was prosperous and profitable, but, since my connection with Wells and Anderson and Returning Board matters, I have been proscribed in various ways."

"Have you never received anything in the way of compensation for your services or expenses from the administration?"

"No; nothing whatever. Yes—I mistake. I did receive something. On the 3d of March, 1876, when the Returning Board members were set at liberty from their imprisonment in the Capitol, we called on Mr. Hayes, who was stopping at Mr. Sherman's, on K street. He received us with a gush, and invited us to take a petite sandwich and a cup of coffee. This is the extent of his favors to me. My relations to this administration have been like the tailor of Campello, 'who worked for nothing and found thread.'"

"Mr. Casanave, when do you expect to return to your home in Louisiana?"

"I hope to shake the dust of Washington from my feet within the next twenty-four hours and not to return until this administration, which betrayed the Republican party of my State, shall have terminated its infamous existence.

CASANAVE TO THE PRESIDENT.

The following is Casanave's letter to the President, written on the 7th of this month, in which he enumerates his troubles. It is not reasonable to suppose that Casanave would make the demands and statements of the last few days if he did not have an unusual claim upon the administration. Friends of the Sherman boom ought to be the ones to explain the nature of this claim:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 7, 1879.

MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following facts, upon which I respectfully solicit such relief as you may be able to offer me. In 1872 I was elected by the State Senate of Louisiana a member of the Returning Board of that State. I did not desire nor solicit the office, and I accepted it with great reluctance. In 1876 the grave and responsible duty of determining the result of the election for President of the United States devolved upon that board. Its deliberations were watched with profound solicitude by the whole country, while the leaders of two great political parties hovered around it awaiting the result of its deliberations with that intense anxiety only known to expectants of the spoils of public office. The board found for the Republicans, and the Democrats, disappointed and chagrined, at once commenced criminal proceedings against its members. Counsel were employed to defend us at a stipulated fee of $5,000, which Mr. T. C. Anderson assured me would be paid out of funds to be sent from Washington. At the conclusion of the prosecution, counsel demanded their fee, which, not being paid, they instituted suit, and after a hearing in court obtained judgment against all the members of the board. A writ of fieri facias (copy herewith inclosed) was issued directing the Sheriff to seize and sell sufficient property of the defendants to satisfy the judgment of $5,000, less $1,875. The Sheriff, finding no property belonging to Anderson, Wells and Kenner, seized my property, and now holds the same subject to sale under his writ. If my property is sacrificed under that execution it will render me bankrupt. I am a poor man, and am unable to sustain such a loss. I have always assumed a full share of the responsibility attaching to the official acts of the Returning Board, although I have never enjoyed of the fruits resulting from its findings, and in this connection I would respectfully remind you that I hold no office under your administration, and have derived no pecuniary benefits whatever therefrom; but, on the contrary, I have sustained considerable loss in my business on account of my identity with the board. Messrs. Anderson, Wells and Kenner, the other three members, and their numerous family connections, are enjoying lucrative positions in the employ of the Government. I protest against being mulcted for the cost of the criminal proceedings against the Returning Board while others enjoy the honor and emoluments resulting from the decision. It is neither just nor honorable to impose this heavy burden upon me. It would be more becoming the beneficiaries of our acts to discharge this debt. Upon my arrival in Washington two weeks ago I was assured upon the promise of Assistant Secretary Hawley that the amount required to satisfy the judgment would be raised as soon as the Secretary returned. I called upon Mr. Sherman yesterday and he proffered me a contribution of $100 as the only relief he could offer me, which I was compelled to decline out of respect for the great Finance Minister of our Government. I expect to take my departure for Louisiana in a few days, and if any arrangement can be made of this matter to offer me the relief to which, under these circumstances, I believe I am justly and honorably entitled, I will be under obligation to those through whose influence it may be accomplished. I am, very respectfully, G. CASANAVE.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary of the Treasury—DEAR SIR: I hereby inclose you a copy of an unofficial letter addressed to the President. Very respectfully, G. CASANAVE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 7, 1879.

Collapse of the Sherman Boom.

[Washington Telegram to Chicago Times.]

The general opinion among Republicans at Washington is that the Sherman boom is nearly, if not quite, at an end. There is no leading Republican who has so many bitter personal enemies as he, even among his own party associates. Then the culmination of his connection with the disreputable Louisiana crowd has not yet come. The Returning Board scoundrels will hang about his neck as heavy as mill-stones before the next nominating convention. It is now understood why Casanave dared to talk as plainly as he did, and yet be certain that further drafts made by him will have to be honored. The next day after the expose of Casanave, Sherman said that the money raised had been subscribed by prominent Republicans, but neither he nor his counsel, Shellabarger and Wilson, can name a single Republican who has paid or would pay a single cent to save the scoundrels from perdition. Besides this, Sherman says that money must be raised in some way to meet the rest of the judgment. This shows that Casanave in his talk has by no means exhausted his resources.

MILLER PEACHES,

And Acknowledges the Rape of Louisiana—Tilden Carried the State by 8,000 or 10,000.

Justice Samuel F. Miller, who voted with the Republicans every time in the Eight-to-Seven Commission, made a strange admission, for him, to a New York Sun reporter, in an interview which that journal prints. Speaking of Mr. Tilden and the events of 1876 and 1877, he remarked:

"On the other hand, it may be said of him that he honestly thought himself elected, and entitled to the votes of two Southern States which the tribunal decided against him. He was elected in Louisiana—that is, he got 8,000 or 10,000 more actual votes there than Hayes. In the event of his success next year, I think he will make a good President. He is a man of great ability, unwearied pertinacity, and extraordinary courage. He cannot be bulldozed by politicians or office-seekers. He has made an excellent Governor of New York, and has shown administrative and executive powers of a high order. He is old and rich, and has no temptation to abuse the powers of his office, while he has every inducement to give the country a good administration—one which will inure to his fame, and obliterate, in a measure, the scandals which have attached to his name."

Concerning Secretary Sherman's canvass and the extraordinary efforts he is said to be making to capture the Republican nomination, the Judge said:

"It does not follow because a man is Secretary of the Treasury, and makes use of the great power and patronage of his office, that he is necessarily going to succeed in the race for the nomination. Two former Secretaries—James Guthrie and Salmon P. Chase—did what Mr. Sherman is now charged with doing, and yet they signally failed when the time came."

INDIANA ITEMS.

RICHMOND contains 140 manufacturing establishments.

JAMES H. HOLLAND, Treasurer of Hamilton county, died last week.

A THREE-DAYS soldiers' encampment is to be held at Terre Haute, beginning Oct. 3.

THE directory of the tile works at Indianapolis, destroyed by fire, have resolved to rebuild.

THE Postmaster General has designated Terre Haute as a free-delivery city after Oct. 1, next.

THE Directors of the rolling-mill at Indianapolis have given notice of an advance in wages averaging 10 per cent., to take effect Sept. 1.

A 2-YEAR-OLD child fell a distance of eighteen feet at Danville, alighting on its head. It was apparently unhurt at the time, but died two days afterward

THE soldiers' reunion at Madison was a huge success. From 8,000 to 15,000 persons were on the fair-grounds. The survivors of forty regiments were in line.

A 3-YEAR-OLD child of David Cross, a farmer living three and a half mile northwest of Thorntown, was fatally scalded the other day by the overturning of a kettle of boiling water.

MAJ. SMITH, United States Engineer, was recently interviewed at New Albany, and said that work will at once be commenced for the improvement of navigation in White river, between the mouth and Petersburg, Pike county. All the snags in the stream are to be removed; the channel is to be deepened at Wright's reach and Rocky ford, and all other obstructions removed to the point named.

INFORMATION has been received that the Pope has appointed Father Martin Marity, abbot of the monastery of St. Meinard, in Spencer county, Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Dakota. Father Marity has been at the head of St. Meinard for many years. He can speak the Sioux and other Indian dialects, and will devote a great part of his time to the conversion of the Indians of his diocese.

A HARRISBURG shoemaker, who lost his hearing in the war, recovered it suddenly while in swimming the other day. While thrusting his head under the surface of the water, he thought he heard a loud report. Instantly raising his head, he was surprised to find matter running from one of his ears, and a little while afterward was astonished to find that his hearing had been actually restored.

THE verbiage of ordinary legal documents finds no place in the warranty deed provided by statute in Indiana, which is as follows: "A. B. conveys and warrants to C. D. (describe the property) for the sum of ——."

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, SEP. 4, 1879.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

Lee Line and T. P. Keator are the biographical editors of the Wabash papers.

Gov. Williams delivered an address at the fair of the Marion county colored agricultural association, last Friday.

Five thousand people attended the reception of Weston, the pedestrian, on his arrival in New York from England.

Mr. Robert Bonner has purchased the great trotting horse Rarus, and thus another celebrity has been retired from the turf.

At a meeting of the republican state central committee of Louisiana, a resolution was offered endorsing Gen. Grant for the presidency, which provoked a lively discussion, and it was withdrawn.

Mosby and Grant had an old fashioned talk at Hong Kong, and Mosby assures his American friends "that all this talk about Grant not desiring or not accepting a possible presidential nomination is "poppycock'," and Mosby knows.

Tilden has bought Greystone, the country seat where he is now spending the summer nights, for $150,000, which is considered an excellent bargain. Greystone is a mile above Yonkers, on the Hudson, and sixteen miles from New York.

Bro. Sheffer, of the Angola Herald, is of the opinion that "the COURIER is laboring under a mental delusion" when it says the COURIER is the only democratic paper in Indiana within fifty miles of the north-east corner of the state. Then we beg pardon for the unintentional reflection, and are glad to know that the Herald is not afraid to speak out.

The greenbackers of the state of New York have nominated Harris Lewis for governor. The convention adopted the following resolution which will attract the attention of the soldiers of the state, to-wit:

> That the government should faithfully perform its pledge made to the union soldiers at the time of enlistment, to-wit: That they receive 160 acres of land on being discharged, fee simple and equitable payment per month of each soldier according to the value of the full legal tender dollar.

The Eel-River railroad has been leased to the Wabash road for 99 years. The change in the management took effect last Monday. The stock of the Eel-River amounts to about $2,800,000, upon which the Wabash guarantees 3 per cent. for five years and 4½ per cent. thereafter. It is expected that an independent line will be built from Butler to Detroit via Adrian, in which event DeKalb county will have another first-class eastern outlet, and Auburn or Butler will more than likely secure the division of the road.

The republican party of Maine has made another appeal to the national committee at Washington for more funds, saying that the canvass is a desperate one, and that the Maine republicans must have more funds at once. The committee replied that notwithstanding they had already sent large sums to Maine, they would at once order another assessment on the clerks and employes in the several departments for that purpose. The clerks complain at the extortion that is being inflicted on them for the benefit of Maine politicians.

First Circus This Season.

We call attention to the advertisement of the Great New York Circus in another place. That is one of the very best shows on wheels now, and elicits the highest encomiums of the press everywhere. The following scrap we clip from the Neenah Times.

> "Everybody will join with us in saying it is the best show ever in Neenah. It is not a conglomeration of noisy sideshow blowers and vociferous and insulting peanut venders, and a few lean lank animals, nicknamed "menagerie," but a grand, good, old style circus, giving just the shows advertised, and well worth the admission fee."

The tickets for voting on the new constitutional amendments, the election to take place on the first Monday in April 1880, will be printed under the direction of the secretary of state and paid for out of the state treasury direct. The law prescribes that the ticket shall be printed on blue paper, and that not less than three tickets to each voter shall be provided. This would make more than a million and a half of tickets—no inconsiderable plum for the printer. Each amendment, some of them quite lengthy, will be printed on the ticket, which will necessarily be a long one, and below each amendment are the words, "No" and "Yes," of which the voter can take his choice.

Doughnuts.

If you desire doughnuts that are the nicest and richest you ever ate, make them with Dr. Price's Baking Powder, according to the directions on the can. Such doughnuts, with a cup of coffee, and a light Cream Baking Powder biscuit, would cause a delightful surprise to the uninitiated.

During Sherman's recent absence from Washington, acting Secretary Gilfillan needed $4,000,000 for the use of the government, and as Sherman's pet bank, the First National of New York, owed the government more than any other bank, he drew a check on that bank for the amount named. The bank at once appealed to Sherman for an extension of time which was granted, and the only reason that Sherman could offer for the favor was that that bank was the last to subscribe for the 4 per cents and therefore should be the last to pay, when in fact all the banks belonging to the syndicate subscribed to the loan on the same day, and within a few hours of one another. This pet bank only has a capital of half a million dollars, yet, Sherman allows it to use and speculate on as high as fifty millions of the government money at one time, and when called upon to pay $4,000,000 is compelled to ask an extension of time. Can any person doubt for one moment that Sherman receives a share of the profits of his pet bank? Sherman's ability as a financier does not extend beyond his personal interests; to that extent he is very able. He is no common thief; he graduated some time ago.

With one exception, we have every indication of good and prosperous times and a general revival of business. It is generally conceded that real estate is the last to recover from depression after a financial crisis. Next to real estate is the iron interest, which is slow to feel the effects of either prosperity or depression. When a crisis occurs it generally finds machine shops and other branches of the trade with orders on hand, which keeps hands busy and establishments running for a considerable time after other branches of manufacturing have been obliged to suspend, or to curtail operations. On the other hand, when a revival in business comes, the iron interest does not feel the salutary influence until a continuance of prosperity in other trades warrants and even compels the giving of orders; so it is now, there are very few large iron manufacturing establishments in the country to-day that are not running to their full capacity, with large orders in advance. The revival of the iron interest, therefore, indicates the last stage of canvalescence but one. When real estate prospers, recovery may be said to be complete. There are very cheering signs in real estate dealings at the present time, and we look to see a general advance in the coming spring; not such an advance as would be considered inflation, but a steady, safe and guarded investment of capital, such as will prove permanent and profitable. The indications are that we have entered upon an era of sound commercial transactions, in which high prices will not be a necessary element, and that this prosperity is likely to continue. The wisest statesmen and financiers agree that a rule of inflated prices is always an indication of danger ahead, more or less imminent, but dimly forseen and guarded against by the mass of people engaged in business. The era of rapid fortune-making has passed, and with it the dangers that it entails and the heavy pressure of financial extremity which always induces risks and consequent losses.

A Circular Describing How the Work of the Coming Census is to be Performed.

A circular has been issued from the census bureau at Washington, D. C., containing directions and giving sections of the law, for the benefit of those engaged in the work. The census takers are called enumerators. The subdivision assigned to an enumerator shall not exceed 4,000 inhabitants, according to the census of 1870. His duties will be to personally visit each dwelling house in his subdivision and each family therein, and each individual being one of a family in any place of abode, and by inquiry obtain each and every item of information required in the act as of date June 1, 1880, and be completed with the month. In subdivisions where the superintendent shall deem such allowance sufficient, an allowance not exceeding two cents for each living inhabitant, two cents for each death reported, 10 cents for each farm and 15 cents for each establishment of productive industry returned, may be given in full pay for all services. No claim for mileage or traveling expenses in such subdivisions will be allowed. For all other subdivisions pay shall be fixed in advance by the superintendent with the approval of the secretary of the interior, and according to the difficulty of enumeration, but the pay to any enumerator in any district east of the one hundredth meridian shall not exceed an average of $4 per day of 10 hours actual field work each; the pay to any enumerator west of the one hundredth meridian shall not exceed $6 per working day of equal length. Any supervisor or enumerator who, having taken the required oath, shall falsely swear, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction, be imprisoned not exceeding three years, or fined not exceeding $800. If he shall wilfully make false certificates or fictitious returns, he shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $5,000, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

There will be employed in Indiana in the taking of the census six supervisors, with about 500 enumerators.

More Swindlers.

One day last week, a sharper visited Mr. John Friedline, who resides in Monroe township, Allen county, and persuaded him to take the agency for a horse hobble, for which he signed a note for $5. The hobbles were to be sold for $2 each, $1.20 of which was to be the agent's profit. A few days after the note was given, it was offered for sale in Decatur, the face of the note calling for $300 instead of $5.

ANOTHER.

Down in Wells county some time ago lightning-rod sharpers induced the township trustees to rod their schoolhouses. After the work had been completed, another party came along and informed the trustees that they had violated the law, by investing township money in such a way as to be benefited personally, and that the attorney general of the state had instructed him to look the matter up. The trustees realized the situation at once, and most of them were willing to fix the matter up by giving their notes, which were disposed of in a few hours to "innocent purchasers," and the sharper could not be found in the vicinity.

The Tri-State Fair.

In 1877, the states of Ohio, Michigan and Indiana, combined and held the first tri-state fair at Toledo. In 1878 the second fair was held at the same place; both were successful beyond the expectations of the managers. The high character, number and variety of exhibits, and the continued large attendance of visitors from all points of the country, reaching as high as fifty thousand in a single day, has strengthened the belief that Toledo has superior advantages as a central point for holding the annual reunion of producers, manufacturers, and consumers, which cannot fail to place the Tri-State Fair far in advance of any similar exhibition in the United States. The officers of the association have arranged for every convenience that the public could desire; besides all the usual conveniences connected with large exhibitions of this character, the management has provided a hospital with an able corps of physicians and nurses to care for unfortunate visitors who may need such attention. Arrangements have been made with all railroads entering Toledo, securing to visitors excursion rates, and also transportation of exhibition articles and animals at half rates. In brief, everything to promote the interests of exhibitors, and the comfort and pleasure of visitors, will be done. Remember the time, September 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1879

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Allwise Ruler, in his wisdom, to remove from our midst our esteemed brother, James M. Norford, Past Grand and present Vice Grand of Butler Lodge No. 289 I. O. O. F., who departed this life at 10:15 a. m. on the 30th day of August, A. D. 1879, in the fifty-fifth year of his age; and,

Whereas, The fraternity of Odd Fellows, the church and the community has suffered the loss of a true brother, a christian, and an upright citizen, and his family a kind father and friend.

Be it resolved, That this lodge has heard with profound sorrow of the death of our beloved brother, and while we bow in humble submission to the decree of an All-wise Providence, we cannot but regret the loss of one bound to us by the strong links of friendship, love and truth.

Resolved, That this Lodge has lost a good and faithful member, one who in all his intercourse has illustrated the truthfulness of his profession.

Resolved, That we hereby tender to his bereaved family and friends our heartfelt sympathy and condolence, and that the untimely decease of our late brother should remind us all that we are traveling to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns.

Resolved, That our charter and the chair of our deceased brother be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and that a copy of the same be given the family of the deceased, and one furnished the Butler Record, Auburn Republican, Auburn Courier, Waterloo Press, and Odd Fellows Talisman, for publication.

—Charles Billman and Laura Getz formed a partnership for life's journey last Thursday; also Philip Kennedy and Nancy Wasson.

—The concert given by the Lutheran Sabbath-school was admirably planned, and, under the direction of the efficient superintendent, Mr. E. Case, was a grand success.

Compare.

A careful comparison of Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts with others in the market, will convince any person that for strength and delicacy of flavor, Dr. Price's is far superior. While the other flavorings have a turpentiny taste and odor, Dr. Price's is as natural as the fruits from which they are made.

WORTH OF CLOTHING!
Which was manufactured for southern trade, is now offered at Sixty Cents on the Dollar.

We bought these goods of a large New York house, which manufactures for, and depends principally on southern trade. Owing to the fever raging so fariously south, they could neither sell nor ship their goods, and were obliged, therefore, to dispose of their entire stock to northern dealers at a big sacrifice.

We took advantage of this rare chance by buying only for cash, and therefore are enabled to sell these entire new goods at 65 cents on the dollar.

Local and Miscellaneous

—Where in thunder is that umberella!

—The yield of fairs will be heavy this month.

—Pinafore was presented here three times.

—Now stop squealing about dry weather.

—Examine F. D. Ryan's new buggies and carriages before you buy.

—Miss Frank Ryan has curtailed her Richmond visit, and is again at home.

—The posters and programmes for the soldiers' re-union will be out next week.

—Dr. Ford and S. Swihart have returned from the west. Both report a pleasant trip.

—Sick headaches incessantly distract many. Let such use Sellers' Liver Pills. 25c a box.

—Every one will find a general tonic in Lindsey's Improved Blood Searcher. All druggists sell it.

—All is quiet around the Central hotel, the festive Pinafore troupe having vamoosed the premises.

—Miss Sadie Hollister, accompanied by her father, spent last Thursday afternoon in Fort Wayne.

—Arrangements are being made with the Waterloo and Butler bands to furnish music for the re-union.

—Come to the circus with your sisters and your cousins and your aunts. Next Tuesday is the time, remember.

—Miss Brugh, of Hudson, Steuben county, is visiting with the family of Dr. T. G. Mahoney, of this city.

—The fort to be used during the soldiers' re-union, will be located near the new bridge across Cedar creek.

—The county commissioners are now in session. The COURIER will give the proceedings of the board next week.

—The county board of education met at the court-house last Monday. Not much business of importance transacted.

—There will be services in the M.E. church, as usual, morning and evening next Sunday, Rev. H. J. Norris in the pulpit.

—Rev. H. J. Norris, who has been recuperating for about three weeks in Ohio, returned with his wife and little boy on Tuesday.

—Work will soon commence on the camp ground, to be occupied by the soldiers. The camp will be east of town, along Cedar creek.

—Wanted—Two men to meet on the street without one telling the other what a glorious rain we had Tuesday, and how much it was needed.

—S. U. Tarney, the bloody butcher and wholesouled proprietor of the Main street meat market, will not be excelled in quality or variety of meat.

—That last car-load of buggies has "gone glimmering," and I. N. Cool left last Tuesday for another batch. He is expected to return to-day. G'lang.

—At a fire which occurred in Valparaiso, last Saturday, two lives were lost. The house that burned was a barn, and the occupants a pair of kicking mules.

—Waterloo has organized a militia company, to be known as the Waterloo Rifles. The adjutant-general of the state has been notified of the organization.

—Misses Meam and Aletha Born, who have been visiting with the family of Jas. Anderson the past week, left Monday morning for their home at Colon, Mich.

—Providence usually arranges to have it rain, we have noticed, just about in the right time; still, there will always be a large supply of grumbling at the "dry spells."

—The clerks were all busy (pronoun bizzy—not boozy) last Tuesday—whittling up chairs and drawing matches for the cigars. Now, if this is libel, come at us.

—Personal observation, during the heavy rains of a few days ago, justifies us in saying that flesh-colored stockings are still in vogue, notwithstanding the rush on stripes.

—An editor, in speaking of a new book, says "it is bound to sell." Isn't that what they bind all books for, generally?—Ex. Probably so; we have been "sold" on several.

—Chris. Baldock went up to Pleasant Lake on the noon train yesterday; says he "had to go see a man." He doesn't want anybody to know it, though, so please don't mention it.

—Somebody is going to get "pumped," and not with a stomach-pump, either. Prof. Lane was seen toting about fourteen feet of one around town, Tuesday, on his shoulder.

—Frank Copper is a gent. This may strike some as funny, but the railroad company has requested him to be labeled "Agent," so that people who don't know him will be informed.

—Every person should get ready to attend the coming re-union of the soldiers. The 4th Ohio battery will be in the procession, which alone will be worth coming many miles to see.

—Some of our exchanges are publishing some wholesome advice under the caption, "Learn to eat slow." Well, you might send along fifty cents' worth and we will try it;—anything to keep even with this age of progression.

—Coop. Halstch says "Col." Oller gets drunk just to be drunk; nothing else. We don't see, though, how he could very well get drunk to be sober, any more than George Foster can.

—"Shad" Rhodenbaugh purchased a bran new rubber coat yesterday, for driving in wet weather; he says he ordered "the longest one in New York, and it only comes to his belly now."

—Mrs. A. J. Little has moved her millinery stock to her old rooms, two doors north of the Auburn House. She goes this week after a large stock which will be sold far below all competition.

—If there is any one thing that will induce a man to use harsher language than some other thing will, it is to take a 80-mile trip on some railroad when he rests in sweet assurance that he is on another.

—Frank Hoff must be accumulating much riches. Next week he will open a branch grocery-store at the junction, and that enterprising corner of Auburn will then consist of a hotel, depot, saloon and grocery.

—Sam, Pete & Max, the Ft. Wayne clothiers, have some announcements to make, in another part of this paper, which it will be to the interest of all to read. Look them up and then act as your judgment dictates.

—Geo. Mogford, the jovial conductor on the Ft. W., J. & S. railroad, hasn't been so full of fun for the past two weeks, owing to a rather severe attack of bilious fever. We learn with pleasure that he is now slowly recovering.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co's buyer leaves for the eastern markets next Tuesday to purchase the largest stock of dry goods, clothing and notions ever brought to DeKalb county. Wait and examine the big stock before purchasing.

—The enterprising new firm of Shefer & Rush, harness makers, next door to COURIER office, is over head and ears in business. Last Friday they sold three sets of harness and are disposing of one nearly every day.

—A number of good sidewalks have been built on south Main street recently, and more are needed. If those interested want to pattern after a good substantial job, we advise them to take a look at the walk in front of Mrs. Houghton's residence.

—Since his funny little experience the other day, Sheriff Leas has no more questions to propound to traveling darkies. Such jokes often incur serious results in the way of buying cigars for the crowd. Not being there, however, we didn't get ours.

—That cheeky little son of Senegambia, who came here as "waitah" for one of the Pinafore girls, remained behind by request when the troupe left on Tuesday, and now he sadly thinks of what "might have been," as he vainly seeks for another soft job.

—The smile of gladness no longer illuminates the urchin's countenance, for at 8:30 each morning he shoulders his little "jografy and 'rithmetic" and hies him to the uninviting school-room, where the switch ne'er ceases from troubling and his trousers get no rest.

—All along the line of the Jackson road, between here and Fort Wayne, the grass was on fire last week and here and there the fences were succumbing to the devouring element. The glorious rains of Monday, however, have put a stop to it, and all's serene along the Saginaw.

—That excursion to Michigan City, bear in mind, takes place one week from to-day—Thursday, Sept. 11th—over the Eel-River and I. P. & C. railroads. Train leaves Auburn at 5:20 a. m., and the fare for the round trip is only $3.

—The woman's missionary society of the M. E. church will meet in the lecture room next Saturday afternoon, at half past two o'clock. The members will please come prepared to pay their back dues, as the treasurer wishes to make her quarterly report.

MRS. ENOS CASEBEER, Sec'y.

—Every person wonders how Schaab, Beugnot & Co., can sell goods so much lower than other merchants. It is easily accounted for when you consider their limited expense. They have no rent to pay or clerks to hire. They buy goods in large quantities, pay the cash and receive the benefits of all discounts.

—Miss Anna Wood, having exhausted her brief vacation, left last Friday for her adopted home at Port Huron, Mich., where she will resume her duties in the public schools. She is an intelligent and pleasant young lady, and her friends here will look forward to the holiday vacation with bright anticipation.

—Last week's Valparaiso Messenger says: "Every train that arrives in the city is crowded with students, several hundred having arrived during the present week." Having been there ourself last week, we can endorse the above assertion, and, by-the-way, we collided with Auburn's delegation—Johnnie McIntyre and Clyde Moore, both looking wiser by six or eight years.

—Constant traveling, particularly over the same line of road, must get exceedingly stale to railroad men before the silver threads are mingled with the others. Dan. Hickey, for instance, says that while smashing baggage on the Saginaw road, since November 11th last, he has measured off over fifty-one thousand two hundred miles, during which time he has lost but six days.

—A crook at Bremen, Ind., who had been put in temporarily in the absence of the regular agent, slid out last Saturday with about $700 belonging to the B. & O. railroad and the express company. His name is Pope.

—Freckles on a girl's face are no index to what her heart and soul may be, thinks the New Haven Register, and it advises young men to never mind 'em. That's perfectly right, because we have, in an illustrated paper before us, a picture of an angel who has freckles.

—Charlie Emanuel was twenty-nine years past his birthday yesterday, and he set 'em up; but that watermelon fib he told eclipses anything we ever heard. The idea of a melon as big as a beer-keg! But we'll believe it just this one time, on a promise of no more hereafter.

—We received last week the initiatory number of "The Reflector," a neat forty-column paper, (independent), published in the interests of Milford and Syracuse, Kosciusko county, this state, by Messrs. Miles & Kitson. If it continues as it has started out, we see no reason why it should not be well supported and prove a brilliant success.

—Yesterday a man got into the hack at the Swineford house, expecting to go to the Eel-River train for Butler, but he was in the wrong 'bus and was taken instead to the Jackson depot. The clerk ought to be a little more particular about starting off guests, as we have heard similar complaints from traveling men before.

—A Michigan state law requires that all train men, agents and baggemen shall wear uniform caps and badges, and some of the roads of this state, which run into Michigan, have requested their employes to don them, for the sake of uniformity. It is a good plan, too, as passengers often find it difficult to distinguish the depot agent or baggageman from anybody else; but some of the boys kick.

—A seventeen-year-old chap, named Elmer Weaver, got away with about eight bushels of his paternal ancestor's wheat, one day last week, which he disposed of at the Jackson elevator, receiving therefor a due bill on Schaab, Beugnot & Co., payable at the store; but he doubtless thought it was good as gold anywhere, for he skipped out without presenting it and hasn't shown up yet.

—The best monthly publication now issued, embracing fashion, literature, art and society matters, is Andrews' Bazar; and it is also the cheapest, the subscription price being only One Dollar a year, including postage. You will subscribe for it at once if you send ten cents, for a sample copy, to W. R. Andrews, Publisher, 171 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—We have received information from a reliable source that the best plaster for pasting "beau-catchers" in a semicircle on a girl's forehead is made of—confound it, what is it? Oh, yes—quince-seed; no, flax-seed. Mucilage has a tendency to make the hair pull, besides spoiling the charming effect. Make some flour paste, girls, and stick this recipe in your hat. "There's millions in it"—not in the hat, but in the recipe, we mean.

—Wait until the big lot of buggies come, when you can have an opportunity to select from the different grades. Mr. F. D. Ryan is now away selecting a variety of styles of open and top buggies which he proposes to sell at prices according to quality; if you want a first-class buggy at a low price you can get it, if you want a common buggy for almost nothing you can get that. Don't buy until you see them. They will be here the last of this week.

—The Wabash and Eel River railroad companies issued the following joint notice last Monday: "Notice is hereby given that the Wabash railway company has acquired by lease, and has this day taken possession of the Eel River railroad and its equipment, and will hereafter operate said road as a branch of the Wabash railway. All accounts pertaining to business of the Eel River railroad prior to September 1, 1879, will be settled by the Eel River railroad company; and all accounts pertaining to business dating from and after September 1, 1879, will be settled by the Wabash railway company.

Rest Beyond The Tomb.

The sympathies of the entire community are with Mr. F. E. Davenport in his affliction, by the loss of his companion in life. Mrs. Davenport had not enjoyed good health for some time, but was not considered dangerously ill until within the last few months, when her physicians pronounced her lungs diseased. About three weeks ago Mr. Davenport concluded to try a change of climate, and took his wife to Otsego Lake, Mich., and left her in charge of an attentive lady nurse who had accompanied her from this place. At first the change seemed to be beneficial, and all the friends of the afflicted lady were very much encouraged, only to be disappointed with the sad news of sudden reverses, and a desire on her part to return to her home, that she might be permitted to see her dear children ere she passed away; but this was not to be, for she expired on the homeward journey, in the depot at St. Charles, frail nature having yielded at last. She was buried yesterday, and, though the day was cold and rainy, many friends followed her to the grave, thus contributing their last token of friendship and love on earth.

Dentistry at Waterloo.

Dr. Johnston, dentist at Waterloo, will fill teeth with the ordinary silver filling for 50 cents; with combination of gold and silver, 75 cents; gold filling as low as one dollar. New teeth on best rubber plate—best, $12.00; those generally used, $10.00; cheaper, $9.00. The doctor has no student and therefore does all the work himself, and makes this reduction so that every one will have their teeth put in good order. 26tf.

Andrews' Bazar,

For September, is perhaps the handsomest number ever issued. It contains an elegant engraving of the Cincinnati Music Hall and Exposition Buildings, with a full history of the same. In addition to its other attractions, it contains three pages of engravings for ladies', gentlemen's and children's costumes of the newest styles; also a page of designs for fancy work. Sample copies 10 cents, to any address, and subscription price only $1 per annum.

That Show.

The great New York circus is coming to Auburn Tuesday Sept. 9th. We insert the following notice of the show, from the McGregor Times.

"While the Times is usually very cautious in speaking words of commendation of the average circus, we feel it is but justice to this exhibition to commend it to all. It is decidedly the squarest dealing show that has visited this place in many years. Modest in advertising, the programme as announced is given entire. The show is noticeable from the simple fact of the entire absence of all side shows, gamblers, and peanut venders; from all drunkenness, petty thievery, and insulting familiarity of employes. It is a No. 1, first-class, square-toed concern from the top of the centre-pole clear down to the stables From the manager to the least employe, anyone is sure of civil treatment and polite answers. The show itself is replete with novelties, and numbers among its artists many of a world-wide reputation. During its two-day's stay here we did not hear of a single theft or case of drunkenness being laid to any one of the eighty people connected with the show. We close by saying come again boys, for such shows as the New York Circus do no harm to any town, and a little fun we all enjoy."

Newville.

—Wet, damp, glorious rains.

—Business is still dull here, but wait till the railroad comes.

—Railroad meeting Monday evening, and Newville stands a show of a railroad yet.

—The yield of corn and potatoes is probably larger than this section has ever before produced.

—Hicksville and St. Joe are unable to take in all the wheat hauled to them, as they can't get cars to ship it.

—Hugh Maxwell will soon build a new house on his farm below Orange—a new bachelor's hall, as it were.

—Farmers are preparing the ground for sowing their wheat. Lewis Cole drilled his in Saturday of last week.

Pioneers of Indiana.

To enable the pioneers and old settlers of Indiana to avail themselves of the favorable action of the railroad companies who propose to grant free transportation to and from the convention to be held in connection with the state fair, October 1, 1879, a meeting will be called of the county pioneer and old settlers' associations in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, at the court-house in each and every county in the state, at 10 o'clock on Wednesday, the 10th day of September, 1879, to make preparation, by selecting or re-appointing a president, secretary, and an executive committee of one or more members in each township, to see that their aged friends are notified and have opportunity to apply for the favorable terms proposed.

Where no country society exists the attention of the early settlers is earnestly invited to this matter, as the conditions announced and embodied in blank certificates must be exactly fulfilled; and no possible complaint will compensate for a neglect of duty. Blanks of the following form will be sent to each county clerk before time of county meeting:

STATEMENT AND CERTIFICATE.

TO ENTITLE PIONEERS AND OLD SETTLERS TO FREE TRANSPOTATION ON RAILROADS TO ANNUAL CONVENTION AND ADMISSION TO STATE FAIR.

(Residence)........Ind.......1879

I am now seventy....years of age; have lived in Indiana forty....years, and desire to attend the Pioneer state convention at the state fair of 1879.

[Signature of applicant.]..........

The above statement is correct.......
....Pres't of............county pioneer old settler association.

Attest:.....................Secretary.
Good on.............................R. R.
September 29 to October 4, 1879.

There must be a county society with a president and secretary to attest the signatures and postoffice address of applicants; the signatures of said president and secretary to be authenticated by the signature and seal of the clerk of the circuit court or other county officers having a seal, to secure the benefits offered of free transportation and admission to the state fair.

This offers a rare enjoyment to the fathers and mothers of our state, who so grandly planned and improved the noble heritage we now hold.

The attention of county papers is invited to the foregoing notice. As it will be of interest to many of their readers, they are respectfully solicited to publish it in full for the benefit of the pioneers of Indiana. By order of

CHARLES H. TEST, Pres't.
JOHN COLLETT, Sec. I. P. A.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER."

On the sunlit shore of Lake Lucerne,
Beneath my window are some garden walks,
Where now the autumn frosts the foliage burn,
And hardy dahlias blacken on their stalks;
But, many-leaved and fresh and fragrant, blows
One solitary flower—a perfect rose.

This, full of crimson life as it is now,
No thought of death, I've watched, day after day,
While deep in snows the Rigi-Kulm was clad,
And deep the snows in clefts of Pilate lay—
Grim mount! above the clouds whose sharp-drawn peaks
Have long [illegible] storm—and now it breaks.

Like [illegible] at sea St. Gothard's summits [illegible],
And toward Tell's chapel all the storied scene
Is dashed, with slanted streaks of misty rain;
There's not a spot of [illegible]
In the dull landscape save that lonely rose—
Leaden the sky, and gray the airy snows!

With all of blushes and all fragrance rife,
Love's fragile banner to the gale unfurled
Bloom bravely on! Yes, live thy little life,
O rose! I would not pluck thee for the world.
'Twere sentimental folly that would shed
Thy sentient leaves to strew yon sodden bed.

"I am the type of the true poet's thought;
I am the type of the true lover's heart!"—
These words, in melody of perfumes wrought,
Like notes of music did the flower impart—
"In gray-haired age my youth is fresh; I bloom
Up to the 'ice and blackness' of the tomb.

"Thou in flesh, and in my petals I,
Are shadows; but a soul is mine and thine.
I am a vision and a prophecy!
And that which makes the poet's thought divine,
And love a subtler revelation still,
Is far more real than yon rock-ribbed hill.

"A few short days, or hours, and I am gone.
But, lingering here, last of a happy race,
Into my bosom all thou lookest on
I gather up—but clothed in summer's grace;
And I shall hang forever in thy mind,
A mystic rose, immortally refined.

"Yes, these, my perfumes shed shall hit thy sense
With spiritual power when I am dust.
Perchance the last survivor, eons hence,
Of men shall be a poet, and his trust,
The perfect flower of manhood, shall resign,
As I, the perfect rose, to love divine."

A HAUNTED PREACHER.

BY E. B. W.

In the winter of 1838, the population of Howard county, Mo., was thrown into a state of extraordinary excitement by a cause that seemed wholly inadequate to the production of such effect, especially in a latitude situated so far toward the setting sun. The phenomenon which attracted universal attention was neither more nor less than the appearance of a new Methodist preacher—a circuit-rider, as the name goes in the West, but one of a remarkable person, and of powers that the superstitious deemed almost supernatural.

He was a youth who had not seen more than 20 summers, of about the medium height, although he looked much taller from the slightness of his make, apparently feeble and delicately molded as the form of a woman. But all his movements, even to the flash of his eye or the wafture of his finger in gesticulation, were ineffably quick. He was possessed of many of the graces which are usually supposed to constitute feminine beauty. His slender figure was a model for the arts of sculpture and painting. His face was an admirable oval, soft and sweet in its expression while in a state of repose, although when aroused by any strong emotion it could assume a look of sternness or of passion absolutely appalling. His eyes were large, beaming, and piercing, so that when on fire with sudden wrath not many of even the bravest would feel at ease while encountering their fierce flashes of inexpressible defiance, for they plainly dared all things, not leaving out death itself. One drawback must be made from the exquisite character of this portrait; his complexion altogether lacked color when not illuminated by some excitement capable of pouring the blood from the heart in boiling torrents. His features, it is true, did not have the unnatural and subdued hue of ill-health, but rather the transparent paleness, so rare and delicate, which indicates lofty thoughts, such as "wander through eternity," persevering and studious vigils over the rays of the midnight lamp, and infinite longings, such as no human language can hope to express, for the ideal of all the immense, the unknown, the fathomless mystery which we seek forever, but never find.

I shall not forget, even should my life be protracted for ages, the first time that I had an opportunity of seeing and hearing this Western prodigy. It was at the town of Fayette, in the county previously mentioned. The large court house was used as a place of temporary worship, and, long before the appointed hour, it had been crowded to its utmost capacity, while hundreds, unable to gain admission, hung around the doors and windows, determining to get a glimpse, or catch at least a tone, of the wonderful orator, whose fame was on everybody's tongue.

Several preachers were on the platform, and among the dense throng arose the low murmur, made up of a thousand eager whispers—"Which is Ellis?" "Which is the new Whitfield?" "Which is he?—which is he?" And the general conclusion of those who had never seen the object of their curiosity appeared to be that a finely-formed, middle-aged person, with a ruddy complexion and shining bald head, was the man. The inference grew stronger when the individual described arose, gave out a hymn, and, kneeling, uttered an extemporaneous prayer of considerable fluency and unbounded fervor. However, upon the whole, the congregation felt a keen disappointment. The effort did not in any degree correspond with the grandeur of their preconceived idea. Nor was this at all strange, as the performer in this case happened to be only the elder in charge of the district; and such clerical officers in the Methodist denomination are commonly chosen with reference to their steady and solid talents for government, and their unimpeachable orthodoxy, more than from any manifestations of logical acuteness or theological genius.

The petition to Heaven was ended. Those who had bowed to the earth in real or simulated adoration resumed their seats, and, for five minutes afterward, there prevailed a solemn silence—the profound calm of expectation. Then suddenly a slender figure, that nobody had observed before, ascended the platform, and a pale yet luminous face, shining with two earnest, starry eyes, glanced slowly and calmly around the vast assemblage, as if silently measuring their capacity for the reception of the truths about to be enunciated.

He did not open the Bible—he did not formally take any text; but all at once he cried out, in trumpet tones, which caused every hearer to start on his seat, "Behold! I make all things new!" And then he spread all the sails of imagination, and launched boldly forth into an illimitable ocean of eloquence. The burden of his discourse, in its first division, was the susceptibility of the material molecules composing the visible and tangible universe for endless transformations of [illegible] and a transcendental beauty throughout the endless ages of eternity. He demonstrated, from the latest discoveries of chemistry and the best-established truths of all physical science, that matter is not that gross, disgusting thing which the atheistic philosophers and some superstitious theologians would have us believe it, but that all its aspects, of repulsiveness, of sweetness, of sublimity and of terror depend upon the arrangement of its atoms and the composition of its elements.

As the speaker went on advancing into the heart of his subject, the paleness gradually left his face, which at last glowed like a fiery furnace; and the azure of his eyes turned to red, and literally lightened around him; and, as he closed the first branch of his subject, describing the beatitude to be enjoyed in "the new heaven and earth," the final home of the saints in light, a general and irrepressible shout of enthusiasm broke forth from among the faithful.

He then commenced the second division of his discourse, with the singular remark "that, although it was declared that all things should be made new, there was no intimation that all persons should be made new, but that an opposite inference might well be deduced from the letter and the spirit of the text." And notwithstanding, as every intelligent reader will at once perceive, that this construction was a fanciful and far-fetched play upon mere words, the orator made it a foundation for the most appalling denunciation against sinners perhaps ever heard from the pulpit. He painted the different classes of offenders against the divine law in colors so black as to justify, without a figure, the epithet of infernal. And here all his eloquence proved a failure, or something worse; for, instead of wooing sinners and heretics into the arms of orthodoxy, his bitter invectives filled their hearts with hostility and revenge. He made, that one day, at least 500 implacable enemies.

Afterwards, traveling around his circuit, he pursued the same unwavering course, throwing the whole country into a ferment, and creating with every ferment a host of friends and enemies—the latter, however, usually predominating both in vehemence and numbers.

At length, he gave mortal offense to one Jonas Sneed, a wealthy planter of Howard county, and a man of great personal popularity, although it was well known that his wrath was deadly as the poison of the rattlesnake. The difficulty arose in this manner: Maj. Sneed, notwithstanding his many virtues, and he really possessed many, was an occasional gambler—as, indeed, might be said of the majority of the irreligious in that section of the country. He was also a duelist, whenever the code of honor, as currently recognized in that region, called upon him, with its imperious rules to proffer or accept the gage of battle. He had been engaged in several encounters of the kind, and fortune always had declared in his favor. The young preacher, Seaborn Ellis, was in the habit of denouncing all games of chance, as well as the players who participated in them, in the most savage way, while his abuse of dueling and duelists was terrible, if not actually fiendish in its ferocity. Maj. Sneed had been long writhing under these lacerations, when one Sunday he attended church in the town of old Franklin, situated on the bank of the Missouri river, nearly opposite to Boonville. While the sermon was being delivered, goaded to desperation by some withering sarcasm against his peculiar vices, he ejaculated one word of involuntary retort. This brought down upon his devoted head a rebuke the most terrible ever fulminated from the pulpit—at least in a Protestant land.

The infuriated duelist instantly left the assembly, and, waiting at the door until the minister came out, he attempted to vindicate his honor by inflicting personal chastisement on the other. But the bystanders interfered and prevented any serious combat at that time.

On the next day, which happened to be Christmas, Seaborn Ellis had an appointment to hold forth at a place in the country, about six miles from the town of Franklin, and directly on the road to the county seat. The exercises commenced at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and did not close till nearly sunset. As soon as the service was ended, the preacher left the house, with the intention of riding on to Fayette that night. His surprise and astonishment, then, may well be imagined, when, on passing through the door, he found Maj. Sneed, and about 100 of his friends, waiting to receive him in a most ungracious manner.

"I demand a full apology," said the Major, in a stern, overbearing tone, "for all the insults that you have offered me."

Ellis answered without changing countenance, or showing any external symptoms of unusual emotion, "If I have really insulted you, I will apologize in the most satisfactory manner."

"Did you not, on yesterday, proclaim me a gambler and a murderer even from the pulpit? And do you not term that an insult of the grossest character?" asked Sneed, in accents tremulous with suppressed rage.

"I do not call the truth an insult," exclaimed Ellis, with flashing eyes and a slight nervous motion of the right hand, as if he, too, were becoming excited.

"Then you will not apologize?" shouted Sneed, almost deranged with passion.

"I have nothing to apologize for," answered the preacher; as his right hand was raised slowly, and to all appearances involuntarily, and glided under his vest.

"Then I will take an apology out of your hide!" thundered the Major, as he drew a horsewhip from his boot, and began the brutal work of flagellation.

But the duelist had only time to strike one blow; for, before he could accomplish the second, Ellis drew from his bosom a long double-edged dagger, and plunged it up to the handle in his enemy's heart. The latter fell and expired without uttering a groan.

"Seize the rascal! Shoot the hypocrite!" with various other menacing exclamations, cried the friends of Sneed, and a dozen knives flew from their scabbards, and the young minister heard the clicking of a score of pistol locks nearly all around him. Not an instant was to be lost. With the speed of the wind, he flew in an oblique direction to where his horse was fastened, seized the bridle, and, springing into the saddle at a bound, spurred the noble animal to his utmost speed, and, although several shots were fired after him, he escaped without injury.

The perils that encircled him, however, had only just commenced, for his foes, also on horseback, set off in hot pursuit, and the chase continued without intermission for four miles along the road which led to the Missouri river. There, as Ellis found that his enemies were about to overtake him, he plunged into the woods, and, making a considerable circuit, at length struck the river at a point higher up than he had at first intended to reach. Here the bank unfortunately was open, and his pursuers coming in sight, although it was growing dark, descried him, and, giving a murderous shout, hurried forward to satiate their vengeance in his blood. He had but one alternative—to stand and be shot down like a wolf, or take to the water; but even this latter choice was horrible, on account of the tremendous rapidity of the fiercely ungovernable stream, which, in addition to its ordinary terrors, at that time was thick with floating ice, so that after dark even boats dare not venture across.

However, as he had no other resource, he goaded his horse to the desperate leap, and in a moment the latter was struggling with the powerful wintry current. His disappointed enemies came up the instant afterwards, and watched him moving forward slowly, but floating downwards, by the violence of the stream, with fatal facility, until man and animal dwindled to a mere black speck, hardly visible on the water, and soon were swallowed up and totally disappeared in darkening night. Not a beholder, not one person who subsequently heard the occurrence related, doubted that Seaborn Ellis had gone to the bottom of the swift-rolling Missouri.

Nothing more was said concerning him for years; and when his fame again began to fill men's mouths it was not as a preacher, but as a most influential member of the Texan Congress, and a friend of Gen. Houston.

Old Jack Mills.

Old Jack Mills, engineer on the Madison and Indianapolis railroad, is noted for his irritability and bluffness. He has always claimed that "any pesky fool who persists in gittin' run over ought to git run over." One day not long ago, as Jack was driving his engine near Columbus at the rate of thirty miles an hour, he saw approaching the track on a country road a two-horse wagon, with a man and woman for occupants. He did not dream of danger, for the wagon was at some distance from the track, with plenty of time for the train to sweep past. But suddenly the driver of the wagon stood straight up and whipped his horses into a run—directly into the jaws of death. Jack's hand was half thrown up to whistle down brakes. He hesitated, muttered "Darn the fool!" and let his engine drive. On flew the farmer and on roared the train. It was a stirring race, but a neck-to-neck one, for the engine struck the wagon between the wheels, knocked it to a thousand splinters, killed man and woman, and mutilated the horses so that both died. The passengers sprung out to find Jack swearing like a trooper. He was still in a towering passion, but while looking at the wreck his eye caught sight of a tiny pair of baby shoes clutched in the woman's hand. A flood of tears leaped from his eyes. He staggered up against his engine and sobbed: "Just look at them little shoes, Charlie. I—I—didn't mind so much runnin' over that blasted drunken fool who tried to cross ahead of us when he couldn't; but the little one, Charlie—the little kid that's waiting for 'em—that's too rough!"

The Wages Paid Farm Laborers.

The Department of Agriculture has been collecting some figures of wide interest regarding the rates paid farm laborers in different parts of the country. These statistics show that, with the exception of Minnesota and some States and Territories still further West, the average monthly rate of pay for such laborers declined from 3 to 15 per cent. during the year ending last April. But this decline in wages was more than compensated for by an equal and sometimes greater reduction in the expense of living, so that the relative condition of the laborer improved during the year. The pay of farm laborers in New England on yearly engagements, without board, averages $20.31 per month, and the average cost of living $8.02. The average for the Middle States is $19.69; the South Atlantic States, $11.19, and in the Gulf States, $14.80; in the nine inland States east of the Mississippi, from $15.50 south of the Ohio to $20.90 in the North. West of the Mississippi the present average is $23.81 per month, a slight increase over a year ago, while the price of subsistence has fallen off. In California and Washington Territory the increase in wages has been still larger and reaches now $38.22, but it is more than offset by a much greater increase in the cost of living.

THE wife of Thomas H. Benner, of Hagerstown, had been warned before she married him that his temper was violent, and that, sooner or later, he would whip her. She seems to have made up her mind what to do if he struck her, for when he did so she drew a revolver from her pocket and shot him dead.

A HIGHWAY ADVENTURE.

The Startling Experience of Gen. Bouton—Good Use of a Pistol.

[From the Colton (Cal.) Semi-Tropic.]

Reports of the adventure of Gen. Bouton with highwaymen near San Jacinto have been coming in for some days, but the General himself has now arrived. Gen. Bouton was Chief of Artillery under Gen. Sherman, who speaks of him as having a record as an artillery officer unsurpassed in the world. He was engaged in [illegible] battles, and never lost a gun. He tells of his thrilling experience on the mountain-top at San Gorgonia in the following way:

The General and J. C. Collins, his partner, started from San Gorgonia for their ranch at San Jacinto in a light wagon. About three miles out, and when on the top of the grade on the new road leading to San Jacinto, three men suddenly rose out of the brush, which at that place grows close to the roadside, and, two presenting revolvers and one a shotgun, cried "Halt!" The team was stopped, when they were ordered to give up their arms. They both promptly answered that they had no arms, although each of them had a revolver in his pocket unknown to the other. Upon getting out of the wagon, pieces of chain were produced, and their hands were chained behind them, and six-foot chains were placed about each of their necks. This jewelry was made from the chain used about the straw-carrier of a threshing machine. The links are made of a heavy wire bent into shape but not welded, and when they were placed upon the prisoners the links were pressed down with a pair of shoemaker's pincers. Collins was chained to the wheel of his wagon, with the chain about his neck. The man carrying the shotgun was handed a pistol by the other, who, taking hold of the chain about the General's neck, said, "come on," while the armed man fell in the rear with his gun about a foot from Bouton's back. The third man had meanwhile been unhitching the horses, and, taking them ahead a short distance, tied them to some bushes.

All this time—and the time was not nearly so long as it takes to tell it—the General had been furtively feeling along the slack of the chain on his hands trying to find a link that was not entirely closed. His touch, which must have been intensified by the tight place in which he was placed, suddenly found a link partly open. He dropped the other link down, and, with the slight leverage which this afforded, pried open the little opening upon which his life depended. Keeping his hands in the same position he then parted the skirts of his coat and put his hand upon the pistol, which was a self-cocker of the "bull-dog" pattern. They had not yet gone more than thirty paces, and had just turned out of the road into the brush when the General accomplishad this, and it was just at this time that the man in the rear noticed his movements and cried, "Halt!" At this Gen. Bouton whipped out his pistol, and, half turning, fired at the man in the rear, who fell. Quick as thought, he whirled and bored a hole through the one in front. He then ran to release Collins, when the third man came running toward the wagon from where he had tied the horses. Bouton, thinking his purpose was to shoot Collins, waited until he passed the rear of the wagon, when he blazed away and dropped him. It took but a moment to jerk the chain apart which was about Collins' neck, and to free his hands. Then, hitching up their team, they drove like wildfire to the office of Justice Kennedy, some nine miles distant, with the parted chains still dangling from their wrists and necks, where they at once told their story. With the aid of a file they were relieved of their jewelry, and as soon as day broke a posse started back to the scene of the tragedy.

Near by they found where three horses had been tied and two masks on the ground. Taking up the trail of the horses they found, about a half mile further on, the body of John Wakefield, who had dismounted, unsaddled his horse, turned him loose, and then lain down and died. He was found to have been shot in the right side, the ball lodging just beneath the skin of the back. On Wednesday a man named Covington went to his home, near El Casco, immediately after the shooting, with a flesh wound in the thigh, where he stated to his friends that they did not intend to murder Gen. Bouton, but only wanted to compel him to sign an order on his wife for $5,000, and intended to keep him as a hostage until it was paid.

An American Invention in England.

The late Thomas Blanchard's invention of a machine for turning gun-stocks was heartily ridiculed by the British Parliament when some members moved a resolution for purchasing a number of them, on the ground that Americans were surpassing the English in gun manufacture. One very incredulous member made so much opposition, declaring that the very idea of turning a gun-stock was absurd, that the resolution was withdrawn, and a committee appointed to come to this country and look into the matter. They reported the facts to be as first stated, whereupon the incredulous member declared that the Americans might have got up something to work their soft woods, but it would never stand the test of hard wood. This gentleman was finally sent over to decide upon the merits of the machine. Selecting three rough stocks of the hardest, toughest timber he could find, he went to the Springfield Armory incognito, brought his stocks to the stocking-room, and inquired of the overseer if he would grant him the favor of turning them. Without making the least alteration of the machine, the overseer ran the stocks through in a few minutes, and then went on with his work as though nothing had happened. The Englishman examined the stocks, and found they were turned all the better for being of hard wood. After musing a while he frankly confessed who he was, why he came, and his thorough conviction of the utility of the machine. Before he left the city he gave an order in behalf of the British Government for this and the accompanying machines, some six or eight, which amounted to $40,000. The machines were built at Chicopee, shipped to England, and have been in use there from that day to this.

A Significant Story.

Here is a true story (except in names), which we recommend to our boy friends. In 1847, two lads graduated from an academy in [illegible]. They had money enough to pay for their education, but no more.

"I," said the eldest, whom we shall call Johnson, "am going to New York. That is the center of things. A man of ambition and industry can push his way there. Only let me get a foothold, and I'll be a millionaire in ten years."

In the city Johnson found himself thrust back by thousands of young men as ambitious and industrious as he, and possessed of either shrewdness, influential friends, or exceptional talent, neither of which he had. He struggled on for two years, studied medicine, put out his sign, and—starved, with dozens of other patientless M. D.s. He tried authorship, chromo agencies, peddling pencils and soap from door to door, and failed in all. Last week he died in an almshouse from disease brought on by insufficient food and the foul air of the wretched tenement-house in which he lived.

Wright, the other lad, struck for Iowa, then the "far West," took up a quarter-section of land, built himself a hut, grubbed up the timber and went to farming. As years passed, he added to his land; it increased in value; he married, and is now one of the prosperous men in Des Moines county. One of his sons is a prominent physician, another is in Congress, the whole family rank among the leaders of their State.

Now Wright was no stronger man, intellectually, than Johnson. The secret of his success was that whatever knowledge or talent he had had room, in a new country, to develop. A lad must have exceptional business capacity or money or influence to make his way at all in our struggling, over-crowded cities.

The vast untilled fields of the West are waiting for our boys. Within the last five years, too, it has been proved that this country is to be the great food factory of Europe. The production and shipment of beef, wheat, butter, canned goods, etc., have already assumed enormous proportions. On the farm is the sure way to usefulness and fortune, boys, not in the stifling streets of our large cities, where thousands are living a meager existence for want of work.

She Was Bound to Win.

The gates at the passenger depots which shut out all people not having tickets for the trains, were yesterday closed at the Union depot against an elderly woman wearing spectacles, and using an umbrella for a cane.

"Can't pass without a ticket," said the man at the gate as she came up.

"I want to see if there's anybody on that train going to Port Huron," she answered.

"Can't pass without a ticket, madam."

"I've got a darter in Port Huron, I have."

"Can't help it, please. My orders are very strict."

"I tell you I want to send word to my darter!" she exclaimed, adjusting her spectacles for a better view of the official.

"Yes, but we can't help that, you see, Please show your ticket."

"I want this 'ere railroad to understand that I've got a darter in Port Huron, and she's got a baby four weeks old, and I'm going to send her up word in spite of all the gates in this depot."

"Please show your ticket, madam."

"I tell you once more ——"

"Please show your ticket, madam."

She gave the old umbrella a whirl, and brought it down on his head with all the vim of an old-fashioned log-raising, and, as he staggered aside, she passed him and said:

"There's my ticket, sir, and I've got more behind it! Mebbe one man and a gate can stop me from sending word to my darter to grease the baby's nose with mutton taller if the weather changes cold, but I don't believe it!"

And she walked down to the train, found some one going to Port Huron, and came back carelessly humming the melody of "The Three Blind Mice."—Detroit Free Press.

The Medical Qualities of Lemons

Since the regular arrival of vessels in the larger cities with tropical fruit, the supply of these luxuries has been immense of late, and, in fact, they are plenty all the year through, and prices are now within the reach of all. Lemons, especially, are valuable through the heated term, and formerly sold at from 6 to 15 cents apiece. Now the best quality of fruit can be purchased at 25 cents per dozen, and in the winter season, nearly all the time, at from 2 to 5 cents apiece.

In reference to the virtues of the lemon an eminent physician has this to say: "Lemon juice is the best anti-scorbutic remedy known. It not only cures the disease, but prevents it. Sailors make a daily use of it for this purpose. I advise every one to rub their gums with lemon juice to keep them in health. The hands and nails are also kept clean, white, soft and supple by the daily use of lemon instead of soap. It also prevents chilblains. Lemon is used in intermittent fevers mixed with strong, hot, black coffee, without sugar. Neuralgia may be cured by rubbing the part affected with a cut lemon. It is valuable also to cure warts and to destroy dandruff on the head by rubbing the roots of the hair with it. In fact, its uses are manifold, and the more we employ it externally the better we shall find ourselves. Natural remedies are the best, and nature is our best doctor, if we would only listen to it. Decidedly, rub your hands, head and gums with lemon, and drink lemonade in preference to all other liquids."

A SINGLE GLASS OF RUM.

BY W. H. COPPELL.

"Just one glass of rum—
What can the danger be?
Just one glass of rum
Oh never fear for me.

"A single glass of rum—
Oh, yes, I'm coming now,
A single glass of rum—
I must be gone, I trow.

"A second glass of rum—
One's not enough for me;
A second glass of rum—
It helps my nerves, you see.

"One more glass of rum—
Why, man, it's only three;
[illegible]
[illegible]

"Another glass of rum—
My nerves have grown steady
Another glass of rum,
And then I'll be ready."

A glass of boiling rum
From out the seething pot;
A glass of boiling rum
To satisfy the sot.

"Just one glass of rum."
The maniac's raving cry
"Just one glass of rum,
Oh give it or I die."

A single glass of rum
Has done its mission well;
A single glass of rum
Has sent a soul to hell.

SABBATH READING.

"He Knoweth the Way That I Take."

I know not—the way is so misty—
The joy or the griefs it shall bring,
What clouds are o'erhanging the future,
What flowers by the roadside shall spring:
But there's One who will journey beside me,
Nor in weal nor in woe will forsake;
And this is my solace and comfort—
"He knoweth the way that I take."

I stand where the cross-roads are meeting,
And I know not the right from the wrong;
No beckoning finger directs me,
No welcome floats to me in song;
But my Guide will soon give me a token
By wilderness, mountain or lake;
Whatever the darkness about me,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

And I know that the way leadeth homeward
To the land of the pure and the blest,
To the country of ever-fair summer,
To the city of peace and of rest;
And there shall be healing for sickness,
and fountains, life's fever to slake.
What matter beside? I go heavenward.
"He knoweth the way that I take."

Ancient and Modern Ideas of Inspiration.

The Ancients set God and the universe in opposition. They often ascribed the creation of the world to a being less perfect than God. They were unable by a higher synthesis to reconcile their conceptions of Deity with the evil and imperfection which they beheld in themselves and in the world around. Polytheism had made Deity an intimate and familiar presence, that too often shared human frailty and vice. It was the reaction of Semitic Monotheism to send God away almost into the region of the unknowable. It enthroned Him in far-off and unapproachable majesty and holiness. So jealous were the Semites of the idea of God's unapproachableness and unsearchableness that though in the warmth of religious utterance He was said to have appeared, to have revealed Himself by some name or otherwise, returning to philosophic accuracy, they would speak of such manifestation as that of some emanating power or lower God, and would sooner lay themselves open to the charge of believing in all sorts of lesser divinities as mediatory powers than in the least to appear to make Supreme Deity capable of any representation whatsoever. Has He appeared, or uttered His voice, or named Himself Jehovah? And would men hence presume to begin to predicate anything concerning His nature or mode of existence? He withdraws indescribable and unnamable into His absoluteness.

While God thus dwelt apart, alone in the possession of all that is good, this gross world, its thoughts, works and imaginations were only evil continually. It was totally depraved. It had no self-restorative power. It had no innate ability to will or think anything that is good. Even what might appear as good works were not so in reality, but had without doubt the nature of sin. How then were goodness and truth to appear and shine on the earth? It could only be by an interposition of the far-off God; by lowering the celestial sphere to inspire or "breath e" its holiness into the earthly. This was effected by the communication of an angel or by the gift of a daimon. In these messengers God was efficaciously and infallibly present. This mechanical junction of the celestial sphere with the terrestrial was denominated inspiration. The conception of inspiration that inevitably followed was this: They who receive these divine messages, i. e., inspired persons, were universally regarded as pure mediums. Undoubtedly. There was and could be no human element in the message. The whole was direct from heaven. The inspired were possessed. "The word that the Lord hath put in my mouth, that must I speak." That this logical inference was commonly made we take Philo out of a multitude as a witness: "A prophet says nothing of his own, but everything which he says is strange and prompted by some one else. * * * He is a sounding instrument of God's voice, being struck and moved to sound in an invisible manner by Him." Again: "When the divine light shines the human light sets, * * * and this very frequently happens to the race of prophets; for the mind that is in us is removed from its place at the arrival of the divine spirit, but it is again restored when the spirit departs."

Since, then, ancient philosophy made the inspired person a pure medium, "a sounding instrument of God's voice," every inspired utterance must be infallible. On this dark background of essential enmity and separation between God and nature much of past theology has been outlined. Some of it has been steeped in this utter gloom. This ancient falsehood of man's total depravity and hostility to God yet hangs its sable pall over the theology of some. But our view of nature and of God's government thereof is now radically changed. We believe nature to be sacred and God immanent and transeunt therein, its hypostasis and conscious soul. Religion we no longer look upon as a wave come from some ethereal and mystic sea to flood our godless valley with its healing waters. As we have concluded men to be, not children of the devil and of darkness by nature, but the sons of their divine creator, we find religion to be a fact deeply rooted in their moral consciousness. The highest manifestation of the hiding God that can possibly be vouchsafed to us must after all but be divinely human. But if so, if the sublimest revelation of God to man must be a revelation of Him in and through man, then the germs of great truth and high capacity already reside in him by nature. A righteous life, then, is the result of drawing out, by all manner of education, the God-planted possibilities within him. But how was it attained, according to the ancient mechanical view? It was by first driving out and exorcising his old depraved nature and bringing in another in its stead. When a religious philosophy teaches that, in order to regenerate a race of helplessly lost beings something must be literally sent from a literally distant God, it is evident that their regeneration must be by opus operatum and Calvanistic predestination; their inspiration must be infallible, since it communicates nothing but what is from from above."—Sunday Afternoon.

Humility.

Christianity does not set men at any work of mere resolution, saying: "Come, now, let us be humble;" that would but multiply the endless specimens of useless self-mortification. But true Christianity puts men face to face with the humbling facts, the great realities of God and His truth, and then humility comes upon the soul as darkness comes on the face of the earth, not because the earth has made up its mind to be dark. It is the narrowness of our life that makes us proud. You merchants would be proud of your successful business if you saw nothing beyond it; and you men and women proud of your splendid house, if you looked no farther. But if you could only see God forever present in your life, and Jesus dying for your soul, and your soul worth Jesus dying for, and the souls of your brethren precious in His sight, and the whole universe teeming with work for Him, then must come the humility of the Christian. To that humility let us devote ourselves, for in a humility like that alone is peace.—Phillips Brooks.

Historical Sun Darkenings.

In 536, 567, and 626 we find mention of long periods of diminished sunlight. Schnurrer records that in 733, a year after the Saracens had been driven back beyond the Pyrenees, consequent on their defeat at Tours, "the sun darkened in an alarming manner on Aug. 19; there appeared to be no eclipse by the moon, but rather an interruption from meteoric substance." There was an eclipse of the sun, annular, but nearly total, on the morning of Aug. 14; it is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, which tells us "the sun's disk was like a black shield." The near coincidence of dates suggests in this case a connection between the darkness and the eclipse. In 934, according to a Portuguese historian, the sun lost its ordinary light for several months, and this is followed by the doubtful statement that an opening in the sky seemed to take place, with many flashes of lightning, and the full blaze of sunshine was suddenly restored. In 1091, on Sept. 29, not 21, as given in some of the translations of Humboldt's "Cosmos," Schnurrer relates that there was a darkening of the sun which lasted three hours, after which it had a peculiar color, which occasioned great alarm. In another place we read: "Fuit eclipsis Solis II. Kal. Octob. fere tres horas: Sol circa meridiem dire nigrescebat;" there was no visible eclipse at this time, and the November eclipse was central only in the southern parts of the earth. A century later, or in June, 1191, according to Schnurrer, the sun was again darkened, with certain attendant effects upon nature. Here the cause is easily found; on June 23 there was a total eclipse, in which the moon's shadow traversed the continent of Europe from Holland to the Crimea; the eclipse was total in this country between the coasts of Cumberland and Yorkshire. Erman refers to a sun-darkening on Feb. 12, 1106, which was accompanied by meteors, and we read in the cometographies that on the 4th, or, according to others, on the 5th, of February in this year, a star was seen from the third to the ninth hour of the day, which was distant from the sun "only a foot and a half." Matthew Paris and Matthew of Westminster term this star a comet, and we take it to have been the same which, later in the same month, was observed in China under the sign Pisces, and which, at one time, was supposed to have been identical with the great comet of 1680; this body, however, would not appear to have been sufficiently near the earth as, even on the assumption of a denser constitution than usual with comets, to account for a diminution of the solar rays, by its intervention. On the last day of February, 1206, according to a Spanish writer, there was complete darkness for six hours. In 1241, "five months after the Mongol battle of Leignitz," the sun was obscured, and the darkness became so great that the stars were seen at the ninth hour about Michaelmas. In this case, again, the darkness referred to was undoubtedly due to the total eclipse on Oct. 6, of which Prof. Schiaparelli has collected a full account from the Italian writers. Lastly, in 1547, from April 23-25, Kepler relates on the authority of Gemma, "the sun appeared as though suffused with blood, and many stars were visible at noon-day." Schnurrer thought this phenomenon was what the Germans call a "Hohenrauch," notwithstanding the visibility of the stars. From the above brief summary of what have been considered abnormal sun-darkenings, we see that in several cases the diminution of the light has been due to the ordinary effects of a total eclipse, while it is clear that there are no grounds in the historical evidence for any prediction of a period of darkness. The nervous in these matters, and it would really appear that such exist, may take consolation therefrom. —J. R. Hind, in Nature.

The Barber in China.

Who would expect to see Figaro tabooed in any land pretending to be civilized? Nevertheless, the Chinese barber has still to achieve equality and fraternity. He carries about suspended from a bamboo on his shoulder the utensils indispensable to his art. In front hangs a wooden cylinder, shining with red lacquer and metal ornaments, with feet to stand on, and a copper basin at top; inside is a store of water. Behind him swings a wooden tripod, also bright red, the prismatic space between its legs being occupied by drawers containing razors, brushes, combs and so on. If he meet a client in the street, down go the triangular stool and the cylindrical washstand, and the customer's toilet s forthwith completed in the open air, as coolly as if they were in the most private of dressing-rooms. But in spite of his remarkable skill and his universal utility—for no Chinaman can dress his own head—the Chinese barber is looked down upon and classed with the inferior portion of the population. Like actors and sampaneers, however great may be his merit, he can never fill any public employment. Even his children suffer the same exclusion, down to the third generation.—All the Year Round.

A writer in the Indiana Farmer says water made thick as cream, with fresh cow manure, and poured on melon vines will keep off the striped beetle.

Good feed, whether it be good grass in summer or good hay and grain in winter, with pure water always within reach, will always give good returns, whether the outcome be meat, milk, butter or cheese.

M. Boussingault found that a thermometer, plunged in snow to the depth of about four inches, sometimes marked nine degrees of heat greater than at the surface. Farmers up North may console themselves over the fact.

Driving after Eating.—The digestion of a horse is governd by the same laws as that of a man, and, as we know that it is not best for a man to go at hard work the moment a hearty meal is eaten, so we should remember that a horse ought to have a little rest after his meal, while the stomach is most active in the processes of digestion. Many a good horse has been ruined by injudicious haste in working him with a full stomach.

Sell the Old Sheep.—It is folly to keep old sheep. They should be turned off to the butcher while they are in their prime. It does not take half as much to fatten them then. When they get old and thin, in order to put them in condition to slaughter, the whole structure must be rebuilt. Four sets of lambs are all any ewe should bear; this will bring her to five years, and this is an age when, with little extra care, she will round up to a full carcass. Exceptions may be made when the breed is scarce, and the blood is more desirable than anything else.—New York Tribune.

How to Get Rid of Rats.—A farmer says: Four years ago my farm was fearfully infested with rats. They were so numerous that I had great fears of my whole crop being destroyed by them after it was housed; but having two acres of wild peppermint that grew in a field of wheat cut and bound with the wheat drove the rats from the premises. I have not been troubled with them since, while my neighbors have any quantity of them. I feel convinced that any person who is troubled with these pests can readily get rid of them by gathering a good supply of mint and placing it around the walls or base of their barns.

Butter Not Gathering.—The food has a great influence upon the milk. So has the condition of the cow. When the butter will not gather, but remains in the condition of a thick emulsion, it may sometimes be brought into order by throwing into the churn a gallon of cold water in which a handful or two of salt have been dissolved, and then operating the churn slowly to gather the butter. The cream may be improved in condition also by stirring a teaspoonful of salt in the jar in which it is kept. But to give the cows a daily feed of bran, or meal, if only one quart, is perhaps the best remedy, and its cost will be returned in the increase of butter. It pays to give this extra food even when cows are on pasture.

The Fruit Recorder says: The following preparation for destroying bugs on squash and on cucumber vines has been successfully tried for years. Dissolve a table-spoonful of saltpeter in a pailful of water. Put one pint of this around each hill, shaping the earth so that it will not spread much, and the thing is done. Use more saltpeter, if you can afford it. It is good for vegetables, but death to animal life. The bugs burrow in the earth at night, and fail to rise in the morning. It is also good to kill the grub in peach trees; only use twice as much—say a quart or two to each tree. There was not a yellow or blistered leaf on twelve or fifteen trees to which it was applied last season. No danger of killing vegetables with it. A concentrated solution applied to young beans makes them grow wonderfully.

To Pickle Pork.—In pickling pork the pieces should be so cut that they will lie flat in the tub, and each layer should be pounded down closely. But before the sides are cut up it is a good plan to rub them over with a mixture of white sugar and salt, putting one-third as much sugar as salt. Then place the pieces in the tub, rind downward, and sprinkle each layer with the sugar and salt. When the tub is well filled, put a layer of salt over it so thick as to exclude the air, and cover it closely for ten days; then look at it, and, if the brine is not formed enough to cover it, sprinkle in a little cold water. In three months the pork will be ready to cook, and it will keep good for two years at least, and the sugar will give it a finer flavor than saltpeter. In warm climates both sugar and saltpeter can be used as advantageously as in pickling beef. All housekeepers know that they can make corned beef more tender and better flavored by using a pickle of one pound of sugar to three pounds of salt and a teaspoonful of saltpeter.

The Use of the Hands.

Four or five years ago, a gentleman living on a farm near a sea-side resort in Maine bought one of the two-dollar printing-presses for his boys. One of them learned to use it expertly, and by printing visiting cards, labels, etc., for his mother soon earned enough to buy an eight-dollar one. All of his spare time from his lessons he gave to printing.

At this time his father died insolvent, and the family were suddenly reduced to absolute poverty. The boys were not sufficiently educated to go into any kind of business. Our young printer determined to make some use of his toy. He went around to the hotel and boarding-house keepers, and solicited work in printing cards, menus, bills. There was no job-printing office within thirty miles. Work poured in on him.

By the time the summer-boarders arrived, he had saved $40, with which he bought a larger press, sold the old one for paper, and issued a little newspaper, the size of a letter-sheet, which found plenty of subscribers among them. His mother and sisters were editors. The tiny journal was sprightly, gossipy, and well-printed. The lad worked for years as hard at his books as at his type, and last summer he took charge of a newspaper in the country town, with every chance of assured success.

A great defect in the modern education of well-to-do American lads is, that it is confined to the head, while the hands are left totally untrained. In the first years of the republic, when the majority of boys were reared on farms or in villages, they learned manual skill unconsciously. The only mea s of supplying this lack now are the printing-presses, jig-saws, lathes, etc., which are such popular toys. Every wise father should provide them for his sons. They may not make so much use of them as our energetic Maine lad; but they will certainly give a training to the fingers and the eye quite as useful as are many branches of theoretical knowledge.

The Cental System of Measurement.

The "cental system," as it is called, is not yet fully developed. Although in some localities and to a certain extent it has really been practiced in mercantile business for years, the name is new —not even Webster's Unabridged defines "cental"—and the complete adoption of the system as a basis of trade will involve various changes in State laws. Not long ago the New York Produce Exchange decided by ballot to employ the "cental system" instead of the bushel in all their transactions after Oct. 1, 1879. The members of the Boston Produce Exchange have resolved to follow this example. Circulars have been sent to commercial bodies throughout the country by the New York Exchange, asking their co-operation in the matter and the Subsistence Department of the Government makes no objection to adopting it.

It has long been a practice among some large dealers to buy and sell certain articles by the 100 pounds weight, and to pay on that, as the unit of weight, charges for transportation. This has been to some extent the case in regard to grain, yet, as traders usually adhere to the conventional bushel in grain, seeds, etc., a double computation must be made, involving much labor. The average bushel of wheat is nominally sixty pounds in weight, and when a man buys 5,000 bushels of wheat he expects to receive 300,000 pounds, yet if the wheat actually weighs more than fifty-eight pounds to the bushel it is above the average quality, and if of poor quality it weighs much less. Variations in the number of pounds which constitute a bushel in different localities cause perplexity also. In New York and in some other States, for example, the law gives thirty-two pounds to each bushel of oats, but some other States are not as generous—perhaps because in fact not more than thirty-pounds will ordinarily go into a bushel measure. Consequently the system of measuring grain seems absurd, if its weight is to be regarded at all, and brings much extra labor upon commission merchants. Numerous liquids, as sirups, oils, etc., vary much in weight, according to their quality, in some articles the better quality being lighter, and in others heavier, and it seems as reasonable to buy and sell them by the pound, as well as potatoes, eggs, etc., as it is sugar, coffee and rice.—Harper's Weekly.

Electric Executions.

That species of solemn fantaticism for which the Germans are famous has reached about its climax in a letter of a pastor in a Prussian village to one of the leading Berlin papers. The epistle reads as if the ghosts of Hoffman and Hauff had been galvanized from their graves especially to write it.

Its author commences by deploring the fact that our modern punishment for murder simply makes the executioner guilty of the same crime as his victim; that we can only avenge one assassination by another. A second source of regret to him is that an execution has virtually become a species of brutal and degrading show. In view of these facts, he suggests the following improvements in capital punishment:

The scene of an execution shall be the court-room in which sentence was pronounced upon the murderer. The walls of the room shall be draped in black, and the windows somberly curtained, in order to exclude all light. The only articles of furniture in the apartment shall be the Judge's desk and an arm-chair. In the middle of the room shall be an iron figure of Justice, with her scales and sword. This effigy shall have in place of bowels as powerful an electric battery as may be necessary. The battery shall be connected with the arm-chair, and governed by a mechanism in connection with the scales. The scene shall be lighted by a single torch, burning on the Judge's desk.

The only persons admitted to the execution shall be the Judge, jury and other officials concerned in the condemnation of the victim. That person shall be brought in and seated in the chair, to which he shall be manacled immovably. Then the Judge shall read the story of his crime to him and reiterate his sentence. This performed, he shall break a rod of office and toss it into Justice's balance.

The scales will be weighed down by this, and the electric current thus set in circulation. As the balance descends the Judge shall extinguish the torch, signifying that he thus puts out the victim's life.

So, in utter darkness, the subtle current of the great battery will do its work. Unseen by mortal eyes the condemned man will expiate his crime, and justice will literally avenge itself.

It is understood that Edison is to be commissioned to make an experimental electric statue at once.

Remarkable Case of Nostalgia.

Homesickness is known to sometimes assume the form of a mental disease. An English paper states that among the recruits sent to the garrison at Montelimart was a youth named Marchise, from Correze, who, from the time of his incorporation, did not cease to weep and lament for his country home, day and night. His grief was so great as to move the pity of the officers, and they softened some of the military regulations in his favor. It was of no use. The mountains of Correze were ever before the tear-filled eyes of the unhappy conscript. One day, instead of returning to the barracks at the evening call, he betook himself to the railway, placed his neck on the rails, and was killed by the next train.

Stuttering.

The conditions favorable to stuttering may be hereditary and may manifest themselves when the child begins to talk. Some stutterers have never known free speech. Stuttering may be caused also by fright and by imitation. Stuttering sustains itself. That is, the original cause may be removed, and yet there is no end or diminution of the impediment, which, on the contrary, increases. If a child recover from nervous or muscular weakness—the first cause—the stuttering may seize hold of the chest, and, by deranging respiration, make conditions which, of themselves, would bring on the malady. Or if defective respiration be the first cause, and it be remedied, the stuttering may find nourishment in disordered nerves or unhealthy brain. Thus, as already said, causes and effects pass the one into the other, so that they are constantly changing, not only themselves but also the character of the stuttering, whose outward manifestations, at intervals of five or ten years, would appear entirely different to an observer. In nothing is the adage, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," more applicable than in stuttering. Indeed, in this instance an ounce of the one is more efficacious than a hundredweight of the other. Children with stuttering tendencies should be specially well nourished; they should take a great deal of physical and out-door exercise; care should be taken that their lungs are fully developed and that their nerves are not irritated. Late hours and highly-seasoned food, and everything tending to derange, weaken or unduly excite, mentally and physically, should be avoided. The child should not be allowed to talk too rapidly nor when out of breath. If he has trouble with a word he should be asked to repeat the whole sentence, and not merely the offending word. Oftentimes a serious mistake is made here. The child is drilled upon his most difficult words, and he comes to fear them; and, as a result, his ability to articulate them is continually lessened. He should not be permitted to associate with another stuttering child; indeed, no child should. Inveterate stuttering may be caused by mimicking others. Throughout, the child should be subjected to kind but firm treatment. —The Voice.

A Boy's Fight with a Panther.

A few days since, while Mr. W. H. Higgins, residing about two and a half miles from Renovo, on the dividing ridge between Paddy's and Drury's runs, was working in his field making hay, he saw an animal in a distant part of the field making off with a hen. He thought it a fox, and called the attention of his son George, a lad of 14, to it. George is fond of hunting, and, getting his gun, he started off for the fox, accompanied by his 5-year-old brother and a hound. They had not been gone long when Mr. Higgins heard several continuous yells of the most terrible kind. The varmint had been treed by the dog, and its half-human shrieks rent the air with terrible distinctness, like the shrill, agonized voice of a woman in dire distress. The excited father and his field-hands at once made for the point whence came these foreboding sounds, and ere they reached the spot they met George dragging a huge female panther, measuring five feet one inch in length, and standing two feet high. The boys had followed the dog to a big tree, up which the panther had gone about sixty-five feet. When the eldest lad saw the animal crouched and glaring above, he felt it was either to be a dead panther or a death-struggle between it and himself and little brother. He was a good shot generally, but here was to be the severest test his young eye and nerves had ever been put to, and one that might well have tried an older and stouter hunter. He drew the bead and fired, feeling as he did so, he says, as if he had been lifted clear off of his feet. But there was the hungry brute yet, crouching on the limb, its eyes fairly fit to burst in their malignant glare. Bang went the gun of our brave young hunter, just as the panther sprung. It seemed, said the lad, as though the animal sprung out from the tree about twenty-five feet, then came straight down, lighting on the dog, about sixteen feet from the boys. The young hunter again thought he had missed. Clubbing his gun, he advanced on the brute to strike it, but it rolled over dead before he could do so. Examination proved that his first shot had struck about four inches back of the heart, the last one in the heart. It was bravely and well done, and but for the steady nerve and true aim of the lad he and his little brother would doubtless have fallen victims of the animal's ravenous hunger.—*Lock Haven (Pa.) How He Was Hooked.

On Clark street, near Madison, last evening, about 8 o'clock there was quite a scene. The keen eye of some star-gazer caught sight of a dark object hanging from a window. As the form moved itself into vigorous action, a curious crowd gathered about and looked upward. Soon a delegation appeared at the window, and the struggling form was drawn up and lost from sight of the crowd. During the afternoon he had been moistening himself with liquids. The result was slumber. It seems the most cool and comfortable spot was the sill of the open window. Deep sleep-sighs soon disturbed the party, and the body projected itself over the window-sill, and further it would have gone had not a friendly hook fastened itself to the clothing and suspended animation for the time being. Suddenly the man came to his sober senses, and help from above relieved him from his unpleasant position.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The annual crop of tobacco of the United States is about 420,000,000 pounds, two-thirds of which is exported.

During the year 1878 there were 2,700 medical students graduated from the fifty-nine colleges of the United States. As the statistics show that in this country an average of 500 people support one physician, there must be a constant supply of over 13,000 patients who must pay the handsome sum of $1,976,000 a year, in order to allow each doctor only $2 a day.

There are now in existence more than 218,000 United States patents. There are but a little over 80,000 English patents, 50,000 French and 40,000 Belgian and German patents upon inventions. In 1848 there were over 4,000 more English than American patents, there being at that time 10,000 English and something less than 6,000 American. These figures show how inventors of this country are progressing as compared with those of other countries in which the patent system prevails.

A car load is nominally 20,000 pounds. It is also 70 barrels of salt, 70 of lime, 90 of flour, 60 of whisky, 200 sacks of flour, 6 cords of soft wood, 18 or 20 head of cattle, 50 or 60 head of hogs, 80 to 100 head of sheep, 9,000 feet of solid boards, 17,000 feet of siding, 13,000 feet of flooring, 40,000 shingles, one-half less hard lumber, one-fourth less of green lumber, one-tenth of joist, scantling and other large timbers, 340 bushels of wheat, 400 of corn, 680 of oats, 400 of barley, 360 of flaxseed, 360 of apples, 320 of Irish potatoes, 360 of sweet potatoes, 1,000 of bran.

The last English census gives the following figures with regard to the women employed in the metal trades: Pattern designers, 137; surgical instrument makers, 230; gun finishers, 366; percussion cap makers, 660; cartridge makers, 1,497; machine makers, 243; file makers, 1,021; cutlers, 837; scissors makers, 376; needles, 2,110; pins, 403; steel pens, 1,577; thimbles, 144; goldsmiths' and jewelers' trades, 3,022; plated wares, 701; copper manufacture, 160; tin trade, 932; tin-plate workers, 1 883; brass trades, 1,887; wire workers, 497; lacquerers, 698; burnishers, 1,320; iron manufactories, 2,093; blacksmiths, 436; nail makers, 10,864; anchor makers, 910; press workers, 855; screw cutters, 1,497.

An Underground Lake.

A wonderful underground lake has been discovered near Hemelen, Algeria, near the picturesque cascades of that place. Some miners had blasted an enormous rock near the cascades, and on removal of the debris found it had covered a large opening into a cave, the floor of which was covered with water. Constructing a rude raft, and providing themselves with candles, the workmen sailed along this underground river, which at a distance of sixty meters was found to merge into a large lake of limpid water. The roof of the cavern was very high, and covered with stalactites, the brilliant colors of which sparkled under the light of the candles. Continuing their course, the workmen had at certain places to navigate their craft between the stalactites, which, meeting stalagmites from the bed of the lake, formed enormous columns, which looked as if they had been made expressly to sustain the enormous arches. They thus reached the extremity of the lake, where they noticed a large channel extending toward the south, into which water quietly made its way. This is supposed to be a large fissure which has baffled exploration hitherto at Sebdon, and which connects the cascades with that locality, and thus with the mysterious sources of the Tatna. It is possible that here they have found an immense natural basin, supplied by powerful sources, and sending a part of its waters toward the lake, while the rest goes to Sebdon. The workmen estimated the distance underground traversed by them at three kilometers, and the breadth by the lake at two. They brought out with them a quantity of fish, which swarmed round the raft, and which were found to be blind.

Secretary Thompson's Start in Life.

Though our favorite old salt, Mariner Richard W. Thompson, of the navy, is perhaps not as great a man as was George Washington, yet is he of more prominence now than when he accosted Alex. Donahue, in Louisville, forty-odd years ago. Mr. Donahue, who is an old storekeeper in Bedford, Ind., tells the Indianapolis Journal how Dick got to be a Hoosier and consequently the trained sea-dog of the Wabash. When the narrator was down in Louisville buying goods one day a dapper little fellow approached him and asked whether a youngster could get half a show up in Injeanner. Mr. Donahue took the lad up to Bedford and there the latter got a school to teach. Dick's sleeping accommodations were none of the best, he and Alex. bunking on a hard stone counter for about two years. The school teacher was fond of reading law books, and once he volunteered to get some poor fellow out of a law scrape. His exposition of the law excited the wonder and admiration of the natives, and after that everybody wanted "that little Thompson" whenever they got into trouble. In a few months the legal business began to pile up on him, so that he was literally forced to become a lawyer. Judge Dewey, of Charleston, kept an eye on what was passing at Bedford, and loaned the young man books with which to pursue his studies. In three or four months he was regularly admitted to the bar, and from that time it was smooth sailing into Congress—as smooth as when he is at the helm of the good sloop Tallapoosa.—Philadelphia Times

Immediately after tea and coffee, when there is a party staying at Sandrigham, the Prince of Wales sits down to his whist, of which he is passionately fond, in the small room leading out of the drawing-room, and the Princess adjourns to the bowling alley, where two little boys, attired in appropriate costume, are in attendance to send back the heavy balls and set up the pins.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY EDITORS.

The Power of Kindness.

"There is one chapter in my life's history that I have always kept locked in my heart," said John Haviland, as he faced the little group in the parlor; "but to-night I feel as if it was my duty to open it for your inspection, and I do it for the love of woman—for the love of a woman who made me what I am worthy to be, the husband of a good woman."

"Why, John!" said Mrs. Haviland, softly approaching—babe still held tight to her bosom—"you frighten me."

"Let's have the story," said the rest of the group, certain that something good might be anticipated; and John commenced, at first a little timid, but gaining confidence as he proceeded.

"When I first came to New York, at the age of 12 years, to seek my fortune, I can call myself a precocious chap without danger of being accused of an unusual degree of self-appreciation. I was quick to learn everything, the bad as well as the good. My employer used profane language. I picked up the oaths that he dropped with a naturalness that surprised even myself. The boys in the office all chewed tobacco. This was a little the hardest job I ever attempted, but after two weeks of nausea and indescribable stomach wrenchings, I came off victorious, and could get away with my paper a day with the best of 'em."

"True, every word of it!" said the speaker.

"One afternoon I was sent with a note from my employer to a house in the upper part of the city. I hadn't anything to read, but I had plenty of tobacco, and with that I proposed to entertain myself during the two or three hours I must spend in the passage. For some distance I did not notice who were beside me, but by-and-by a lady said, very softly and pleasantly: 'Would you please, little boy, be more careful? I am going to a party this afternoon, and I should hate to have my dress spoiled.'

"I looked into her face. It was the sweetest I ever saw. Pale, earnest and loving, to my boyish heart it was the countenance of an angel."

"What did you say?" interrupted Mrs. Haviland, her bright eyes filling with tears as she saw how the memory of this beautiful woman affected her husband.

"Say! There was very little I could say. I think all I did for some time was to look."

"I managed to dispose of the tobacco, however, and wiped my mouth very carefully, all of which I felt certain she saw and mentally commented upon."

"Have you a mother, little boy?" she next asked in the same low tone.

"No, ma'am,' I answered, and felt my throat filling up, and I knew I must swallow mighty fast to keep from sobbing.

"You have a father, then, I suppose?" she kept on.

"No, ma'am; no father."

"Brothers and sisters?"

"Neither, ma'am."

"Then the little boy is alone in the world?"

"All alone, ma'am."

"How long has his mother been dead?' and the dear woman looked away from my face, and waited till I could speak.

"Two years" I answered.

"And you loved her?" came next.

"Dearly," was all I could say.

"She was silent for a moment, and then she said so sweetly—oh! I shall never forget it—

"And what do you think your dear mother would say—how do you think she would feel—to know that her little boy was guilty of such a disgusting habit as this?" pointing to the tell-tale quid which I had vainly tried to hide beneath the seat.

"I must leave now," she continued; 'but here is my card, and, if you come to me" most any evening I shall be glad to see you, and perhaps we shall be of some service to each other."

"She gave me her little gloved hand, and to my dying day I shall never forget the sensation of that moment. I could not bear to part with her; without her I felt that I could do nothing—with her I could grow to man's estate—a man in the truest sense of the word. From that moment tobacco never passed my lips.

"As soon as I could summon courage I called upon the lady. Well do I remember how my heart beat as I waited in the elegant parlor for her to come down, and how awkward I felt as I followed my guide to her private sitting-room. She got at every point of my life, and before I bade her good-bye it was arranged that I should spend two evenings of each week at her house, and study on the occasion just what she thought best.

"No lover ever looked forward to meeting with the mistress of his heart any more ardently than I did to these meetings with my friend.

"I grew careful of my personal appearance, careful of my conversation, and strove in every way to be worthy of the noble friendship. Two years passed in this delightful manner—two years that made me. My friend not only attended to my studies, striving also all the while to sow the right kind of spiritual seed, but she procured me a business situation with a friend of hers, where I remain to this day. Nobody but God knows what I owe this woman. During the last three months of those two years I noticed that she grew constantly pale and thin; she never was betrayed into speaking of herself. Sometimes, when I would ask her if she felt worse than usual, she would reply:

"Oh, no! I am only a little tired—that is all."

"One evening she kept me by her sofa much longer than was her custom, while she arranged lessons, and laid out work, it seemed to me, for months.

"Why so much to-night?" I inquired, conscious that my heart ached, and vaguely suspecting the cause.

"Because, dear," she answered 'I do not want you to come for the next week, and I am anxious that you should have sufficient work to anticipate as well as to keep you busy. I think I can trust you to be a good boy, John?"

"I think you can, ma'am," I answered almost sobbing.

"If I should see your mother, my dear boy, before long, what shall I say to her for you?"

"Then I knew all, and my grief had no bounds. It is no use to go on. She died two days after."

Our Comical Progenitor.

[Norwich Bulletin.]

A little fellow rushed into the street recently to look at a monkey that accompanied an organ-grinder who was playing in front of an adjoining block. Never having perused the "Origin of Man," he gazed in wonder and admiration a few moments, and then rushing into the house he met his grandmother, to whom he addressed this inquiry: "Grandmother, who made monkeys?" "God, my boy," replied the old lady, in her candid way. "Well," said the excitable grandson in rejoinder, "I'll bet God laughed when he got the first monkey done!"

A clergyman of my acquaintance told me that he once visited a lady of his parish who had just lost her husband, in order to offer consolation, and upon her earnest inquiries as to the reunion of families in heaven, he strongly asserted his belief in that fact; and when she asked with anxiety whether any time must elapse before friends would be able to find each other in the next world he emphatically said, "No, they will be united at once." He was thinking of the happiness of being able to offer the relief of such faith, when she broke in upon such meditations by exclaiming sadly, "Well, his first wife has got him then by this time."—Court Circular.

Miss Fletcher.

Miss Fletcher, the author of "Kismet" and "Mirage," out of which books she has made a great deal of money, looks about 20, but is said to be 28. She lives in Rome, dresses in excellent taste, is very pretty and has a profusion of blonde hair. Everybody speaks of her as "George," after her non de plume, George Fleming. She is a capital horsewoman, talks several languages fluently, and is really a picturesque, dashing creature. She dedicated "Mirage" to Walter Pater, and when she was in London last season he invited a lot of college dons and literary people to meet "George Fleming." He was much surprised when the blushing girl presented herself. He supposed, of course, she was a man. She was born in Rio Janeiro, of a Jewish mother and an American father, but has passed little of her life in America.

A Trim Appearance.

No woman can give a satisfactory excuse for personal untidiness. Household work of whatever kind, does not interfere with having a clean dress on, however common, a nice, plain collar, and a smooth head of hair. There is all the difference in the indifferent housewives in this respect. Some always look bright and "smart;" but others never look decently clean in the mornings; they seem to have no idea that anybody ever notices their personal appearance while engaged in their household duties, or that it is a matter of the least possible concern to anybody. They forget that they have a husband, who was won when they were in full dress, and studied to attract him by the addition it gave to their persons' without regard to the time and trouble it required—whose eye is as sharp now as it ever was, and whose sensibilities are just as acute. The children, too—especially the girls—what a sad example to them is slovenliness on the part of their mother.

Bread on the Waters.

[Detroit Free Press.]

One cold day last spring a prominent business man, on Woodward avenue, was approached by a seedy looking stranger who wanted aid to get himself to Pittsburg. He was a young man, and he told a sad and pretty straight story of vain travels in the west in search of a missing sister. He couldn't promise a speedy return of the loan, but he told the merchant that bread cast upon the waters was sure to return some day or other. The merchant didn't know about it, but finally tried it to the tune of $4, and the young man left the city. His case had almost been forgotten, when a letter was received from him Saturday, dated at Pittsburg. It read:

"You will doubtless remember having given me $4 last spring. I told you to regard it as bread cast upon the waters. No good action ever goes unrewarded. I found the sister I was in search of. She was in the variety business. To convince you that I appreciate your kind favor I hereby inclose one of my sister's photographs, taken in costume. Her tights and slippers alone cost me $22, and may Heaven ever bless you!"

But for the kindness of a Detroiter the young man might never have found his sister, the variety business would have lost a star, and the $22 tights and slippers would have been nowhere. Be kind to the poor—always be kind to the poor.

Not Proven.

[President Jackson.]

I can accord to the scientist nearly all he can claim without in the slightest degree affecting the foundations of my faith. Does he tell me this universe was created millions of years ago? I do not deny it, for my Bible tells me it "was in the beginning," which may have been long before the millions of ages which he claims. Does he tell me that the laws which are in operation to-day have been in operation for millions of years? I admit it; and only add, that the great Law-giver existed before these laws. Does he tell me of the boundlessness of space, of the infinitude of worlds? I rejoice the more, for all are the works of my Father's hand. Does he tell me that the laws of evolution show a development from the less to the greater? I accept all that, for under the gospel, from a sinner I become a saint, and from a saint I shall be exalted above the angels, and shall sit down with the Savior on His throne. I believe in the survival of the fittest, for the Christain shall survive the "wreck of matter and the crash of worlds." Does he tell me that this evolution dispenses with the Creator? I say, not so. There are many things which are claimed in evolution, to which I must give the verdict of the Scotch jury, "Not proven." Yet, were I to admit them all, they would not affect my faith in the wisdom and skill and power of the great Father.

In order to find out whether he can carry New York or not, Tilden is suggested as a candidate for governor of that state. It is important to him to know his strength at home, before he presents his name to the presidential nominating convention. It may save him some money.

45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

THE FIVE POINTS AT NIGHT.

New York Sun.

Some of the old-time reputation of the Five Points is returning. Street fights are frequent and bar-room brawls are common. A walk through Baxter, Park, and some of the cross streets late in the evening is not interesting to persons with weak nerves. Drays, wagons, and handcarts line the narrow sidewalks, and in many encroach upon them. Toes are stubbed against ash-boxes and barrels and garbage buckets, and many places are made slippery by the dirty water creeping from under the fences and doorways. Bar-room doors are open, and short-haired bartenders are seen behind them, putting up a black bottle here and drawing a mug of beer there. One-half of the space outside the counters is filled with men, old and young, the former hilarious and the latter quick to take the aggressive. Coats are scarce, and vests are not part of their clothing. Blue flannel shirts, open at the neck, prevail, but white shirts, very dirty, are not rarities. On the steps throngs linger. Rough jokes are passed and chums hailed. Corner groceries are open, and women, many of them carrying babies in their arms, pass in and out, or select a handful of vegetables from the shelves outside. Cigar stores, with empty boxes but attractive trade signs in the windows, are only half lighted. The dealer smokes in peace and reads a newspaper. Cobblers hammer and sew far into the night, working by the light of a single smoky lamp. Faint streaks of light come through the windows of the high tenements and from the underground doorways of the low shanties. Sitting on the drays in the streets, boys and rough-looking young men skylarked, their feet as they were tossed about endangering the heads of passers-by. Young women in twos and threes walked slowly up and down, passing remarks and gossiping. On a corner, notorious as the scene of fights and squabbles, a policeman stood, swinging his club, and watching the movements of a crowd of boys opposite.

"Come away from the corner. That's were the gang holds out, and it's a tough gang, I tell you," he whispered, on being touched and spoken to, and he led the way up and across the street, finding a dark place beside an old, tumble-down building. "Yes, there was a muss around here early this morning. One feller got shot in the abdomen and another feller got it in the arm. They had a lively time, you bet, about twenty minutes past 1 this morning. I was up the street looking into a little burglary at Kelly's about that time. Just after I'd searched the house I heard the call down the street, and as I came a-whooping down here I met the officer on the other post, who said there'd been a muss down on the corner of Baxter street and Park. When I got there everything was as close as a drum and you couldn't see a light. You couldn't get a thing about it, not one thing. They wont give each other away, you know, and I couldn't do anything. But round the corner I found some one, and I asked, 'What's been the matter round here?' 'There's been some shooting on the corner, but don't you give me away,' said the feller. 'Which way did they do?' says I. 'Down Park street,' says he. That's all I wanted. I went up the street and found the special officer, and says: 'Run to the Chambers street 'ospital and see if anybody's been shot.' He hurried over there, and when he came back I had it all straight.

"Some First Ward fellers were up here that night," he continued, after looking up and down the street, "and after they'd got a few drinks in 'em they had a fuss with some of the Fourteenth Ward fellers. Dan Murphy was 'downed'—that means knocked down and kicked, you know—and a thin feller by the name of Long was kicked almost to death. That was enough to make the rest lively, and pistols were pulled. How the shooting was done nobody seems to know exactly, but Murphy got it in the arm and Driscol got it in the abdomen. A feller they call Cuddy was one of Driscol's heelers, and it seems to be that he tried to hit Murphy, and hit Driscol accidentally. They went to the 'ospital alone, and the special officer found 'em there having their wounds dressed. Driscol says 'It's all right; 'twas only an accident;' and Murphy says it was an accident, but Murphy was taken to the station-house to-day. Driscol got away, I heard, but was caught this morning. We'll get the rest of 'em yet.

"Tough neighborhood, aint it?" he asked, as a howl came through one of the windows near by. "'Twas worse years ago when I was a boy, but we've got some pretty tough gangs here now. Want to take a walk through Bottle Alley? That's where you'll find it. Oh, you've been through there before? Tough, eh," and he twirled his club and walked into the light near the corner.

Five minutes afterward "Police, police; take him off!" startled the passengers in cars in Catham street. At Baxter and Catham streets a young man was trying to elude the pursuit of a shorter man. For a few seconds he succeeded, but the shorter man chased him to the middle of the street between the car tracks, and catching hold of his throat squeezed it until he turned purple in the face. From every adjoining street and the bar-rooms and concert gardens throngs rushed, and the street was blocked. Men in their shirt sleeves pulled and kicked in their efforts to get near the combatants. But no police officer was in sight, and some of that short man's friends pulled him away.

"I was afraid of his knife," the other man said as he went around a corner rubbing his throat.

Death of Ex-Lieutenant-Governor Johnson's Wife by Poison.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Sept. 3.—To-day's sensation was the suicide of the wife of Charles P. Johnson, who was formerly lieutenant-governor of the state, and whose influence with the Senator Vest party last winter, together with his recent course, warrants the belief that he would be a strong candidate for either governor or United States senator at the next opportunity.

Mrs. Johnson has been ailing since last January, when the death of a two weeks old child of premature birth, for which she had conceived a fondness that was most abnormal, disturbed the equilibrium of her mind. A model home which was the envy of nearly all who visited it, became almost dessolate through the constant apprehension that she who had been its brightest light would destroy herself. Since that time she has taken poisonous doses three or four times, and each time previous to yesterday a timely arrival of physicians saved her life. Her reason was not so far gone but that she fully realized the terrible character of her periodical affliction, but she confessed to her husband, to whom she was most devotedly attached, that when the spells came on her she could not resist the suicidal disposition. She was terribly humiliated after each failure, and begged to be forgiven by her dear ones for the trouble and anxiety she caused.

Despite the closest surveillance she managed to get morphine, chloroform and other poisonous drugs, but in all but four cases she was sufficiently master of herself to go and deliver them to her husband and acknowledge her temptation. They went to the seaside recently, but she came home unimproved. Since then she has been watched day and night by her daughters and a nurse. It seems, however, that before going east she purchased a half pound of arsenic, under pretense of needing it to poison rats, and, finding her restraint such as to baffle all efforts to get a milder poison, she yesterday determined to make use of that, which was hidden away somewhere.

She requested the daughter who was watching with her to go down stairs and get a newspaper, and while the young lady was gone she put three teaspoonfulls of arsenic in a cup of tea, went into the bath-room and drank the dose. Of course, the fact was soon discovered, but physicians arrived too late, and she died in a few hours. She was rational to the last, and expressed the deepest regret at her weakness and at the pain she caused her family. A sadder death-bed than hers could not be imagined.

A New State.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mosby, the former rebel guerrilla, is now a good republican. Comfortably seated in his consulate at Hong Kong, he writes:

"Reconstruct parties, and let the new men, the live men of the state, rally around Grant and bury the old fossils. Grant is the man under whose leadership we can create a new state."

A "new" state is good. It is only another expression of the demand for a more "stable" government or a "stronger" government. Grant in the White House for life, with elections on the Napoleonic system of fraud and force—or the American fraud system of 1877—will mean a new state indeed.

The "marriage editor" of a Vermont paper announces the "happy event" and relieves his mind on the occasion as follows:

MARRIED.

In Pawlet, Vt., August 15th, John C. Day and Miss Emma Weeks.

A week is lost, a day is gained,
But time should not complain,
There'll soon be little Days enough
To make the week again.

Organization.

[State Sentinel.]

The democratic party needs thorough organization throughout the country. Its future success depends upon it. In urging the necessity of organization, it is not essential that a presidential candidate be named, though it is of supreme importance that the policy of the campaign be so mapped out that the rank and file of the party may comprehend the nature of the work before them. The "battle-cry" should ring out clear and distinct from the center to the circumference of the country. Upon this let the party come together and prepare for the coming campaign. There may be some diversity of opinions upon minor matters, and hence the requirement for early counsels, preliminary meetings, the formation of clubs, and the distribution of documents for systemized work. These meetings may be held in wards, townships, cities, counties and states, until the net work is complete, and all are bound together in one harmonious whole. There should be adopted some simple plan of action, without complications or red tape, something that will interest the masses and insure success. As yet, little or nothing has been done. Ringing appeals by national and state democratic committees would be in order. Let the people know what is expected and what is wanted. The democratic masses can not too soon be set to thinking. Republican conspirators are at work. From the smallest post-office, from the most insignificant employe of the government up to the White House, now the foul den of a wretch who rewards thieves and perjurers with federal offices for helping him into office, the republican party is at work. Corruption funds are pouring in from a hundred thousand crime-polluted sources, and every force known to men who have succeeded by crime, and who dare to commit more crimes, is even now being utilized for the campaign of 1880. Shall democrats be unmindful of the tremendous issues at stake? Is supineness to characterize the democratic party when every consideration that directly or remotely relates to the welfare of the country proclaims the necessity for eternal vigilence? The issues have been squarely presented in the proceedings of the extra session of congress. There is no mistaking their significance. These issues nneed to be authoritively analyzed and sharply defined—all unnecessary verbiage eliminated—until the people can grasp them, comprehend them and hold them. Republicanism means the peril of the liberties of the people. It means a centralization of power in the hands of the few. It means the overthrow of the constitution, the rights of the states, and a despotism. It means the dethronement of the civil power and the enthronement of the military power. It means a debauched ballot-box, and an army of deputy marshals to intimidate voters and to arrest them in the interest of a conspiracy to overthrow the government as it now exists. The campaign is at hand. Democrats are deaf if they do not hear the slogan of the republican conspirators. To assist the republican party and to defeat it, to rescue the government from their grasp and perpetuate the liberties of the people, is the task that devolves upon the democratic party. There is absolutely no other hope for the country. Hence the necessity for thorough organization. It may very properly begin in Indiana, for nowhere in the broad land will the fight wax warmer than in this state. In Indiana, and even now, the republican party is organizing. Its central committee is actively engaged—orders are issued and the initial steps have been taken; already noses are being counted, and the preliminary work is going forward. Under such circumstances it will not do for the democratic party to remain languid.

A New Medical Theory.

A Minnesota man writes to the Salem (Mass.) Gazette as follows: "A discovery in the treatment of dipthera has been made here. A young man, whose arm had been amputated, was attacked with diptheria before healing took place; and instead of the matter incident to that disease being deposited in the throat, the greater portion appeared on the wounded arm, and the diptheria was very light and easily managed. The doctor profited by this, and in his next case of diptheria blistered his patient's chest, and on this blistered part the chief deposits appeared. This was also an easy case of the disease. The theory of the doctor is that diptheria usually appears in the throat because of the thinness of the lining of the throat. Hence, when the blister breaks the skin upon any other part of the body, the disease appears there."

A Comical People.

Richard Grant White in the Atlantic.

Precedence in England extends even into the servants' hall and kitchen This is manifested every morning. At family prayers all the house servants attend, just as they used to do here in families in which that domestic discipline was kept up. A row of chairs is placed for them in the breakfast-room, and they enter and take their seats. The head of the house reads prayers and the lesson of the day, or some other part of the Bible. I observed that the servants in each house always entered in the same order, the housekeeper marching at the head of the line and taking the seat farthest from the door. And it was, I am sorry to say, rather funny to see some dozen of them pound solemnly in and plump stolidly down upon their seats. After prayers are over, they of course arise and go out. But I saw that they did not go out in reverse order, the one nearest the door going out first, as would have been natural and convenient. They rose, stood in line, and then the housekeeper went out first, followed by the servant next her; and thus the line doubled upon itself, the file thus telling itself off, so that the one who entered the room last left it last. The order of entering and leaving was the same. On speaking of this I was told with smiles that precedence was strictly observed among them; that in the servants' hall the housekeeper took the head of the table, the butler the foot, and that the servants, upper and under, had places strictly assigned to them according to the dignity of their positions. What is the order of their sitting or of their going the loud of precedence only knows; but I suppose that the my lady's maid sits on the right hand of the butler, and my lord's own man on that of the housekeeper. At dinner they sit together at the common table down to cheese; and the upper servants only rise and go in state to dessert in the housekeeper's room. The upper servants are those who have servants under them; an upper servant never wears livery. When visitors at a great house bring servants with them, the guests in the servants' hall are formerly assigned places strictly according to the rank of their master or mistress. I learned also that servants do call each other by the titles of their masters and mistresses, and that this incident of "high life below stairs" is no fiction.

The owa Howler.

The worn adage that "extremes beget extremes" has lately found a new and not uninstructive illustration. About six or eight months ago the editor of a small paper in Mississippi, called the Okolona States, began a serious of ravings, which the radical press of the north and some of the more reckless and irresponsible radical demagogues in congress, like Frye, of Maine, and Burrows, of Michigan, eagerly seized and advertised as sample expressions of the real sentiments of the southern people. The example of these ravings was not lost. In a short time an answering howl of northern hate was set up from a paper called the Sentinel, published in a little town called Lemars, away up in the grasshopper and hurricane region of Iowa. It must be put to the credit of the Iowa howler that he writes good English and thinks with vigor, which is more than can be said of his Mississippi antitype. Moreover, the howl of the Iowa man expresses a sentiment that is really cherished, and echoes thoughts that are actually meditated by a considerable number of northern people as theories practicable of accomplishment at no distant time in the future; while the frantic yells of the Okolona man are nothing but a ridiculous wake over the remains of ideas that long since ceased to animate any mind in the south. This is an important difference, and its existence makes the ravings of the Iowa man worth an attention which it would be silly to bestow upon the Okolona man.

Carats of Gold.

As pure gold is so very soft—too soft, indeed, for any practical purpose—it is alloyed with copper or silver, the first alloy producing a reddish color, and the second a pale yellow gold. Our gold coin, like that of France, Belgium and Holland, contains one-tenth of both copper and silver, mostly copper. For jewelry, the alloy differs with the quantity, and is estimated by what are called carats. A carat is the 24th part of any given quantity. Thus when gold is called 24 carats, it means that it is all gold; when 20 carats, that of every 24 parts, 20 are gold. 18 carats is the most common alloy used by jewelers, and keeps as well as pure gold. 12 carats is only half gold, and is low alloy, which is apt to tarnish more easily, and lose its luster, requiring more frequent cleaning.

A Cow's Call on a Hornets' Nest.

St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

On Wednesday Mr. Louis Duensing picketed his family cow in a convenient pasture, holding her in place with a rope one hundred feet long, which was attached to a block of wood about as large as an ordinary beer keg. While the gentle bouvine was nosing around for succulent blades of grass she accidently disturbed a hornets' nest, and in less than no time the poor animal found her skin filled with painful sensations. Finding herself unable to cope with her small but industrious enemies, she tried to ascertain what was best to do, but the multiplied stings made her frantic, and she started off on a furious race, with head down and tail waving in the air. She made a dash through an alley near the residence of Mr. Hall McCleave, and that gentleman who happened to witness the scene, avers upon honor that the cow ran so fast that he could not see the rope, but the wooden block was discerned in full motion, battering the fences on either side of the alley. While he was debating the propriety of crawling under the sidewalk for safety, cow, rope and block swept by like a rocket, but in an instant the rear part of the rope came in contact with a stout hitching post, swinging the block once or twice around it. As a result, such a "short stop" was called on the cow that she was instantly thrown and nearly performed a somersault, and this unequal movement disconcerted the pressing hornets and gave the suffering cow partial relief. The run was not long, but it has seldom been beaten in this section of the country.

Russian Injustice.

In an artical on the Russian peasantry the Molva observes that the chief peasant in a village sometimes has more power than any man in the Empire except the Czar. He has the power, for instance, of ordering a culprit to be flogged, a right which is denied by law to any other public functionary or citizen in the Empire. Further, a majority of the peasantry in a Commune can sentence one of their number to be beaten with sticks, and there is no appeal against the sentence; and the Commune can still sentence a man to banishment to Siberia for life. This sentence has been passed for such petty offenses as stealing a handkerchief or a little honey, or opening a brandy-shop without the permission of the Commune. In the Government of Samara a man was sentenced to be banished, together with his family. Shortly after, however, the Senate, to whom the case was referred, decided that the man should be permitted to remain in his village, on the ground that his health would not permit of his going to Siberia. The case of the man's wife, however, was not considered; and the sentence was carried out, so far as she was concerned, though she was innocent of any crime, and had been directed to go to Siberia merely in order that she should not be separated from her husband.

A Good-Night Clock.

From the Jacksonville Union.

A father on Monroe street has purchased a lover's alarm clock that works like a charm. At 10 o'clock it strikes loudly, two little doors open, and a man with a dressing gown and cap on glides out, holding in his hand a card inscribed "good night." As he bows and smilingly retires back into the clock, the young man takes the hint, says "good-night" to the fair daughters and departs.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE statue to Gen. Custer, by William MacDonald, has just been unveiled at West Point. The statue cost something over $15,000. It is a statuesque portrait of Custer in his last and fatal fight. It is eight feet in height, and dressed in a Colonel's uniform.

THE body of a boy has been picked up in the North river, with the hands and feet securely bound.

ALL the property of Jefferson Borden, one of the founders of the Fall River manufacturing industries, and an officer in many banks and other corporations, has been attached at the instance of the Fall River Savings Bank, his largest creditor. The attachments have been made in consequence of the complications growing out of the downfall of Borden's sons-in-law, Walter Paine and George B. Durfee.

THE WEST.

ADVICES from the West report that Col. Miles has returned to Fort Keogh with his command, consisting of seven companies of the Fifth infantry, bringing with him nearly 1,000 half-breeds, who have been furnishing arms and ammunition to the Indians between the Yellowstone and the boundary line. He has cleared the country of all roving bands, and driven Sitting Bull's followers across the American line, besides breaking up the illicit traffic in arms and ammunition between the half-breeds and hostile Indians. The campaign was very successful considering the small loss of Miles.

A SAN FRANCISCO dispatch says that Charles De Young, who attempted to assassinate I. S. Kalloch, has been admitted to bail in the sum of $25,000.

A SAN FRANCISCO dispatch says the Eureka stage-coach was stopped above Nevada City by twelve masked men, the express bag taken, and the passengers made to stand up in the road and deliver their personal property. William F. Cummings, banker, of Moore's Flat, resisted the robbers when they attempted to take a gold bar belonging to him, and was shot through the head and instantly killed.

A CINCINNATI dispatch says the bodies of two women and a little girl were found in a house at Waynesville, Ohio, a station on the Little Miami railroad. They were all evidently murdered some days ago, as the stench from the bodies was dreadful. They are supposed to be Mrs. Hatte, her sister and her sister's child. Very little is as yet known about the affair.

AT Willets, Mendocino county, Cal., a few days ago, Elijah Frost, "Bige" Gibson and "Tom" McCracken were taken from a constable and hanged by a mob. These men were under arrest for the larceny of a saddle and some harness.

THE SOUTH.

FOR the two days ending on the evening of Aug. 29, twenty-seven new cases of fever and seven deaths from the plague were reported to the Memphis Board of Health. New Orleans dispatches of Aug. 30 report the disease spreading in that city.....Henri Stewart and William Elliott were hanged at Fort Smith, Ark., Aug. 29, for murder committed in the Indian Territory.

THERE were fifteen deaths from yellow fever at Memphis, for the two days ending on the evening of the 31st ult. Fifty-eight new cases were reported to the Board of Health in the same time. The authorities were confident that there would be an early abatement of the plague. The total number of new cases reported for the week was 171—white, 67; colored, 84. Total number to date, 848. Total number of deaths from yellow fever for the week, 51; total number to date, 228. The Howard Association report having 208 nurses on duty in 193 families; 132 white and 61 colored.—At New Orleans, no additional cases were reported for the three days, ending on the 1st inst. Gen. J. B. Hood and his daughter Lydia died of the disease on Aug. 30—the father in the morning and the daughter in the evening. Another daughter was seriously ill with the fever. Gen. Hood leaves eleven children, the eldest 10 years, the youngest (twins) 3 weeks. His physical condition had been bad for some time, caused, it is alleged, by financial reverses. The death of his wife affected him very much. He leaves a manuscript of the history of the war, which he intended to have published this fall.

NINE deaths from yellow fever and forty-four new cases at Memphis for the forty-eight hours ending on the evening of Sept. 2. The National Board of Health have approved the plan submitted by the Superintendent of Quarantine, for the establishment of a quarantine picket, encircling the entire city and suburbs. Fifty men have been assigned to patrol duty to enforce this new quarantine law.

THE Chisholm murder cases were called in the Circuit Court of Kemper county, at De Kalb, Miss., on the 2d inst. Defendants moved to quash the indictment, but the motions were overruled. The State and defendants then announced themselves ready for trial. The first case called was that of Henry G. Gully, for the murder of Miss Cornelia Chisholm.

JOHN H. GATLING, brother of the inventor of the Gatling gun, was recently murdered at Murfreesboro, N. C.

CONTRIBUTIONS are being freely made in the South for the benefit of the children of the late Gen. Hood, who are left destitute.

AT Memphis, for the forty-eight hours ending at 6 o'clock p. m., Sept. 4, there were sixteen deaths from yellow fever. Fifty-five new cases were reported to the Board of Health for the same period. The fever was gradually spreading in the suburbs and toward the country. The Howard Association have exhausted their funds, and have issued an appeal for aid to the country at large.

GENERAL.

THE question of ownership of the newly-discovered Magada silver mine is causing trouble in the Mexican States of Coahuila, Durango and Chihuahua. The General Government has ordered all work stopped until the question is settled, and meanwhile claims all the metal taken out, and has confiscated thirty-four carts of silver on route to Texas. Ten men have been killed and many wounded.

THE celebrated fast-trotting horse Rarus has again changed hands, and is now the property of Robert Bonner, of the New York Ledger.

THE report of the business of the port of Baltimore for the month of August shows an increase in the amount of grain received of over 1,000,000 bushels, the receipts being 5,548,000 bushels, all but 300,000 bushels of which was exported.....A French line of steamers running to Baltimore has been established of late for the express purpose of transporting grain.

DARING but unsuccessful attempts were made last week in Toronto to abduct George Brown, the head of the Government and editor of the Globe, and Robert Jaffray, a leading merchant. The latter was carried into a marsh, but regained his liberty after a desperate fight.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says that "since the adjournment of Congress a number of Gen. Grant's friends have had under consideration a suggestion, coming originally from a distinguished Southern soldier, to create the office of Captain General of the Army, with suitable pay and allowances, and to have the same tendered to Gen. U. S. Grant, in recognition of his patriotic services in behalf of the Union. The correspondent adds that the proposition has been received with great favor, and will take shape in a bill accomplishing the purposes named early in the next session of Congress.

WASHINGTON.

THE Internal Revenue Bureau has prepared a statement showing that the number of gallons of spirits produced during the fiscal year of 1879 was 71,822,817, against 56,153,053 gallons in 1878. The gallons withdrawn from bond with the tax paid, in 1879, numbered 57,896,779, and in 1878 there were 79,573,639. The gallons withdrawn from bond for export, in 1879, were 14,837,581, against 5,499,252 in 1878. The gallons landed abroad in 1879 were 7,799,071, and in 1878 the number was 3,364,616. The gallons remaining in bonded warehouse, June 30, 1879, were 19,208,478, and on June 30, 1878, only 14,088,773.

THE disbursements on account of arrears of pensions already amount to $12,630,998, paid to 24,779 claimants, an average of something over $500. The Commissioner of Pensions expresses the opinion that the total of claims will come within the appropriation of $26,000,000.

SOME little amusement has been caused in Washington by the discovery of a well-appointed illicit distillery directly in front of the White House, and only two blocks and a half from it, and situated where the smoke from its fires could be seen from the White House windows, and from those of Commissioner Raum's office. The capacity of the still was found to be about 300 gallons.

THE Treasury Department has just made payment of $150,000 to the Manhattan Savings Bank of the 10-40 bonds which were called in July last. Up to the present time the Government has placed in control of that bank $1,350,000 of the $1,600,000 stolen.

POLITICAL.

THE Republicans of Minnesota held their State Convention at St. Paul on the 2d inst. John S. Pillsbury, present incumbent, was nominated for re-election to the Governorship on the first ballot, and C. A. Gilman, of St. Cloud, was nominated for Lieutenant Governor, on the fourth ballot.

THE Massachusetts Democratic State Central Committee decides that it cannot recognize the Butler party as Democrats, but that a convention will be held soon, to which all Democrats are cordially invited to send delegates.

FOREIGN.

AT a meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom at Belfast, Ireland, a resolution was passed to memorialize the Government for the appointment of a Parliamentary committee to inquire into the effect of the depreciation of silver upon the commercial interests of Great Britain, and to consider what, if any, legislative action is desirable thereon....One thousand cotton operatives have struck in Glasgow....The official report on the fire at Irkutsk, which destroyed about 300 houses, shows that sixty lives were lost, the greater number being children.

COLONIAL defense, a topic which is becoming uppermost in the councils of the British Government, is considered so important a question that a royal commission has been appointed to consider the matter.

ROUMANIA, Germany and Italy are the only countries in Europe in which the wheat harvest has even approached an average yield. Taking 100 as representing what the crop would be under favorable circumstances, a cable dispatch gives the following figures as indicating the product in the countries named: Austro-Hungary, 78; Germany, 85; France, 78; Switzerland, 80; Italy, 82; England, 76; Russia, 79; and Roumania, 94. This represents a tremendous deficiency, and it is well for America and well for the world that the United States have the means of supplying it."

THE United States has officially demanded of the Egyptian Government that it be allowed a representation upon the commission on the liquidation of the Egyptian debt.....Evidence accumulates of the desperately hard times in Great Britain. There have been further reductions in wages and the closing of additional manufactories, and a second party of farmers have left Liverpool for America.

GARIBALDI has left Rome and again retired to his home in Caprera. His health is not materially improved. Physically he is now but little more than a wreck, and he feels deeply the decline of his influence.....The Mark Lane Express, in the weekly review of the English grain market, admits that the crop prospects generally throughout the United Kingdom are of a very unfavorable character, and that the season has now so far advanced that the aggregate result of the year's planting can be closely estimated, which estimate will show a very decided falling off in almost every branch of agricultural industry.

GEN. GRANT sailed Sept. 3, from Yokohama, Japan, in the steamship City of Tokio, for the United States. He is due at San Francisco Sept. 21....The Emperor of Germany and the Czar of Russia met at Alexandrowo the other day, by appointment. The meeting is said to have been exceedingly cordial....Eastern Roumelia is threatened with a Mahommedan uprising....The National railway of Switzerland, built at a cost of 32,000,000 francs, has just been sold for 4,000,000 francs....A Havana dispatch says that the home Government has notified the authorities it will send immediately 20,000 troops to maintain public tranquility in the Island of Cuba, and will also send all the funds necessary to meet the increased expenditure.

A LARGE number of amnestied Communists arrived at Paris in a body the other day. They were enthusiastically received at the station by friends and relatives, with cries of "Vive la Republique." They looked generally very pale and careworn. Their reception by the members of their families was very affecting. Many of the men brought with them pet animals, such as dogs and cats, the companions of their painful exile. The conduct and bearing of the pardoned men was excellent. There were no revengeful expressions heard.

ADVICES from Calcutta leave no doubt whatever that the Indian authorities are preparing, quietly but certainly, for a war with Burmah....A telegram has been received from Prof. Nordenskjold, the Swedish Arctic explorer, dated Yokohama: "All are well. We left winter quarters on the 18th, and doubled East cape on the 20th of July. Proceeded thence to Lawrence bay, Port Clarence, and Behring's island. Have had no sickness and no scurvy. The Vega is in excellent condition."

New York Greenbackers.

The New York Greenback State Convention was held at Utica, Aug. 29. Commodore William Voorhees presided.

A delegate from Corning advocated a coalition with the soft-money Democrats, and nominated Allen C. Beach. The name was received with storm of hisses, and a recess was taken. After recess, Richard Schell, of New York city, was nominated for Governor. The nomination was received with hisses, cheers, and great confusion. Mulford, of New York, said he and those whom he represented would bolt the nomination of Schell, and put a new ticket in the field, with a new organization behind it. The name of Richard Schell was withdrawn. Harris Lewis was then nominated for Governor, and John Welling for Lieutenant Governor, both by acclamation. The ticket was then completed by the nomination of P. K. McCann for Secretary of State, John A. Shannon for Comptroller, Julian Winnie for Treasurer, George Wright for Attorney General.

FEDERAL FINANCE.

SILVER DOLLARS.

The number of standard silver dollars coined during August was 2,787,050; number coined up to Sept. 1, 40,227,050.

The Spragues.

A dispatch from Narragansett pier, under date of Sept. 1, says: "The seeming quiet that has reigned in the Sprague mansion at Canonchet since the return thither of Mrs. Sprague and her children and the hushing up of the scandal was broken in upon yesterday by the sudden departure of that lady, accompanied by her three little daughters. The son chose to remain with his father. Mrs. Sprague claims that ever since her return to Canonchet with her children she has been subjected to many annoyances by the Governor, which culminated on Saturday in an actual outburst on his part. Her friends say the Governor, coming home Friday morning intoxicated, suddenly went into the room where the nurses were dressing the children, and, seeing Mrs. Sprague there, said: 'I'll show you who is master here!' and, without further words, took hold of her arm and shoulder, dragged her around the room, and attempted to throw her out of the window, saying before witnesses that he would do so. He was prevented from carrying his threat into execution by those present. The children were half-dressed, and screaming with fright. Mrs. Sprague began quickly to make preparation to leave, and, Saturday afternoon about 5:30, quietly took her departure, accompanied by her three children, their nurses, and luggage. So well were her plans arranged that the Governor and his nephew, Arthur Watson, who were keeping watch upon her movements, knew nothing about her departure until the party had a good hour's start and were many miles away. A suit for separation, brought by either husband or wife, will probably be at once instituted to settle the right to the control of the children."

New York Politics.

The Republican State Convention of New York, convened at Saratoga Sept. 3, was called to order by A. B. Cornell, Senator Roscoe Conkling was made temporary Chairman, and Vice President William A. Wheeler chosen as permanent Chairman. After the adoption of a platform, the convention proceeded to nominate a candidate for Governor. The first and only ballot resulted: A. B. Cornell, New York, 234; W. H. Robertson, Westchester, 106; Theodore M. Pomeroy, Cayuga, 35; Frank Hiscock, Onondaga, 34; George B. Sloan, Oswego, 1; John H. Starin, Montgomery, 4; whole number of votes cast, 450; necessary to a choice, 227. The Chairman announced that, as A. B. Cornell had received a majority of all the votes, he was the nominee of the convention. A motion to make the nomination unanimous was adopted, with a single objection. The ticket was completed as follows: For Lieutenant Governor, George G. Hoskins; for Secretary of State, Joseph B. Carr; for Comptroller, James W. Wadsworth; for Treasurer, Nathan D. Wendell; for Attorney General, Hamilton Ward; for State Engineer and Surveyor, Howard Soule.

—The New York Prohibition State Convention met at Syracuse on the 3d inst. and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Prof. John W. Mears; for Lieutenant Governor, James H. Bronson; for Secretary of State, Alphonso A. Hopkins; for Comptroller, Caleb W. Alli; for Treasurer, Stephen Merritt; for State Engineer, John J. Hooder; for Attorney General, Walter Farrington.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.

An Ohio Lad Murders His Mother, Aunt and Cousin, and Commits Suicide.

[Cincinnati Telegram.]

The finding of the dead bodies of three women at Waynesville, Ohio, has been heretofore mentioned. The suicide of Willie Anderson, the son of Mrs. Hatte, one of the victims, news of which has just been received, completes one of the most remarkable cases of crime in the history of the State. The investigations of the Coroner and of detectives have developed the following facts: Mrs. Hatte lived in Waynesville, a small Quaker village in Warren county, with Willie Anderson, her son by a former divorced husband, a lad 18 years of age. With her were staying temporarily her sister, Mrs. Clementine Weeks, of Cincinnati, and a 12-year-old daughter of the latter. One week ago last night neighbors of the family heard screams issuing from the house, but little attention was paid to the fact. On Sunday morning the boy Willie left Waynesville for Cincinnati. On the same day persons passing the house noticed an offensive smell coming therefrom. On yesterday afternoon it got so bad that the Marshal ventured to open one of the windows, when the stench became horrible. Entering, he found the room in confusion and two dead bodies lying one on a bed and the other under. A further search revealed a third body in the back room, and all were in an advanced stage of decomposition, while the head of the one in the front room had been eaten by rats until the hair and scalp were all gone. The bodies were unrecognizable except by the garments. The mother and child lay in the front room. Mrs. Hatte, in the back room, near a lounge, was covered with a tick, and had her head mashed. The victims had evidently retired, the little girl's pallet lying on the floor near the window board, stained and tumbled, while the child lay on the bed, partially covered by clothes. The poor mother had crawled under her bed to die. Her arm was gashed with blows from the hatchet, as if it had been put up to protect her head.

Suspicion at once attached to the boy, whose conduct toward the close of the week had been noticed to be suspicious. It appeared by testimony before the Coroner that he had left the house on Tuesday night and spent the rest of the week at a hotel. He was seen, however, several times going back to the place, and the discovery of a dime novel, which had been loaned him on Saturday, lying by his mother's side shows that he must have spent some time in the house as late as Saturday night. It appears that after leaving Waynesville on Sunday morning he came to Cincinnati, where his father, Daniel R. Anderson, is living. He stayed at a hotel here over night, visited his father, and passed the time about the city. Last night he resolved to go back to the scene of the tragedy, whether with the intention of confessing the deed or of putting a bold face upon the matter is not known. He had no money, and, being unable to pay his fare, was put off the train at Plainville, a few miles out of Cincinnati. He went to a hotel, but was refused admittance, not having money to pay his lodging. Nothing more was seen of him until 1 o'clock to-day, when he was found on a coal heap near the station with a bullet through his head and his right hand grasping a thirty-two caliber pistol. He had been dead some hours. The motive of the lad for committing the terrible crime can only be surmised. He was living apparently on good terms with his mother and aunt, and was regarded in the village and in the printing office where he worked as a peaceable boy. The only thing which affords a clew to the mystery is that he acted for or with his father. Mrs. Hatte was married to Anderson when she was 16 years old. She was a pretty girl, and in her later years was regarded as a handsome woman. After the birth of the son difficulties arose and a divorce followed. Subsequently the woman was married to a Mr. Hatte, who died not long ago in an insane asylum. The theory of the detectives is that Anderson is in some way implicated in the murder, and that Mrs. Weeks and her daughter were killed because they were witnesses of the deed. The deed has created a profound sensation, and further details are eagerly awaited.

A Bee's Queer Home.

For some time Mr. Joseph H. Herron, of Alexander & Co., bankers, has noticed a small, yellow striped bee or wasp-like insect flying around his red-ink bottle, and in the morning noticed bits of worms now and then scattered about the desk. No attention was paid to the matter till one morning as he sat down to work he observed the little yellow striped insect crawl out from the belly of the telescope pen handle which he used only as a red-ink pen, and fly out of the window. After a while it came back with a small white worm, alighted on the pen rack, and then crawled into its "home" inside the pen. Subsequent observation proved that Mr. and Mrs. Yellow Jack had built their nest inside the penholder, and were rearing their little swarm within its ebon-cased cylinder. This particular pen was only used in the evenings, when balances were being made with red-ink lines, and then the inmates showed no inclination to be disturbed. What a curious place to be penned up from day to day.—Monongahela (Pa.) Republican.

Theodore Tilton.

I hear that Theodore Tilton is at home from Europe, and has definitely and deliberately "taken up his burden" again and supports Elizabeth, paying her $1,000, or something like it, every six months, which is certainly a very liberal allowance. Long ago Plymouth Church failed to send the money which it had promised to her, and which it certainly ought to have sent to succeed the first installment, and Tilton will provide for her for life. As early as as 1875, when the trial was pending, Mrs. Croly ("Jenny June"), a just-minded, true-hearted and noble woman, met Tilton at the residence of Mrs. Laura Curtis Bullard. He asked Mrs. Croly into the library for consultation on another matter, and before releasing him she pleaded with him in behalf of Elizabeth, who, in any case, was to be crushed in the controversy, and before going he solemnly promised that, however the trial might go, he would always provide for the mother of his children.—New York Cor. of the Indianapolis Journal.

Grant and the Presidency.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.

The Hon. Elihu B. Washburne, who is summering on the Eastern coast, has recently received a letter from Gen. Grant, saying that those who expect him, upon his return to the United States, to enter into a Presidential campaign will be greatly mistaken. He says that, in his Presidential term of eight years, he has received whatever honor attaches to the position, and that he does not desire to be President again, and does not conceive of any possible circumstances which could induce him to consent to be a candidate; still, while all this is true, he adds that, if it should happen at any time that the Republican party should need him for any purpose, he would not fail to respond.

LOCOMOTIVES' SPEED.

What an Old Engineer Says About Running a Mile a Minute.

[From the New York Sun.]

"How fast do you think we are traveling?" Charley Fraser, one of the oldest engineers of the New York, Lake Erie and Western railway, asked a Sun reporter, as they were standing together on the footboard of locomotive 309, rushing over the meadows toward Rutherford Park.

"I should think we were going nearly a mile a minute."

"A mile a minute!" said Fraser. "I doubt if you ever rode a mile a minute. Few locomotives have driving-wheels over five feet, and I have my doubts if a five-foot wheeler can be pushed a mile a minute. People have a very erroneous idea of the speed of railroad trains. We are not going now more then thirty-five miles an hour, and this is very fast. Few trains make this speed. The passengers in the cars would think we were going a mile a minute sure if I was to pull out the throttle so as to send her forty miles an hour. The express trains make no such time as the local trains. Where we lose is with so many stops. No man could stand on a platform car and face the wind going a mile a minute and live. The breath would actually be blown out of his body. You couldn't count the telegraph poles going a mile a minute. Talk to an old engineer of that rate being made by a passenger train, and he would laugh. I made a mile in a minute once, however. It was when I was but 18 years of age. I was an engineer then, in charge of a fine six-foot wheel locomotive. There were a lot of railroad moguls on board, and the object was to make the best time we could. They were to ring the gong when the speed was a mile a minute. I thought we were making it for some time before the bell rung. At length, on a down grade, with a full head of steam, when we were spinning along as if we were all going to destruction, and the motion of the piston going over the center could no longer be distinguished, the bell rang. We had reached the rate of a mile a minute. It was the fastest I ever rode, before or since. I tried hard to make a mile a minute on subsequent miles, but lacked it three or four seconds every time. I couldn't squeeze another mile inside of the sixty seconds. When you hear a man telling about riding in a passenger train that ran a mile a minute, don't say anything, but mentally scratch off a good allowance."

A Fight for Life with a Grizzly.

On Wednesday afternoon, a man named Williams came into San Jose, Cal., for a doctor, stating that his companion, Walter F. King, had been badly injured by a grizzly bear, in a contest that morning a in canon known as Skunk's hollow, about thirty-five miles southeast of San Jose. The men were hunting for deer. King got on a bear track, on Tuesday, and went out early the next morning. As he did not return in time, his companion went out to search for him, and found him unconscious, but still alive, with his skull fractured and his left side torn. A grizzly lay dead about six yards away. King was restored to consciousness and carried back to camp, and assistance given by a couple of men who were camping a few miles distant. King says he followed the bear's tracks to a sort of cave in the hillside, heavily bordered with chaparral, and, supposing the animal was inside, was on the watch, when a rustling of the brush caused him to turn, and he then discovered Bruin only forty feet away. He raised his rifle and fired, and the bear came for him. He shot three times, dropped his gun, and pulled his hunting knife just as the brute reached him, but, almost before he could use the knife, the bear closed on him. He cut frantically, but was struck on the head with the animal's paw, and remembered no more until carried back to camp.—San Francisco Bulletin.

The Largest Tree in the World.

There is at present on exhibition in New York a section of an immense tree which has been brought from California. The New York Herald says: "This wonderful specimen of nature's handiwork was discovered in 1874. It was growing in a grove near Tule river, Tulare county, California, about seventy-five miles from Visalia. Its top had been broken off, probably at some remote period, and when discovered it was still 240 feet high. The body of the tree where it was broken was twelve feet in diameter, and had two limbs, measuring respectively nine feet and ten feet in diameter. The trunk measured below 111 feet. This ancient monarch of the forest is called 'Old Moses,' after a mountain near which it stood. It is supposed to be 4,840 years old, and it is the largest tree that has ever been discovered. The section on exhibition is seventy-five feet in circumference, and twenty-five feet across. It is capable of holding 150 people in its interior. The interior, as it is now fitted up, is arranged like a drawing-room. A carpet has been laid down; there is a piano, sofa, tables, and chairs, with scenes from California hung around, and people move about quite freely."

Southern Centennials.

A movement is being made, in which prominent citizens of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia have united, looking to the fit observance of the important action of King mountain, near the southern boundary of the former State, Oct. 7, 1780. The victory of the Americans in that battle was really the turning point of the war. It is worth remarking that the very next success of the patriot arms of any importance was at the Cowpens, not far from King's mountain, Jan. 17, 1781, where Tarleton was badly whipped. This event ought to be celebrated, and doubtless will be when the tally of 100 years is completed. Guilford Court-House, in North Carolina, March 15, 1781, comes next in order, followed Sept. 8, of the same year, by the engagement at Eutaw Springs, which preceded the fall of Yorktown by just forty-one days. The Northern centennial has closed with the brilliant actions at Stony Point and Paulus Hook, in July, 1779. The bulk of the fighting afterward was in the South. It is the Southerners' turn now to centennialize.

Henry Clay and the Goat.

Henry Clay, when once walking home from the Capitol at Washington, saw a frightened woman on the streets vainly trying to ward off the attacks of a sportive goat. He gallantly, in spite of his years and office, seized the goat by the horns. The woman thanked him warmly and sped hurriedly on. Mr. Clay would have liked to move on also, but the goat had its own views about the interference with his innocent amusement. As soon as the woman's deliverer loosed his hold on the two horns, the animal rose majestically on his hind legs and prepared for a charge. In his own defense Mr. Clay now took the animal as before by the horns, and thus for a time they stood, while a crowd of street boys gathered about, immensely amused at the unusual spectacle of a Senator and a goat pitted one against the other in a public street. As long as Mr. Clay held the goat by the horns, all was well enough; but the moment the quadruped was free came a fresh preparation for a charge. Not a boy offered assistance; but, after awhile, one ventured to suggest, "Throw the Billy down, sir." Mr. Clay at once accepted and adopted the report of that committee, and, tripping the goat up, essayed to pass on. Before he could fairly turn away, however, the goat was up in lofty preparation for a new charge. Mr. Clay gave his enemy the floor or the pavement once more, and, keeping him there, turned to his new adviser with the question, "And what shall I do now?" "Cut and run, sir," replied the lad.

Remarkable Case of Nostalgia.

Homesickness is known to sometimes assume the form of a mental disease. An English paper states that among the recruits sent to the garrison at Montelimart was a youth named Marchise, from Correze, who, from the time of his incorporation, did not cease to weep and lament for his country home, day and night. His grief was so great as to move the pity of the officers, and they softened some of the military regulations in his favor. It was of no use. The mountains of Correze were ever before the tear-filled eyes of the unhappy conscript. One day, instead of returning to the barracks at the evening call, he betook himself to the railway, placed his neck on the rails, and was killed by the next train.

A Snake Which Walks.

While J. W. Goodloe was taking straw off George Ramsey's stack, he turned up a large snake, about five feet long, resembling a water moccasin, with the exception of having two legs about three inches long within six inches of its tail. The feet resembled those of a squirrel. It would either crawl or rear upon its legs and jump along. It would show fight. Instead of coiling up and striking like snakes generally do, it would stand upon its feet, balance itself by its tail, and jump at its enemy. The legs were covered with hair resembling that of a gray squirrel. It is said that lizards and squirrels will occupy the same nest and live together peaceably.—Madisonville (Tenn.) Times.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss.

Onion parties are popular in Tuscarora. Six young ladies take an onion with them into a room, and one of them takes a bite of it. Then a young gentleman is admitted, and, after kissing all of them, if he fails to tell which one of them bit the "ingun," then the girls are all compelled to kiss him, or he is compelled to kiss all of them, the chronicler forgets which.—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

A CHAIR in the old prison at Charlestown, Mass., bearing Jesse Pomeroy's name on its arm, was examined the other day, and, in the arm, which had been nicely hollowed out, was a stone-cutter's chisel, about ten inches long and weighing two pounds. The aperture by which this formidable weapon was introduced into the arm was covered with hard soap, and neatly stained the color of the chair.

THE VITAL ISSUE.

Federal Interference in Local Elections.

How the Veto Power Was Used to Carry Out Party Edicts.

The Doctrine of Federalism What the Republicans Are Fighting For.

Eloquent Address of Gen. A. V. Rice, Delivered at Ottawa, Ohio.

MR. PRESIDENT AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: * * * We demand a free ballot and fair elections. We insist that the army shall be kept away from the polls, and that the Federal Government shall not exercise authority over elections held within the States in any manner by Federal Supervisors or Deputy Marshals. This, to-day, is the foremost question that can be presented, not only to the people of Ohio, but of the whole country. Before it all other questions are dwarfed into insignificance, because the question of suffrage is greater in a republic than all others, and if it is in doubt the life of the Government is in peril. Its solution is transferred from the halls of Congress to the tribunal of the people. It involves personal and civil liberty, and the perpetuity of our form of Government. It was thought to have been settled a hundred years ago, at the birth of the republic, but to-day it is presented to our view in all its hideousness. This question of franchise is the dearest prerogative of a freeman. It is the foundation of our system of government. Without a free ballot there is no such thing as a fair election, and without a fair election the will of the majority cannot be lawfully expressed, and on the will of the majority is the principle on which our political fabric rests.

The Forty-fifth Congress expired on the 4th of March last without passing two of the general appropriation bills—one for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and the other for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the Government for the same time. The House of Representatives was Democratic and the Senate Republican. The seventh section of the first article of the constitution provides that "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." Accordingly the House prepared bills providing the necessary appropriations for the above purpose, and to the Army bill attached a provision repealing certain laws, providing that Federal troops should not be used to preserve the peace at the polls; and attached to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial bill a provision repealing the test-oath, and providing for impartial juries in the Federal courts, and repealing the Election law of 1871, providing for Federal Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals. The repealing provisions attached to both bills were in the interest of economy and germane to the subject-matter of the respective bills to which they were added, and consequently came within the rules of the House. The Senate amended the bills by striking out the repealing clause. Both bills were sent to conference committees, which failed to agree, the difference being as to the repealing provisions added to the bills. So the Forty-fifth Congress expired failing to make the appropriations named, and the President issued his proclamation convening the Forty-sixth Congress in extra session on the 18th of March last.

If, as the Democracy maintained, these laws sought to be repealed were odious, bad and unconstitutional, then the Republican members of the Forty-fifth Congress are responsible for the extra session, and whatever of blame there may be rests with that organization. If, on the other hand, these laws are right, just and constitutional and conducive to the well-being of the country, then the Democratic members of the Forty-fifth Congress were wrong in insisting on their repeal, and the condemnation of the extra session rests with them.

I insist that the House was right in the Forty-fifth Congress in demanding the repeal of these vicious measures, obnoxious to freedom and justice, and which, if permitted to remain in force, will be used more and more to destroy the rights of the States, to consolidate, centralize and make strong the Federal Government, and to perpetuate by force and fraud the power of the Republican party, even against the will of a great majority of the people of the country. If the Democracy was right in the position taken in the Forty-fifth Congress, then the majority in both houses of Congress in extra session were right in maintaining the same ground. The issues made up then by the extra session between the two parties as stated by the Democracy were:

1. The Federal army shall be kept from the polls.
2. Federal juries shall be impartially drawn, and the test oath repealed.
3. Federal Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals shall not interfere with elections in the States.

In order that we may understand more clearly the position of the parties in regard to these measures, let us examine the action of Congress concerning the Army bill.

In a general law, passed the latter part of the war, Feb. 20, 1865, to prevent officers of the army and navy and other persons engaged in the service from interfering in elections in the States, occur the following sections of the Revised Statutes:

"SEC. 2,002. No military or naval officer or other person engaged in the civil, military or naval service of the United States shall order, bring, keep or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls."

"SEC. 5,528. Every officer of the army and navy, or other person in the civil, military or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years."

By the first of these sections the use of troops at the polls is denounced except in two specified cases: "First, when it is necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or, second, to keep the peace at the polls." The second section prescribes penalties for the disobedience of the law. This bill was introduced into Congress by its author, Senator Powell, of Kentucky, but without the words, "or to keep the peace at the polls," in either section—its object being to prevent troops from surrounding the polls and excluding citizens from voting, as was the case in many instances in the fall of 1864. But the Republican party, then as now unwilling to yield the supervision of elections by the military power through their President, caused the amendment, "or to keep the peace at the polls," to be added to the sections above referred to, and thus it is that this dangerous law, inimical to freedom and civil liberty, now disgraces our statutebooks.

The sixth section of the first appropriation bill of the extra session, for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, alters the above sections 2,002 and 5,528 of the Revised Statutes by striking out from both sections the words "or to keep the peace at the polls." This is all. So that hereafter the army cannot be used at elections for any purpose, except to repel the armed enemies of the United States. The Army Appropriation bill having passed both houses of Congress as above, it was sent to the President. On the 27th day of April he returned it to the House of Representatives with his objections to its approval. In this message he reviews the existing laws on the subject and says "that there is no necessity for the enactment of section 6 of the bill before me to prevent military interference at elections." He adds: "But that part of section 6 of this bill which is significant, and virtually important, is the clause which, if adopted, will deprive the civil authorities of the United States of all power to keep the peace at Congressional elections." He states further in this message:

"The States may employ both military and civil power to keep the peace and to enforce the laws at State elections. It is now proposed to deny to the United States even the necessary civil authority to protect the national elections. No sufficient reason has been given for this discrimination in favor of the State and against the national authority. If well-founded objections exist against the present national election laws, all good citizens should unite in their amendment. It is the right and duty of the National Government to enact and enforce laws which will secure free and fair Congressional elections."

In order to meet the President's views of the non-interference with the civil authorities, and still to prevent the use of the troops at the polls, Congress next proposed the following bill, using the spirit, and almost the words, of the constitution in framing it:

"An act to prohibit military interference at elections.

"WHEREAS, The presence of troops at the polls is contrary to the spirit of the institutions and the traditions of our people and tends to destroy the freedom of elections; therefore

"Be it enacted, etc., That it shall not be lawful to bring to or employ at any place where a general or special election is being held in a State any part of the army or navy of the United States, unless such force be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to enforce section 4, article 4 of the constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, on application of the Legislature or the Executive of the State where such force is to be used, and so much of all laws as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed."

The bill it was confidently hoped would meet his approval, as there was nothing in it to "deprive the civil authorities of the United States of all" (or any) "power to keep the peace at Congressional elections." But the President, on the 12th day of May, at the demand of his party, again interposed his veto. This last bill embraced this single idea: That in time of peace the presence of troops at the polls, being contrary to the spirit of our institutions and the traditions of our people, shall not be permitted. In his veto message the President uses the following language:

"Under the sweeping terms of the bill the National Government is effectually shut out from the exercise of the right and from the discharge of the imperative duty to use its whole Executive power whenever and wherever required for the enforcement of its laws at the places and times when and where its elections are held. The employment of its organized armed forces for any such purpose would be an offense against the law unless called for by, and therefore upon permission of, the authorities of the State in which the occasion arises. What is this but the substitution of the discretion of the State Governments for the discretion of the Government of the United States as to the performance of its own duties? In my judgment this is an abandonment of its obligations by the National Government; a subordination of national authority and an intrusion of State supervision over national duties which amounts, in spirit and tendency, to State supremacy."

Here is the doctrine of Federalism revived. The debasement of States and the consolidation of power in a strong centralized Government. As Mr. Foster puts it, "National authority shall be supreme; the State must be subservient thereto."

Failing in the two measures above recited to prevent by law the use of the troops at the polls, Congress, in passing the Army Appropriation bill, refused to appropriate any money for the "army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State." Still the law remains to disgrace the statute book. It is rendered inoperative by withholding supplies as above stated. It is for the people to say whether or not Congress did right.

But, fellow-citizens, what arguments were given by the Republicans for their fierce opposition to these measures, and what reasons for these extraordinary vetoes of the President? It is painfully true that during that long parliamentary struggle in Congress, the severest, perhaps, this country ever knew, which lasted for more than three months, in answer to the strong and logical argument put forth by the Democratic side in favor of civil liberty, constitutional law, the right of persons, the administration of justice and free government—citing the words of the fathers of the constitution of the United States, the laws of the States and country, together with the decisions of the Supreme Court in support of their positions, most frequently the answer came in bitter invective, in taunting denunciation, in the cry of revolution, Confederate Brigadiers, secession, solid South, etc. The constitution was disregarded, and the decision of courts unheeded. The great struggle was to retain these odious laws for party advancement; and failing in argument they sought to distract the minds of the people by appealing to their passions rather than their judgments, and by bringing up any question, no matter how irrelevant. Fellow-citizens, this will not do. The people of the country are not to be trifled with. Questions of too grave importance are at stake. Shall the free ballot be preserved? Shall civil liberty under the law be maintained? Shall the State Governments in all their rights be supported? Shall the General Government in all its constitutional powers be perpetuated? These are the questions that are addressed to the intelligence of the country, and are involved in the issues before us. If you would have them determined in the affirmative, these laws dangerous to the liberties of the people must be repealed.

Troops at the polls in republican America! An army of overseers and spies to control elections and arrest innocent men without warrant, all for partisan purposes, and paid out of the Federal treasury! Revolution to ask that these laws inimical to personal and civil liberty should be stricken from our statutes! How inconsistent with our ideas of free institutions. It has been the law in monarchical Great Britain for 200 years that troops should not be nearer than two miles of any polling place on the day of election. Shall the American citizen be less free than the subject of Her Majesty's kingdom? When it comes to this, that a great party in the country, on whatever pretense, can advocate such unrepublican and such undemocratic doctrines, then it may well give us pause. But when a President of the whole people so far forgets the functions of his high office as to lend himself for partisan ends to thwart the will of a great majority of the people of the country, may it not give us cause for alarm? Does he remember March 4th, 1877, when, having been raised to his high estate by such questionable means, having failed to receive a majority of the popular vote by more than 250,000, and having taken his place under the quiet, yet pronounced protest of a great majority of the people, including a very large number in his own party; having taken his oath of office, standing on the east front of the Capitol, and speaking to 45,000,000 of people, he proclaimed the sentiment that "he serves his party best who serves his country best." Did that sentiment occur to him, I ask, during the last session of Congress, when he put forth veto after veto of the most partisan character?

In view of the sentiments promulgated in these extraordinary vetoes, which were probably shared by all the members of the Cabinet, I propose to submit the views of some of them touching the unwarranted use of the army. Secretary Sherman, in 1856, then a member of the House of Representatives, proposed an amendment to the Army Appropriation bill as follows: "Provided, nevertheless, that no part of the military force of the United States herein provided for shall be employed in aid of the enforcement of the laws," referring to the laws of the Kansas Legislature. Thus at that time the Secretary is on record against the use of the bayonet.

In a speech Hon. Carl Schurz, now a member of Hayes' Cabinet, said, in his place in the Senate:

"United States soldiers with fixed bayonets decided the case against them, and took them out of the legislative halls by force. * * I can not, therefore, escape from the deliberate conviction—a conviction conscientiously formed—that the deed done on the 4th of January, in the State House of Louisiana, by the military forces of the United States, constitutes a gross and manifest violation of the constitution and laws of this republic. * * If this can be done in Louisiana, and if such things be sustained by Congress, how long will it be before it can be done in Massachusetts or Ohio?

"He who, in place like ours, fails to sustain, or even justifies a blow at the fundamental laws of the land, makes himself the accomplice of those who strike at the liberties of the people."

In speaking on the same subject before the Cooper Institute indignation meeting, Mr. Evarts also entered his memorable protest against the military usurpation in Louisiana in the following language:

"When men vote, and when their chosen officers meet, and when, without violence and without demonstration of insurrection, they undertake to conduct the affairs of their political Government, no soldier can interfere.

"There are two very distinct, firm lines of limitation which, observed, will protect the machinery of the Government of the people to-day—that is that the sole intervention of the Federal power within the State authority shall be to suppress violence, and that their office after that shall not assume to go further, unless when invited to go further by the supreme authority of the State.

"What is the use to give the purse and the sword to the House of Commons if the King or the President, by military power, can determine what shall be the constitution of the House of Commons or the House of Congress? And that is what they fought for in England. * * And for this reason the people of the United States are justified in assuming that the supreme civil power shall dominate over the military, and that no merging of them or interference with them shall be permitted."

Another member of Mr. Hayes' Cabinet, Mr. McCrary, the Secretary of War, also strongly condemns the use of the army. In his book on elections (page 315) he says:

"An armed force in the neighborhood of the polls is almost of necessity a menace to the voters and an interference with their freedom and independence, and if such armed force be in the hands of, or under the control of, partisan friends of any particular candidate, or set of candidates, the probability of improper influence becomes still stronger."

Postmaster General Key, while a member of the Senate from Tennessee, and but a few weeks before he accepted a place in the Cabinet, not only denounced the unwarranted and dangerous use of the soldiers at the elections held in the Southern States in the fall of 1876, but in his place in the Senate, speaking of the testimony of Eliza Pinkston, and while arraigning John Sherman's connection with affairs in Louisiana, used this language: "And on this testimony, the falsehood of which is so apparent on its face, a State is to be disfranchised, and a President whom the people never elected is to be placed in office." The President, in his inaugural message, said: "Only a local Government, which recognizes inviolate the rights of all, is a true self-government." This language certainly condemns the use of troops at the polls. But if the President is not condemned by his own words, I submit that he is by the voice of his Cabinet. And have they not convicted one another? No greater crime against the constitution can be conceived of than their words portray, and yet they are all to-day upholding the same outrageous principle and defending it, a principle which their patriotic and burning words so eloquently denounced but a few years ago.

The President, in his first veto message, argues that the right of the House to grant supplies upon condition of the redress of grievances is a power that ought not to be exercised, and that it works a denial to the Executive of his share of legislative power. Section 1, article 1, of the constitution says: "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." The executive power is vested in the President, but he has no right to participate in legislation. He has the veto power, which is given him to prevent party or ill-advised legislation, but not to defeat the will of the people as the late vetoes of the President have done. But the right of the House to attach conditions to Appropriation bills cannot be denied. Section 7, article 1 of the constitution says: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

Madison, the father of the constitution, in commenting on the powers of the House, thus defines them in the Federalist:

"The House of Representatives can not only refuse, but they alone can propose, the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing as far as it seemed to have wished all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the Government. This power over the purse may in fact be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which the constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure."

It was with this view that the constitution provided that moneyed bills should originate in the House of Representatives. And it was with a view of giving Congress complete control over the army, which is the creature of Congress, and not of the President, that the constitution allows no appropriations for the army under any circumstances, for more than two years at a time. The power of the House to grant supplies, with or without conditions, cannot be questioned.

I pass now to the consideration of the Election laws providing for Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals. These laws are to be found in the Revised Statutes of the United States, sections 2,011 to 2,031 inclusive. They are too long to quote, but, to bring the subject more clearly before you, I will briefly state their import. These laws were passed February 28, 1871. They never existed before, and, up to that time, it was conceded that the States were the only proper authority to control elections and protect their citizens. These vicious measures were passed when all branches of the Government were in the hands of the Republican party, and undoubtedly for the purpose of perpetuating that party in power.

Under these laws, on application of two citizens, in cities of 20,000 and upward, or of ten citizens in any county in any Congressional district, the Judges of the Circuit Courts of the United States are authorized to appoint two Supervisors of Elections for each voting precinct in the United States; each to be paid $5 per day for his services.

These Supervisors are "authorized and required to attend at all times and places for holding elections for Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and for counting the votes cast at such election; to challenge any vote offered by any person whose legal qualifications the Supervisors, or either of them, may doubt," and to further take control, personally scrutinize and inspect the manner of voting, the ballot-boxes, the poll-boxes, tallies, etc., and, in the absence of the Marshal or Deputy Marshal, to make arrests, without process, of any one they believe, or pretend to believe, to have violated in any way the Election law. Thus you see at any election for member of Congress this law places the voters and ballot-boxes in the elections in the States for all offices, county and State, in the hands of the Federal Government. Could anything be more degrading and humiliating? Are not our local officers and judges of elections fit and competent to count and canvass the votes they receive? Have the people become slaves, that they must be yoked to Federal overseers? No, no! The monstrous provisions of this bad law will only have to be made known, when the people will indignantly rise in their might and demand its repeal.

But, bad and reprehensible as are these Supervisors of Elections, the Deputy Marshals and their functions are infinitely worse. These laws further authorize, in cities of 20,000 or upwards, on the written application of two citizens, the appointment by the United States Marshal for the district of any number of Deputy Marshals, to hold their positions for not over ten days for each election, and receive a compensation of $5 per day, or $50 for the ten days. Supervisors are limited to two to for each voting precinct. An unlimited number of Deputy Marshals may be appointed. These Marshals and Deputy Marshals "shall keep the peace, and support and protect the Supervisors of Elections in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at the polls, prevent fraudulent voting or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and either before or after voting arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or commits an offense against the laws of the United States." Could laws be framed more unrepublican? You will mark that the Supervisors are appointed by the United States courts and are limited. The Deputy Marshals are appointed by the Marshal of the district, and are unlimited. All are paid $5 a day for their services—the money to be taken out of the Federal treasury. This law is the grossest abuse of constitutional and personal liberty. It is worse than a disgrace on the pages of our statute books—it is a crime to let it remain there. These Deputy Marshals are always partisans, most frequently bad characters, taken from the lowest classes of society, and sometimes criminals. They do nothing toward keeping the peace, but are generally unknown persons working for the election of the party in whose employ they are. The evil would be just as glaring if the Democratic party was in Federal power. Can any one conceive of a more monstrous wrong against the liberty of the citizen than subjecting him, no matter how respectable, even the officers of the election, to arrest and imprisonment, without warrant or process, on the suspicion, belief or pretended belief of one of these low Deputy Marshals, drawn from the lowest purlieus of society; to be hurried off to jail, or to a United States Commissioner for hearing, and thereby suffer humiliation and disgrace, to say nothing of the loss of his vote! And all for the pretense of securing the purity of elections and to guarantee the right to vote. Guarantee the right to vote! They do nothing of the kind, but the evil is that of just the opposite—prevents decent and reputable citizens from voting. They do not facilitate the right of suffrage, but suppress the elective franchise. The Supervisors remain around the polls, and, by challenge or otherwise, impede the elector's progress to the ballot-box, while the Marshals protect the Supervisors in their work, arresting and bearing off the voter, if the shallowest pretext can be found for so doing, the voter uniformly being of the opposite politics to the officers. The Marshals and Supervisors being of the party in power, the law resolves itself into a machine for partisan purposes, paid out of the common treasury, from funds collected from both parties. This has been the practical working of it. It has borne most heavily on naturalized citizens, and its passage was meant as a blow to them, although at the time the law was enacted it was claimed to be for the ostensible purpose of protecting the freedmen in the South from the Ku-Klux and White Leaguers. But it was shown by Judge Thurman, in his speech in the Senate on the 15th of May last, that these infamous enactments had their origin in the New York Union League Club, and their purpose was to control the elections in the cities of the North by using the Supervisors and Marshals as a body of electioneerers in the interest of the Republican party, and to be paid out of the public treasury. The history of the elections in Northern cities since, notably in 1876 and 1878, and the report of the investigating committees, in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and lately in Cincinnati, show how well they have served their purpose.

In 1876 there was paid to these Supervisors and Deputy Marshals out of the Federal treasury $255,921.27; of this amount the single State of New York received $156,021.89, while all the Southern States received but $48,719.86; and yet it was claimed this law was passed to protect the poor freedmen in the South against the Ku-Klux outrages. I tell you that the intent of the law was and its use is to elect Republican members of Congress from the North and while doing that to interfere with all local and State tickets or elections in our State; for all elections are held on the same day, and the name of the Congressional candidate is printed on the same ticket with candidates for other offices, both State and county.

The Federal expenditures in payment of Supervisors and Deputy Marshals in 1878 amounted to $222,714.24; of this all the Southern States received $18,241.06, leaving for the North $204,473.18. This large sum was mainly expended in the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago. In Cincinnati, for the first time I believe, there was expended $2,078.23.

Now, these vast sums are used for party purposes and in the most corrupt manner. And I firmly believe that, if not prohibited by law, the Republican party, in order to carry the next House of Representatives and the country in 1880, will spend millions of the people's money under these laws. In their desperation to retain power they will do so: and this is the reason of their great opposition to the repeal of these measures. On this law and the use of the army they have staked all. Take away from the Republican party the power of sword and purse, and the day of its ascendency will soon be ended.

Congress sought to repeal these odious Election laws, and first attached the repealing measure to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, afterward to a bill making appropriations for certain judicial expenses of the Government, but the President interposed his veto to both bills.

Finally, Congress having made all legitimate appropriations for the ensuing year, except for United States Marshals and their general Deputies, a bill for this purpose was prepared providing, however, that no part of the money appropriated should be used to pay Supervisors and Deputy Marshals to attend elections. For the fifth time the President exercised the veto power, and again he thwarted the will of the majority of Congress by returning this bill to the House without his approval. Then Congress adjourned.

In the President's message of May 29, vetoing the first bill to which was attached the clause repealing the Election laws, he uses the following language:

"If this bill is approved, only the shadow of the authority of the United States at the national elections will remain—the substance will be gone."

Again:

"The passage of this bill has been urged upon the ground that the election of members of Congress is a matter which concerns the States alone; that these elections should be controlled exclusively by the States; that there are and can be no such elections as national elections; and that the existing law of the United States regulating Congressional elections is without warrant in the constitution."

And again:

"The constitutional authority to regulate the Congressional elections, which belongs to the Government of the United States, and which it is necessary to exert to secure the right to vote to every citizen possessing the requisite qualifications, ought to be enforced by appropriate legislation."

The President in this last message, as he did in others, discusses the subject of "national elections," arguing that the civil and military authority of the Government should be retained and used to control and protect them, and consequently these bad laws permitting the use of troops at the polls, and Supervisors and Deputy Marshals to control elections should not be repealed. If he were right in his premises his conclusions would not necessarily follow. But we deny the proposition and assert that under the law there is no such thing as a national election. The Federal Government has no voters of its own creation. Every man has a right to vote because of State laws and under State authority, not national. Suffrage is under the control of States. The Federal Government creates no voters. How, then, if there are no national voters, neither can be, can there be national elections? Can you have elections without voters—the first element of an election? Certainly not. It is claimed that the Fifteenth amendment to the constitution gives additional rights to the citizens of the United States. It only provides that the right of citizens of the United States shall not be abridged on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The right of suffrage is not given. The decisions of the Supreme Court are conclusive in this regard. In the United States vs. Cruikshank, 2 Otto, 555, the Supreme Court reaffirms the doctrine in these words:

"In Minor vs. Happersett, 21 Wall., 178, we decided that the constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon anyone, and that the United States have no voters of their own creation in the States. In the United States vs. Reese, et al., supra, page 214, we hold that the Fifteenth amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right, which is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. From this it appears that the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship, but that exemption from discrimination in the exercise of that right on account of race, etc., is. The right to vote in the States comes from the States, but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the constitution of the United States, but the last has been."

Then, as the constitution has not conferred the right of suffrage on anyone, there are no national voters, there can be no national elections, as the President claims, to be controlled by national authority.

No one will deny that the General Government is one of delegated powers, defined and limited by the constitution, while the great mass of powers are reserved to local authorities—the States and the people. So jealous were the fathers of the interests of the people, that in 1791, but two years after the adoption of the constitution, the Tenth amendment was ratified, which provides:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited to it by the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

We have a dual system of government, preserving to the States and people all their reserved rights, and perpetuating the General Government in all its constitutional powers. In this grand system of Government, bequeathed to us by the intelligence, patriotism and foresight of the fathers, is the genius of our republic. It is fashioned after no form of government which has gone before it in the world's history. It is its own model. In preserving and guarding this dual system of Government in its primal purity and simplicity, leaving each State to control its own local affairs in its own way, subject to the constitution of the United States, and all yielding obedience to the General Government in all its delegated powers, lies the security and perpetuity of our institutions.

But, my fellow-citizens, if you would thus preserve this temple of civil liberty, this dual Government, you must see to it that these pernicious laws are repealed. I have been thus minute in giving the history of these measures during the late session in order that the attitude of the two parties in regard to them might be fully understood. Both laws remain to-day to disgrace the statutes of our country. They are rendered inoperative for the coming year, because no appropriations are made to carry them into effect. Shall they remain on the statutes of the land, or shall they be taken off? The appeal is made to the people of the country. The verdict in my mind cannot be a doubtful one. Was the Democratic party right in demanding their repeal?

Why were they so strenuously opposed by the opposition, and why these extraordinary vetoes? Because it is the determined policy of the leaders of the Republican party to effect a change in the character of the Government. Its every step is toward centralization and the destruction of the States. Every veto of the President enunciates the doctrine of "national elections," and that national authority must be sustained by the use of the army to "preserve the peace at the polls," and Federal Supervisors and Deputy Marshals to control elections. It is a most dangerous and pernicious doctrine, and tends to produce consolidation, and the absorption by Federal power of that which properly belongs to local rule, and finally become destructive to our form of government. And this is the tendency of the Republican party.

History repeats itself. In 1800 Mr. Jefferson said of the Federal party: "Giving a little to-day and a little to-morrow; advancing the noiseless steps like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped from the States, and all consolidated into one. To this I am opposed, because, when all Governments, domestic and foreign, in little as in great things, shall be drawn to Washington as the center of all power, it will render powerless the checks provided of one Government on the other, and will become as venal and oppressive as the Government from which we separated."

We have the same spirit to contend with to-day, and coming, I fear, in a more determined manner. Let these extraordinary powers of the sword and purse remain in the hands of the President, and it will only be necessary for some bold, bad man in executive authority to seize the power they confer and overthrow our form of Government. There are those in this country who believe in a strong, centralized Government—in classes, in class legislation, in short, in a class aristocracy of wealth. These are not idle words. The tendency of the Republican party is in that direction, and many are already educated in that belief. There may be no fear to-day, and there is none that the President will unwarrantedly exercise the tremendous power claimed. But who knows what may happen in twenty years? The President commands the army. His Marshals create Deputy Marshals, who oversee elections and make arrests without process or warrant. The army can be commanded to promote such arrests. Tell me these are not dangerous powers! And these the President will not surrender. Whether these powers shall be taken from the Executive is the foremost issue of 1879 and 1880.

The Republican party to-day declare in substance that the right of self-government is extinguished in the State; that national authority is supreme; that the prerogative of a free vote, which is the distinguishing glory of the American citizenship, and which lies at the foundation of our republican form of Government, can be exercised only in the presence of Federal bayonets or Supervisors of Election; that the sword and the purse shall be used to control elections for partisan purposes, and that our dual system of Government shall gradually give place to a strong, centralized power controlled from Washington.

On the other hand, the Democracy declare for the right of local self-government; that the reserved rights of the States and the people must be preserved; that the constitutional powers of the General Government must be perpetuated; that on voting day, of all others, the citizen is a sovereign, and that he shall have the right of casting his ballot untrammeled and unawed, either by the Federal soldier or the Federal Marshal.

In this contest the interest of the people and the cause of freedom must be preserved. We go forward, appealing to the patriotism of the country. Let us cherish the constitution and keep its provisions inviolate. Let us go back to the teachings of the fathers, and let it not be said that the war of the Revolution for the establishment of civil liberty and constitutional government, and the later great war for the preservation of the same, were fought in vain.

The Compass.

The secret of the steadiness of a large compass is the longness of its vibrational period, and a small card would have the same steadiness as a large one if its vibrational period were the same. How little this is known is illustrated by the methods of procuring steadiness in common use. In some (as in the Admiralty "J" card, provided for use in stormy weather) there is a swelling in the middle of each of the steel needles to make them heavier; in others heavy brass weights are attached to the compass cards as near the center as may be, being sometimes, for instance, in the form of a small brass ring of about an inch and a half in diameter. Another method, scarcely less scientific, is to blunt the bearing-point by grinding it, or striking it with a hammer, as has not infrequently been done, to render the compass "less lively," or to fill the cup with brick dust, as is reported by the Liverpool Compass Committee to have been done at sea by a Captain who was surprised to find afterward that his compass could not be trusted within a couple of points. All these methods are founded on the idea that friction on the bearing-point is the cure for unsteadiness. In reality friction introduces a peculiar unsteadiness of a very serious kind, and is very ineffective in remedying the proper unsteadiness of which something is essential and inevitable in a compass on board a ship rolling in a heavy sea and steering on any other course than due east or due west. —Sir W. Thompson, in Good Words.

SMALL girl, very harshly, to a doll in a toy carriage, dolly having tumbled from the seat: "Sit right up, you horrid old thing. Don't you dare to do that again, or I'll whip you." Seeing a passer, who had approached unobserved, she modified her voice and continued in dulcet tones: "Now, sit up straight, darling, and be careful not to fall and hurt yourself."

State Items.

THE State receives $104,138.26 from liquor licenses.

GEORGE W. LEACH, acting as a detective, lately arrested James Clark, at Sullivan, for a supposed outrage. The man attempted to escape, when Leach fired three times. The first shot killed an innocent spectator, Henry Fry, Leach's best friend. The second passed harmlessly between two young ladies walking arm-in-arm. The third shot hit Clark in the back. Clark and Fry will die.

THE large barn and training stables belonging to James Wilson & Son, of Flat Rock farm, four miles south of Rushville, have been destroyed by fire, together with eleven head of horses, all fast ones and very valuable. The following are the names of the horses: Vesta, Sid Maury, Georgiana, Lucy Matlock, Hannah D., Western Sportsman, William L., Bay Sallie (pacer), Holbrook (stallion), Reaper and Donald Smith. The value of the stock will exceed $20,000, and the total loss will exceed $30,000.

MISS PERKINS, of Ebondale, Iowa, used her artistic skill in drawing caricatures of gawky Mr. Filer, who had offended her at a ball. These pictures were displayed in the window of a store, to the great irritation of Mr. Filer. He was perplexed as to a means of retaliation, but finally decided to whip Miss Perkins' brother, and did it so thoroughly that the sufferer was for a week confined to a bed.

A GOOD joke is told at the expense of a Jamaica Plains (Mass.) sexton who procured the communion wine for his church. When he made his last purchase he also bought some whisky for himself. The two demijohns got mixed, and on the following Sunday the communicants received whisky instead of wine, some of the sisters being considerably choked by the strong liquid.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, SEP. 11, 1879.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

Carlotta Patti was married last week.

The young King of Spain, (Alfonso) will soon marry the Archduchess Marie, of Austria.

Alexander H. Stevens received $35,000 royalty, on his history of "The war between the states."

Read the speech of Gen. Rice, democratic candidate for Lieut. Gov. of Ohio. See third page of this paper.

St. Louis has been selected as the permanent headquarters of the Mississippi river improvement commission.

Gen. Grant is expected to arrive in San Francisco about the 21st of this month. Then he will be expected to answer for himself concerning the presidency.

In the second number of the Reflector, published at Milford and Syracuse, we find a "notice of dissolution," Mr. Kitson withdrawing, and Mr. Miles assuming entire control as publisher, editor and manager. Success to Bro. Miles.

The republican party has discovered all at once, that John Sherman's immense wealth came from running a sash and blind factory in Mansfield, Ohio, out of which he realized a profit of $5,000 per annum for six years. Likely story isn't it? Sherman's income (including stealings) amounts to more in one week, now, than he realized from his one-horse factory in a year.

Newville and Butler are somewhat excited over the proposed extension of the Celina, Van Wert and State Line narrow-guage railroad. The Hicksville News of last week, says:

> "The president of the company, Dr. C. McCarven, of Van Wert, recently wrote that the required aid had been secured to construct the road through Paulding county to the Defiance county line, which would bring it within about two miles of Hicksville, thence to Newville and Butler, Ind., from which point future developments will determine its course."

Another proposition is, to change the route from Antwerp, Ohio, striking Spencerville, thence to Auburn, and probably continue northwest through Corunna and Fairfield Center.

We again call the attention of the democratic central committee of DeKalb county, to the importance of a change of the manner of making nominations for county offices. We think there are good and sufficient reasons why such a change should be made. So far as we have been able to learn, the proposition has been favorably received by the democratic voters of the county, many of whom favor making nominations at the April election, next year. If the primary election is to be held that early, (and there is good argument produced in favor of it) then we submit that the preliminary steps should be taken soon. It seems to us that there ought to be a meeting of the committee some time during next month.

> The people of Indiana feel like urging their claim for Hendricks in the national democratic convention, and the truly live party organs are already in the field with their arguments.—Decatur Union.

A few democratic papers in the state, that pretend to be "party organs," are NOT in the field with their arguments; on the other hand, while they petend to feel anxious for the success of Mr. Hendricks, they are afraid to say that Mr. Tilden in not the man they want. We say they are AFRAID, and repeat it with emphasis. Too cowardly to champion the cause of the man they know is entitled to their influence. And why? Simply because they are afraid Mr. Hendricks will not be successful in convention, and they will not be in position to demand favors at the hand of the incoming democratic administration.

> There is a growing feeling of impatience among the big states of the west and south in regard to the provision of the constitution which guarantees to every state equal representation in the senate. Such a feeling is to be deprecated, but the recent developments in Rhode Island are not calculated to soothe it.—New York Sun.

Yes, "the big states of the west and south," are growing impatient with the east, regarding things of more importance than representation in the United States senate. The people of the west and south are tired of being taxed to support eastern bondholders. The consumers of the west and south are not willing to longer remain victims of a high protective tariff for the benefit of the east. In short the west and south propose to have the old machine that has been nearly worn out by the republican party, overhauled and repaired, in 1880.

True Economy.

Here we have for our biscuit, cakes, etc., Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, which chemists and physicians have decided to be pure and healthful, and yet thousands of pounds of adulterated baking powder are used annually, simply because they are cheaper. Consider the health first—this is true economy.

It is probable that the republicans have just saved themselves in Maine. Returns are not all in yet, but enough is known, to lead us to believe that the stalwarts under the leadership of Blaine have a majority in both branches of the legislature, though they may not have given their candidate for governor a majority of the vote. We do not remember the time when Maine was not considered a radical stronghold, though the combined vote of the democrats and greenbackers in 1878, was about thirteen thousand larger that the republican vote. The contest in Maine this year is said to be the hardest and most hotly contested political battle ever known in America; and with all the efforts of Blaine and other republican leaders, their party barely escaped defeat. A correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from Maine a few days before the election, said.

> It is a tremendous battle that they have plunged into here. Even the major general commanding the republican forces did not when he began it, anticipate what he had got to go through. Gen. Joe Hawley, who has canvassed in almost every state in the union told me that he had never seen the like of it. Every man in Maine seems to be a soldier on one side or the other. Here, within four days of the election, there are set to be held nearly four hundred political meetings. Stump speakers are thicker than commercial travellers at the hotels. They come in hoarse, dusty, and hollow-eyed. They have ridden by cars, stage, and team thirty forty, a hundred miles; have spoken in the rain and the fiercest heat of the summer that has sweltered people for the last few days. I met Alexander Troup, of Connecticut, up in a rural town with an unpronounceable name. He has spoken sixty-nine times in three weeks, and his voice grated and rattled like a paralytic. He was just going up into the woods to talk to some greenback lumbermen. Eugene Hale has argued more than a hundred times, and his voice in ordinary conversation sounds like the tone emitted by the one string of a Chinese fiddle. The people turn out to hear everybody who speaks. The other evening in Lewiston, there was a meeting in the city hall, and you couldn't get in unless you went early, and this was a democratic meeting, where greenbackism was not to be discussed. The main business street in the town was deserted as I went through it, and crossed to Auburn, over the river. Here Gen. Hawley was speaking to more people than could possibly get into the hall. Women, children, old men tottering on their sticks, and young fellows, pack these meetings. Clam bakes in Waldo County, barbecues in Kennebeck, mass meetings in the woods in Androscoggin, protracted meetings in Penobscot, with thousands of people present, happen day after day. They even began soon after daybreak the other day up in a little place called Livermore, speaking in a pine grove, and kept it up all day long, and the people did not seem to tire. Here Blaine spoke three hours, answered a hundred and sixty telegrams, settled three or four local quarrels, arranged for two or three nominations, "saw" several men, fixed the free passes on the railroads, and superintended the bean dinner that was furnished. The bean dinner is one of Blaine's specialties in this canvas. The beans seem to be inexpensive and to satisfy the Maine villager so far as the free dinner announcement is concerned. It is safe to say that there have been fully a hundred thousand bean dinners served at the order of the chairman of the state republican committee.

Dentistry at Waterloo.

Dr. Johnston, dentist at Waterloo, will fill teeth with the ordinary silver filling for 50 cents; with combination of gold and silver, 75 cents; gold filling as low as one dollar. New teeth on best rubber plate—best, $12.00; those generally used, $10.00; cheaper, $9.00. The doctor has no student and therefore does all the work himself, and makes this reduction so that every one will have their teeth put in good order. 36tf.

The Last Call.

It is desireable, in view of the enormous gathering of ex-soldiers and citizens at Auburn the 19th and 20th, that complete arrangements be perfected on Saturday night next, and to this end it is urged that every citizen of Auburn interested in the success of the re-union, meet the soldiers of Auburn and vicinity at their headquarters on Saturday night. Do not neglect this, but come out and aid in the work to be accomplished.

—The following obituary notice was handed in too late for publication in our last issue:

OBITUARY.

Mrs. F. E. Davenport died at St. Charles, Mich., on Monday of consumption, aged 33 years 5 months and 27 days. Her remains were brought to this city on Tuesday and was burried on the afternoon of the following day. Funeral services were held at the house. Rev. H. J. Norris, officiating. Mrs. Davenport was a true christian, a devoted wife and affectionate mother, and the many warm friends with which she had surrounded herself, will regret to hear of her untimely death. In hopes that she might be benefitted by a change of climate, her husband attended her to Otsego Lake, in northern Michigan, where for a time, she seemed to improve and felt much encouraged, but soon after Mr. Davenport returned he received a dispatch stating that she was worse and desired to return home. He at once started for Ostego Lake where he found her, as he supposed at the point of death, but she revived, and stating that she had "come back," and desired to make one last request, which was that dead or alive, she should start for home in the morning. This promise was made her by her husband and carried out, but as she reached St. Charles she said she could not live to reach her home and children, which she longed to see before she died, and was taken off the train, expiring in a few minutes thereafter. Here some prominent Masons and their wives took charge of the corpse and did everything that friendly hands could do until her remains were placed aboard the cars. Mr. Davenport and two children, one a babe, have the sympathy of our people in this their hour of bereavement.

NORTHERN INDIANA

SOLDIERS'

RE-UNION!

AT

Auburn, Indiana,

SEPTEMBER 19 and 20.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF CHICKAMAUGA.

The survivors of the Grand Union Army without any regard to army corps, rank, organization or state lines, are cordially invited to be present and assist in the exercises.

The welcome address by the

will be responded to by prominent army officers, a number of whom will be present.

The Fourth Ohio Light Artilery

from Toledo, CAPT. O. J. KOPKINS commanding, will furnish the heavy music. Brass bands, drum corps, glee clubs, companies of old veterans, militia companies, camps, forts, artillery practice, parades, etc., etc.

Soldiers are requested to bring guns and assist in the

SHAM BATTLE.

Citizens are also invited to be in attendance. Come with music and the stars and stripes, and help the veterans commemorate the camp, bivouac, march and the battle-field. Let there be a grand and patriotic outpouring of the people in honor of a preserved Union.

Newville.

—Wilson Handly and Joseph Rhodes have opened a new butcher shop.

—Sam'l Volkert and wife recently made a transfer of real estate to Wm. Countryman, in Newville township.

—The store of S. E. Rhodes & Son has been removed from the corner to the brick building formerly occupied by Dwight Moody.

—The child of Wm. Davis, whose eye was performed upon recently, is doing as well as could be expected.

—A delicate but successful operation was performed last Thursday by Dr. Coombs, of Hicksville, assisted by Drs. Bowman and Lawrence of Newville, on the eye of Mrs. Thomas Nelson, and we understand that she is getting along nicely.
ALPHA.

No Doubts.

Juding from the universal satisfaction that Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes have already given, there is no doubt but that as high a reputation for charming perfumes will soon be acquired by the firm of Steele & Price as they have already gained for their culinary preparations. The delicate fragrance of Dr. Price's Perfumes make them very popular.

WORTH OF CLOTHING!

Which was manufactured for southern trade, is now offered at

Sixty Cents on the Dollar.

We bought these goods of a large New York house, which manufactures for, and depends principally on southern trade. Owing to the fever raging so furiously south, they could neither sell nor ship their goods, and were obliged, therefore, to dispose of their entire stock to northern dealers at a big sacrifice.

We took advantage of this rare chance by buying only for cash, and therefore are enabled to sell these entire new goods at 65 cents on the dollar.

DRY-GOODS, CLOTHING, HATS AND CAPS

EVER BROUGHT TO DeKALB COUNTY.

$12,000.00

Worth of new dry-goods, clothing, hats, caps, notions and novelties, which will be sold without any regard to the advance in the east, and a great many cheaper than ever before.

Knowing that all cotton and woolen goods must advance this fall, owing to the scarcity of raw material, we concluded that it would pay our customers as well as ourselves to buy our goods before any advance, and we are happy to say that we are now enabled to sell goods cheaper than ever before. We would advise all our friends and customers that are in need of any goods to buy them soon; by so doing they will certainly save money.

DRY-GOODS DEPARTMENT.

We have everything in both staple and fancy dry-goods, prints, muslins, denims, ducks, flannels, jeans and tickings, in endless variety, and at prices below all competition. We have the best of dress-goods, alpacas, cashmeres, dusters and waterproofs in large quantities and the best selections—in fact the largest stock to select from ever brought to this county.

CLOTHING: CLOTHING.

In this department we have taken particular pains, and can say we have the best and only well selected stock of clothing in the county.

$6,000 (SIX THOUSAND) $6,000

Worth of clothing to be sold cheaper than the same kind of goods have ever been sold in Northern Indiana. Suits from $4.00 up to the finest trecots and imported worsteds. Over coats from $3.00 up to the very best of all wool beaver. We guarantee as good a fit as any tailor can make, or no sale.

HATS AND CAPS!

In this department we have everything pertaining to a first class hat store, from the cheapest wool to the very finest fur hats—as good an assortment as has ever been offered in DeKalb county, and at prices below all competition.

GROCERIES! GROCERIES!

We are now selling choice family groceries as cheap as they can be bought in any house in Northern Indiana. Best coffee A sugar 9c., best coffee C sugar 8c.; good rio coffee 12c.; splendid rio coffee 16c.; best rio coffee 18c.; best black pepper 20c. per lb.; best Carolina rice 3 pounds for 25c.; the very best roasted coffees, also all kinds of canned fruits, dried fruits, prunes, raisins, apples, as low as the same can be bought anywhere in the state.

Thanking the public for past favors, and asking the continuance of the same, we ask of the people of DeKalb and surrounding counties to come and examine our goods and get prices, and we are sure they will be convinced that they can save 20 percent, by buying their dry-goods, clothing, hats and caps, groceries and notions of —Two "wheels of (mis)fortune" were whirling on the streets show-day, and many were the nickels dropped there, though a few of the fortunate sports carried away more than they came with. Some were "gloriously heeled."

—Rev. John Rettig, pastor of the German Reformed church, is building a new house on to his wing on Jackson street; that is the addition is larger than the original. He has made a great improvement in that property of late.

—The junction is an ill fated spot; it isn't safe even to take a buggy down there without a horse in it, for it will upset and smash things sure. Bill Edgington, the 7th street barber, and Theo. Berger, of Sam. Pommert's can tell you all about it.

—The following parties left Tuesday morning for Angola, to attend the soldiers' re-union on that day: Nick Ensley, H. C. Peterson, John McClellan, Alex. Kinmont, R. H. Weamer, Jos. McKay, Geo. Gordon and M. L. Duck. They report a good time.

—A new and substantial side-walk has been laid in front of the property owned by the Methodist church, just east of the COURIER office, and we hope to hear no more violations of the 4th commandment from unfortunate foot-passengers in the dead hours of the night.

—The gentleman who visits the grove at the school-house must quit doing so, or exchange his white hat for one the collar of which does not betray the wearer.—Rome City Times.

A white hat with a "collar"! That fellow must be a darling.

—List of unclaimed letters in the post office at Auburn, Ind. Sept. 6th 1879. Sarah F. Boyer, Eli Bishop, Elisabeth Boils, J. C. Bidwell, Gery Clark, Nancy Casky, Levi Cohn, John B. Davis, Wm. Friend, David Rinsbold, A. K. Wilson.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

The directors of the Ætna Fire Insurance company met last week and resolved to retire the company from business, giving as a reason, that the insurance business had been so dull of late that it was deemed best to discontinue. All the risks of the company were reinsured in the Home Insurance company. The Ætna was chartered in 1824, and has been doing business ever since.

—This time the cigars are on Frank Davenport. He ran out in the street Tuesday to stop C. C. Shaffer's delivery wagon and horse, which he thought was running away, when Elza, who was covered up in the wagon under a baby's rocking-chair, yelled out "what the deuce are you doing?" Frank collapsed.

—E. S. Underhill, of Fort Wayne, was in town yesterday, looking up a location for marble shops. He is as yet undecided between this place and Hicksville, Ohio, but owing to the sure opening here, and the superior facilities for shipping, he leans in this direction, and it is to be hoped he will come. We think there is no reason why such a venture should not prove a success.

—We hear with sincere regret of another death amongst the pioneers of this county—that of Henry Scott, of Concord township, who died last Saturday at the advanced age of 84 years. He was a pensioner of the war of 1812, and has resided in DeKalb county thirty years or more. Thus the neighborhood loses a useful man, and the democracy a faithful adherent.

—C. K. Baxter, of the Waterloo Press, was moving along our highways Monday, on business connected with the new militia company at his village. The company foots up some sixty odd members, and is anxious to come down here to the city and re-une with the soldiers, one week from to-morrow. We hope they'll come.

—Last Monday morning Cook Ford turned over his entire depot hack business to Frank Culbertson, horses, two hacks, mail contracts and all, and the latter will hereafter run the same to all three depots, with Byron Raizler swinging to the ribbons over the Saginaw team. Cook retained the open hack that ran to the Eel-River depot, however, for livery purposes.

—The new school superintendent, Miss Lida A. Powers, has taken hold of her charge like one who had "been there before," though we understand this is her first experience in that particular capacity; and, notwithstanding the responsibility thrown upon her—having taken the place of ex-Superintendent M. Seiler—she seems equal to it, and the schools are flourishing nicely.

—J. M. Lawrence, of Newville, an old-time democrat and a staunch friend of the COURIER, comes to the scratch every now and then right handsomely, in the way of sending in new subscriptions, and we would that some others of our subscribers would manifest as lively an interest and aid us in our efforts to furnish all with a first-class newspaper.

—Our ever smiling young attorney, C. J. Coats, leaves on the 29th of this month for Indianapolis, where he will attend a course of lectures at the "Central Law School." He was some time ago admitted to the bar at this place, but Cas. believes in being thoroughly prepared before entering the arena, and we think he is right, though his friends will regret his six months' absence.

—That meanest man living has turned up again, and Angola claims the medal. Here is what the Herald says:

> We do not like to admit it, but it is said to be a fact that the meanest man in existance lives in Angola. He drinks 79 cents worth of whiskey a day and stands his poor washerwoman off for her hard earned wages, giving as a reason that he had larger debts that he intended to pay first. Shame upon such a pusillanimous wretch.

—Guy Plumb is rather extravagant in his purchases of the staff of life. He bought a dollar's worth of bread tickets at Ed. Baker's, last Saturday, and gave the lady attending a ten-dollar bill; she laid the change on the show-case, but as there's nothing mean about Guy, he went away and left it. The fellow who happened in next evidently thought it was his, for he is $8.50 ahead and Guy is about the same amount out. Now, who's got it?

—Our push-along-ative conductor of the boot up-side down informs us that as a result of having 5,000 neat handbills printed, a few days since, and distributed at the Concord picnic, he has sold several hundred dollars' worth of boots and shoes; he also says that men came into the store who said they had never been there before, but were attracted by those circulars. Another forcible illustration of the fruits of informing people who you are, where you are, and what you sell.

—A broken up specimen of what used to be a man, giving his name as Williams, and claiming to have once taught a flourishing writing-school here, was incarcerated in the hog-pound while drunk, last Thursday night, by some of Auburn's young "smart alecks." It was a cold, damp night, and he would probably have died from exposure—not having sense enough to get over the fence—had not Sheriff Leas heard him and released him at about 10 o'clock.

—W. J. Austin thinks his wife perpetrated the best joke of the season on him, a day or two ago, and he is frank enough to get it off himself. He went home and found a yard full of Italians (more or less—probably less) to whom she had distributed all of W. J's old clothes, shirts, etc., in return for furnishing some sweet strains of heavenly music on a harp and violin, as they preferred linen to money; and now Mr. A. says he is a bankrupt in "toggery," having had nothing but old clothes to begin with. Such are some of the harassing features of the domestic relations.

—Rev. H. J. Norris and lady were the victims of a complete surprise last Tuesday evening. A large number of ladies of the M. E. church and others, took advantage of the absence of Mr. Norris from the parsonage, and congregated there with loads of groceries and provisions of all kinds, as well as several packages containing money. We are authorized to return the heartfelt thanks of the recipients.

—Another grand excursion to Cincinnati, over the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad, will take place next Wednesday, Sept. 17th, and the fare has been placed at the low figures of $3 for the round trip from Auburn and the junction. Special train will leave here at 9:25 in the morning, arriving in Cincinnati at 5:30 same evening, and return tickets will be good on any regular train up to and including Sept. 23d—six days. This is a fine opportunity to see the exposition and elegant new buildings.

—The Waterloo Press, it strikes us, is a trifle inconsistent in talking about this championship base-ball business. It claims in one item that "Waterloo has the best and Auburn the poorest nine in the county;" yet in another item in the same column, it designates its own club as the "muffers" and "scrubs." However, Auburn has a nine just good enough to give Waterloo's "champions" the worst dose they ever received, making more runs in one inning than the "champions made in the entire game—18 to 54! Nice score, isn't it?

—For some information concerning the accidental death of Alexander McClish, of Fairfield township, which occurred Saturday last, we are indebted to Bro. Baxter, of the Press. It seems that Mr. McClish, who was a well-known and respected farmer in that vicinity, had just crossed through a field adjoining his farm, having a gun on his shoulder, and was climbing a fence, when the gun was discharged in some unknown manner, emptying the load into his head, from the effect of which he died before a physician arrived. He leaves a wife and two children.

—The "Mosher Mansion," on Ensley avenue, is liable to meet the same sad fate that befell the "pike-hold." It is being seriously complained of by the people in that neighborhood.

BURSTING THE BALLS.

In Which Sport Lute Wright Gets the Cake.

Last Monday afternoon several of Auburn's sporting boys—"old boys," we mean, but boys nevertheless—assembled at the open space opposite the Jackson depot, where they went to have some fun in the way of shooting glass balls thrown from a trap—not for the state championship, or a corner lot, but—simply for fun, and they had it. The shooting distance was thirty-five yards, angling range, and each man had ten shots alternately, as will be seen by the following score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
J. H. Ford,	0	0	1	1	0	1	1	1	0	0	5
F. D Ryan	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	1	0	0	2
J. C. Somers	0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	2
Bab. Lewis	0	0	0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	2
A. Swineford	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	1
G. C Ralston	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	1	1	1	4
Lute Wright	0	1	1	1	1	1	0	1	0	0	6

From this it appears that some very poor shooting was done, but we must add for the credit of these whose score is dotted with "goose-eggs," that only those shots which bursted the balls were called hits; and, as many of the little globes were perforated, but not broken, those unfortunates thus are afforded a knot-hole through which to crawl to save their reputation. Lute Wright, as the score indicates, was "cock 'o the walk," having made six out of ten, which Dr. Ford was only half a neck behind with five hits chalked up in his favor. After the fun shown by the score each man shot five times consecutively, and in this Frank Ryan pocketed the prizes, making three out of five. Considerable sport was made of it by the outsiders, who indulged in such remarks as "You don't shoot quick enough, Swineford," "Look out there, Ralston, or Somers 'll perforate you," etc. Swineford couldn't account for his wild shooting, for he said, he "aimed right every time," and Coop. Ralston said he'd "be durned if he didn't hit 'em all." Attorney Lockwood undertook to set the trap once and came near getting blown up, as "the blamed thing went off half cocked." After the regular business of the meeting was concluded, and just before the adjournment, Dr. Ford made some excellent "line shots," hitting eight balls in as many consecutive shots. Just at this point Brother Weamer, of the Republican, said something about "trying his hand at it," but we didn't tarry to see the result. Nixey. We shouldered our little pencil and note-book and took a giraffe step for the rear end of the depot, where we jumped into the hack and came to town on a dead run. We heard Weamer's gun go off, but as yet have received no record of the slain.

Attention Soldiers.

Members of the Union soldiers association and all other ex-soldiers in Auburn and vicinity are requested to meet at headquarters on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock sharp for the purpose of drill preparatory for exercises at the re-union on the 19th and 20th. Let no one be absent who is able to be present.

By order of president Union soldiers' association.

The Cook Not to Blame.

Many nice delicacies are spoiled by the abominable flavorings used in them, and generally it is attributed to the cook. Now if Dr. Price's Fine Flavorings are used, nice dishes will not be spoiled, as they always impart their delicate fresh fruit flavor in whatever they may be used.

◆

For Sale or Exchange.

The Best—The Garland.

W. H. Kiblinger & Co. have spared no time or expense in looking after and securing a first-class base-heating coal stove. After examining a number of different makes, they have decided to handle the well-known and popular "Garland." We take the liberty to name the following parties for reference who are now using the Garland base-heating coal stove: Dr. Ford, First National Bank, Mr. Berry, D. D. Snyder, T. J. Cuppy, G. C. Ralston, M. L. Duck, G. H. Yesbera, C. P. Houser, W. L. Penfield, S. W. Ralston, Guy Plum, Jas. Anderson, Dr. Swartz, I. N. Cool, A. Lewis, Nicholas Ensley, and many others whom we cannot now recall. To any who are contemplating the purchase of a coal stove, we have only to say that it is A No. 1. Come and examine it at W. H. Kiblinger & Co's.

RATHER ROMANTIC.

The select boarding-school, of which Miss Minerva Patterson was the head, was a very ambitious establishment, indeed.

Only first-class pupils were admitted; first-class teachers only were employed.

To this seminary, Mrs. Adolphus White, a wealthy widow, had, after anxious waiting for a vacancy, at last sent her daughter Helen, a young girl of 17, whose face and form were remarkably pretty, but who was by no means a girl of great good sense.

"It is settled at last, Charles," said Mrs. White to her bachelor brother, as they sat at lunch together. "Helen is with Miss Patterson, and I am so relieved. She will form her mind and manners, and make her the sort of a girl I should bring out. I shan't do this too early. I was married myself at her age, and I know that one loses youth by being in society too young."

And Mrs. White, who had no wish to settle into the elderly matron as yet, softly sipped her chocolate.

"You don't really mean to say that you have sent Helen away from home, sister?" said Charles. "A mother should never let her daughter live apart from her, if she can avoid it. Send her to Miss Minerva all day, if you choose, but have her at home at night."

"It's quite the thing among sensible people to patronize boarding schools," said Mrs. White, "and Miss Minerva is a lady of excellent family and highly accomplished."

"Of course," said Uncle Charles, "and it's all right for girls who have no homes or mothers; but take any set of young things you may select and put them together for awhile, and they'll hatch out mischief. And girls are all ripe for it now-a-days, I can tell you, in any of our towns."

"But by such discipline as Miss Minerva's," said Mrs. White, "Miss Minerva's pupils could not get into mischief."

And she arose from the table.

"Oh!" said Charles. "Well, if you're sure of that, I might as well be silent."

Meanwhile, the first day of Helen's attendance at Miss Minerva's school drew to a close. Supper was over. The musical exercises came to an end.

The evening worship was over.

The whole school marched off in battalions, with an inch of wax candle in a flat candle-stick for each room.

Gas was forbidden, and indeed turned off from the dormitories.

And at last Helen, with four young ladies who belonged to her room, was fairly shut into her nightly resting-place.

Then came a metamorphosis which astonished the new-comer.

The elegance of demeanor which had characterized her companions in the rooms below dropped off like so many masks.

One, the tallest and most stately, wedged her scissors into the door in such a manner as to form a temporary bolt, and stopped up the keyhole with a bit of wadding.

The next produced a long wax candle from her pocket, and, having lit it, flourished it aloft, with a cry of:

"Who cares for Old Ramrod's regulations now?"

And a third rushed to a corner of the room, turned up the carpet, and, with an exclamation of "Here are two, one for you and one for me," held up two letters.

The fourth girl, with a little ecstatic shriek, caught her prize and tore it open.

And the young lady of the wax-candle thus addressed Miss Helen White:

"I don't suppose you'll go and tell old Patterson. We shall have to keep your secrets after awhile. Biddy, the chamber-maid, is our postman. She'll get all your love letters for you, and bring them up on the sly."

"I haven't any love-letters. I have no lover," said Helen, blushing.

"Your ma is strict, I suppose," said the other. "Well, you'll have plenty before you've been here six months. It's the nicest school I ever went to. Old Ramrod—that's Miss Patterson, you know—can't see an inch beyond her nose, and we flirt splendidly, Miss Collins and all. Miss Collins is an assistant when we promenade. Our first class has the name of being regular witches, all through the town. We know all the fellows."

Helen listened with new emotions rising in her breast.

She began to feel delighted with the idea of school.

She had thought it a dull routine of geography and history, music and mathematics; but flirtations, love-letters, and a knowledge of all the fellows brightened the vista amazingly.

She listened to the epistles, which her companions did not hesitate to read aloud.

She even helped one of the girls to answer hers, and she retired by the light of the long wax candle, to read herself asleep over a piece of literature by some French author.

She awoke the next morning to find the young lady in the next bed up and dressed, and to hear her declare that she had been "flirting out of the window for an hour with the splendidest fellow."

So dawned a new life upon Helen White, a life her mother little dreamed of.

Weeks passed.

She also flirted; she also received love-letters from strangers; she also subscribed to the library, and read bad French books by the score.

She was naturally a silly girl, and had no strong principle to sustain her.

Guided by her companions, and the easy prey of circumstances, she behaved most foolishly, and forgot all the old ideas of propriety which had once been her guide.

To one of her admirers, who signed himself "Carlos," she wrote as a girl ought scarcely to write to her betrothed lover.

And she forgot how guilty she would once have felt had she kept a secret from her mother.

Mrs. White was delighted with Helen's progress.

Miss Minerva gave her a volume, "The Guide to Young Ladies," as a prize for fine deportment, and nobody had any suspicion that her head was full of nonsense and her pockets full of love-letters from an utter stranger, to whom she had told all the particulars of her life, and the full extent of her fortune, and to whom she had given vows of eternal constancy; not exactly in black and white, for black ink was voted vulgar at Miss Minerva's, but in purple.

At last the climax arrived.

Something befell her that had not befallen any of her room-mates as yet.

Carlos offered his hand and heart, and begged her to elope with him.

She read the letter aloud to Emma, Rose, Grace and Maria, and, all in a flutter, begged their advice on the matter.

"He says he's a Prince," said Helen, with a glow on her cheeks, "and, you know, of course, I'll be a Princess if I marry him; and, of course, he shall invite you to our castle. Last night I met him—I coaxed Biddy to watch and let me in—and he was all wrapped up in a cloak; but he was splendid. He has a foreign accent and a black mustache."

"Oh," cried Maria, "I love a foreign accent."

"And I've promised to run away with him to-night," said Helen. "He says ma will be sure to forgive us; and he's awfully rich. And, oh, how I do feel, girls!"

"Of course you do. But it will be so nice," said Maria.

"They never have bridesmaids on an elopement," said Rose; "oh, how I'd like to go."

And while Mrs. White, sitting with a dear friend, who also had grown daughters, but who kept them at home, congratulated herself on dear Helen being safe at school, this affectionate daughter, from whom she had just received a charming epistle, corrected by Miss Minerva and touched up by the writing-master, was packing her small bundle in preparation for flight, aided and abetted by the four young ladies to whose example she owed so much.

At 12 of the night she slipped downstairs with her little parcel in her hand. All in the house were asleep save the four friends in the first-class dormitory. Bridget had left the key in the lock. It was dangerous.

If she were not the first up in the morning it might lose her her place.

Out into the moonlight hurried the young girl.

The white beams showed her pretty, foolish face pallid as that of a ghost.

She had never set foot in the street alone at such an hour before.

A terror seized her—a sense of her own wickedness.

Perhaps she would have turned back, but that a figure in a cloak came at that moment from the shadow of a porch and seized her by the arm.

"Ah, my own Helen!" said a voice.

It was Carlos—Prince Carlos—her own Prince.

Romance came to her aid.

She forgot her fears, and entered the carriage waiting round the corner with him.

Away they drove, how far Helen did not know.

Suddenly the arm that encircled her was withdrawn, and a voice said:

"Look here, young woman. No noise. I'll choke you if you try to scream. You have your watch and jewelry with you, I hope, and the money you promised to coax from your mother. Hand them over."

"Oh, it is not my Carlos!" cried Helen. "Oh, what shall I do?"

"It is Carlos—at least it is the man you've been corresponding with," said the voice under the hat. "But I'm no Prince and no husband for you. Hand over the money and the jewelry and I'll not hurt you. I haven't much fancy for a bread-and-butter miss, and an idiot who would run off with a man she didn't know, to boot. Hurry; I'm waiting!"

Poor Helen! She felt as though the sudden end of the world would be a comfort.

She was ready to die of shame and mortification.

But she gave her purse, her watch and all her small possessions to the robber, who with a loud laugh gathered them up and jumped out of the carriage, calling to the driver:

"Take that girl back to the school, John, will you?"

The driver did as he was told.

Miss Helen White stood on the door-step of Miss Minerva's seminary again, but not alone; with her stood the driver, in a furious rage.

He demanded pay. She had no money.

He swore he would be paid, and rang the bell and battered the door until not only the servants, but Miss Minerva and four and twenty scholars appeared in the hall and on the stairway in all sorts of impromptu drapery; and, having decided that it was neither fire nor murder, opened the door to behold Miss White and her angry companion.

"Pay me," cried this worthy. "You, missus, that drives the machine, pay me. Here's a gent hires me to carry off his gal, and, when they falls out and parts, I loses my fare. Pay me!"

But Miss Minerva, recognizing her scholar, darted forward, rescued her, slammed the door in the man's face, ordered the servants to guard it, and asked for explanations.

The explanation ended in a swoon on the part of Miss Minerva, and hysterics on that of Helen White.

The next morning Charles stood before his sister with a peculiar expression on his face.

In her lap she held a packet of letters which she had perused.

"Can it be that my daughter would write and receive such things as these?" she said.

"My dear sister," said Charles, "all is as I have stated, and it is well that, on the part of the gentleman, it was all a piece of acting. Helen was in earnest, and has no idea that her letters were from her uncle."

"That he, in a mustache and cloak, eloped with her, and wound up the affair by robbing her; or that the driver was his old friend Wenter, who had daughters of his own, and who promised to wind up the affair in the most dreadful manner possible.

"You must, however, promise to send for Helen to-morrow, and to keep the truth of this affair a secret, so that it may be a life-long lesson to her."

Mrs. White listened.

She was angry, but she had sense enough to do as her brother desired.

And it was not until Helen was married that she learned that her love affair, elopement and desertion were all carried out by her Uncle Charles, who knew what the result of a boarding-school flirtation might be, and cured his niece by giving her a bitter lesson of all disposition to imprudent conduct in foolish sentimentality.

Oatmeal Water as a Beverage.

On board steamships the firemen employed about the furnaces are sometimes greatly exhausted by heat. Their profuse perspiration renders a large quantity of water necessary to supply the waste. The ingestion of clear water under these circumstances appears to answer very imperfectly the wants of the system. It seems to pass through the circulation to the skin, percolate as through a sieve, and flow over the surface of the body in streams. A large drink of cold, or even cool water, under these circumstances, on an empty stomach, is very dangerous and liable to produce death with almost the suddenness of an electric shock. Great practical advantage has been obtained by mixing farinaceous substances, especially oatmeal, with the water to be used by the men employed at this kind of labor. The oatmeal is mixed in the proportion of three or four ounces to the gallon of water, and used according to inclination by the firemen and coal-heavers. It might be difficult to determine why oatmeal, for this purpose, should be better than corn meal, or buckwheat, or rye, wheat, millet, etc., but the firemen themselves seem to think it has the effect of making them as strong as horses. We may safely allow something for this kind of prejudice, which we know to be very potent among the influences on health and disease. The peculiar aroma of the oats is probably associated with a pleasant degree of stimulation of the alimentary mucous surfaces in such a way as to promote its complete digestion. It seems to fill the blood-vessels without increasing the amount of cutaneous exhalations. The men occasionally try acid, saccharine and alcoholic drinks as substitutes for the oats, but always with unsatisfactory results, except that they find molasses and water better than clear water, and they who are disposed to insist on the excellence of rum and whisky, under all circumstances, petition for these, and experience after each ingestion a momentary relief, followed by additional profuseness of perspiration and additional exhaustion.—Dr. Joseph Wilson.

Mental Cures of Physical Disease.

The American young lady who believed that she had got a bristle of her tooth-brush fixed in her throat got worse and worse, though there was no bristle there, till she was persuaded by her doctor's ruse that he had extracted it, after which she recovered as rapidly. On the other hand, there are very well attested cases, though none are quoted by this writer, in which mere fright, directed to the expected suffering of a diseased part, has caused a powerful but salutary revolution in the condition of the diseased organ. Dr. Carpenter—if we mistake not—in his "Mental Physiology," gives a case of the complete absorption of some very dangerous tumor in a very few hours, under the influence of mere terror at the prospect of the pain of the surgical operation—it was before the days of chloroform—which had been determined on to remove it. Here was a case where attention—and attention of no hopeful kind—produced the very opposite effect to that which, in the American young lady's case, attention of the despondent kind, had produced—the very same effect, indeed, which a remission of attention, when accompanied by the hope of cure, had in that case produced.—London Spectator.

REMARKABLE ENGINEERING.

What an Army Officer Is Doing for the Washington Monument—A New Foundation Being Placed Under It.

A Washington correspondent writes: A remarkable piece of engineering that should attract attention as one of the most wonderful achievements ever known to engineering science is in progress here, under the direction of Lieut. Col. Casey, of the army. It is the removal of the clay foundation of the Washington monument, and the substitution of an artificial foundation of concrete. A similar problem of equal magnitude was never attempted before, and the attention of French and German engineers has been drawn to the work, which has hitherto been entirely unnoticed in this country.

The Washington monument, which has remained unfinished since the commencement of the war, when work upon it was stopped, now stands, a solid shaft of marble and masonry, 150 feet high, weighing 71,000,000 pounds. It stands upon a base of clay, about 22 feet thick, which rests upon a deep strata of gravel. When work on the monument was resumed some time more than a year ago, it was demonstrated that the foundation was not capable of sustaining the weight it must bear when the shaft was built up to the proposed height of 525 feet, which would then weigh about 210,000,000 pounds—the highest and heaviest column in the world. So Col. Casey, who had the work in charge, was compelled to study out some method of replacing the under-structure with some more substantial substance than clay and gravel. As the base of the monument is only 55 feet square the difficulties of the undertaking will be readily appreciated, and a commission of experts pronounced it impossible, recommending either the removal of the monument entirely until a new base could be substituted or an alteration of the original design, so that the pressure could be extended over a larger surface than 55 square feet. But Col. Casey determined upon what was then considered an audacious feat, of removing the clay foundation a little at a time, and substituting an entirely new foundation.

The plan he adopted was to tunnel the monument a little at a time and fill the tunnels with beams of hydraulic concrete, which when hardened is more tenacious than granite. The work began about a year ago, and is now more than half completed, showing the plan to be safe and practicable. The first tunnel was dug under the monument to its center, twenty-four feet deep and four feet wide. When the excavation was completed, it was shown by delicate plumb-lines that were hung inside the monument that the monument had settled one-third of an inch toward the trench. By working night and day, Col. Casey had this trench filled with a shaft of concrete, rammed and hardened—four feet wide by twenty-four deep, and extending sixty feet beyond the edge of the base of the monument, so that when finished the concrete base will be 175 feet square. When the shaft was completed it was found that the monument had ceased to settle, not only, but had returned very nearly to its equilibrium. Then another trench was dug on the opposite side, similar in size to the first one. The monument then settled about one-eighth of an inch in that direction, but when this trench was filled with concrete it went back again, and the plumb-line hung perpendicular. Other trenches were dug and filled with artificial stone, at right angles to the first, with similar changes in the position of the monument, so that after six months' work the structure had a partial base of stone under it in the form of a cross.

At present the work is about half done, and is going on so rapidly that its completion is expected by the 1st of January, when the neglected old monument will have under it a foundation that will sustain 10,000,000 pounds. The construction of the beams is a matter of interest. The trenches in the clay are filled with a mass of broken blue-stone, sea sand, pebbles, and Portland cement, mixed by machinery of the most complete and perfect character, and, when placed in trenches, rammed with enormous iron beams swung on swivels. When completed the foundation will have cost nearly $100,000.

A Savage Duel.

James Dobbins and Michael Burns were neighbors, living in the Kansas river bottom, six and a half miles from Kansas City, Mo. Four years ago Dobbins got married, and at the time Burns lent him $80. The sum was never paid back, and on this account there was bad feeling between the men. Burns visited the city one day recently, and Dobbins was engaged to work on the road. On his way home Burns passed the place where Dobbins and others were working. The men did not speak. To go to his house Dobbins had to pass by that of Burns. When Dobbins arrived in front of Burns' house he found the latter standing there, revolver in hand. Burns said: "Jim, I want that money you owe me." Dobbins made a reply which incensed Burns. Burns showed anger and Dobbins said: "Throw down that revolver and I can whip you." Burns threw the revolver on the ground by his side, when Dobbins said: "You have the drop on me now, but if you wait till I come back I will be heeled to meet you." Dobbins then drove his team into his yard, and, leaving them unhitched, ran into his house, and, getting two revolvers, started towards Burns' place. Burns was sitting on the door-step. Without saying a word, and presenting a revolver in each hand, Dobbins opened fire on him. The balls took effect in the side of the house. Burns then ran into the house, got his pistol and rushed at Dobbins. The men advanced to within two feet of each other before a shot was fired. Dobbins fired first, the shot hitting Burns on the right fore-arm. Burns retaliated, and sent two bullets through Dobbins' chest. Dobbins, in return, shot Burns through the abdomen. Burns' last shot struck Dobbins under the left ear, and passed clear through his head. Both men, now in dying agony, clinched each other. They fell to the ground, Dobbins being underneath. Burns beat Dobbins over the head and face with the butt of his revolver. Then, thinking that Dobbins was dead, he started to leave him. With dying energy Dobbins turned, and in a moment had thrown Burns under. One of the neighbors, a Mrs. Kalfton, appeared at this time and pulled Dobbins off Burns. Two young men came up, and the men were separated. Burns was taken to his house, and the two young men started to take Dobbins to his house. They had hardly gone five yards before Dobbins sank down on his knees and died in the woods. He died without saying a word. Burns lingered until the next morning, when he died.

Ancient Memphis.

A traveler in the East gives the following interesting account of his visit to the remains of ancient Memphis, founded by the first known Egyptian King—Menes: "But what did we see of this wonderful city? Only a succession of mounds," says the writer, "a few pieces of ancient statues, and, far down below the present level, with its face in the center, a magnificent figure of a woman in Egyptian dress, with noble features and finely-modeled form, almost perfect, although probably 4,000 years old. As a matter of course, we lingered and looked as long as we thought sentiment required, then pushed on to the remarkable ruins of the cemetery, which was connected with this city, or I should say, magnificent city of the dead—to the very confines of which Memphis extended. It is now but a little more than a vast mountain of sand, being just on the precincts of the African desert. There are so many tombs everywhere peeping out, and so large a number of pyramids—eighty-one in all—scattered about, that the interest is keenly excited at once, and at every step some new development take place. When we remembered that old Memphis was seventeen miles in circuit, and was occupied with villas, gardens, and sacred groves, we can realize more than in any other way the wondrousness of the scene which remains to us to-day. After passing the largest pyramid, considered the oldest monument of antiquity in the world, we descended rapidly to the one little house of refuge standing in the midst of the sand, dismounted and lunched—thus securing a good resting season, and after about an hour started out with our guides to the two special points of interest here, the mausoleum of the sacred bull, and the tomb of the priest Tih, the latter built about 3050 B. C. These were uncovered in 1860 by the Egyptian authorities, who, first noticing mounds in the sand bearing the appearance of heads, appointed a commission, and, after a labor of sixteen months, an avenue of sphinxes, 600 feet long, was laid open, the pedestals or statues being perfect in every instance. This was paved, and led to the mausoleum of the Sacred Bull, where these objects of worship had been entombed for several dynasties. There were found three separate chambers of temples, the latest where dates were found—650 B. C.—being the only one now open. One cannot help feeling interested in every detail of such a place. There were the long avenues, broad and high, hewn in the solid rock, while all along the sides are deep recesses where are now standing the sarcophagi of the bulls. Twenty-five erfect ones stand in one archive, each one weighing forty tons, and many of them fully engraved with figures, representing life, death and immortality. But it is no more wonderful to see them where they are than to understand how they were put there. One which was presented to the French had been abandoned when moved some little distance, as too heavy to be taken away. They are thirteen feet long, eleven feet high, and seven feet deep, and, although many of the covers have been removed, nothing was ever found in any of them. Above the sarcophagi are inscriptions relating to their burial, and in whose reign they died. Many tablets were found upon the walls, which were placed there as offerings to the god; these, however, were all allowed to be taken to Paris."

The Finest Diamonds in the World.

Western sovereigns are not the possessors of the finest diamonds in the world, for the Rajahs of Matan, Borneo, and the Shah of Persia have the largest hitherto known. The one belonging to the Emperor of the Monguls weighed 279 carats (about four grains each), and was valued at 12,000,000 francs. The famous Orloff, the property of the Russian crown, is one of the most remarkable diamonds, on account of the well-known circumstances under which it was brought to Europe. The large stone belonging to the Emperor of Brasil, which weighs 1,730 carats, would be worth many millions were not its brilliancy diminished by certain defects. The Sultan of Nizam's diamond weighs 400 carats; that of the Emperor of Austria 29 grains; and that of the King of Portugal 25¼ grains. The famous Koh-i-noor, or Mountain of Light, is the property of the Queen of England. The one which adorned the tiara of Pius IX., and was bequeathed by him to his successor, Leo XIII., is one of the finest stones known. It came from the treasury of the Duke of Burgundy, seized at Gransom. It was sold after the battle to a Jew of Berne, for 3 crowns, then successively for 5,000 and 6,000 ducats, and afterward purchased for 14,000 by Luigi Sforza, from whom it passed into the hands of Pope Julius II. for 20,000 ducats. Every one knows that the "Regent," of the weight of 136 carats, is the finest of the diamonds belonging to the French regalia. Connoisseurs consider it to be worth 12,000,000 francs.—Galignani's Messenger.

A MONODY.

BY DR. LA MOILLE.

Hark! in the tree-tops
The night winds are sighing,
Wailing their dirges,
For summer is dying;
She is dying alone;
Hear the grieved night-ghosts moan!
For the queen of the year is dying.

Dost thou remember
The beautiful maiden
Following winter,
With roses o'erladen?
Like an old man beguiled
By the mirth of a child,
So was winter charmed by this maiden.

Thus, in her beauty
She grew, till the fairest,
Kindest and dearest;
And then she, the rarest
Of all maidens, was seen
As the year's darling queen,
With a beauty that is the rarest.

Here, with her smiling,
Harvests were springing
Up from the furrow,
And here birds were singing.
Well might nature rejoice
With a unisoned voice,
While this maiden's praise she was singing.

But in this midnight,
With nothing to cheer it,
Midnight so mournful,
Now cometh a spirit;
Oh! his form is like death,
And we hold our hushed breath,
While he comes for her parting spirit.

Soon through the darkness
Her soul will be flying;
Wail miserere!
For summer is dying.
She is dying alone;
Hear the weeping ghosts moan!
For the queen of the year is dying.

A Ten-Cent Conscience.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury received a postage-stamp to the amount of 10 cents from an unknown person, who is evidently conscience-stricken. The stamp was forwarded in an envelope postmarked Philadelphia, with a statement to the effect that the sender many years ago while at school had succeeded in erasing the cancellation mark from one or two stamps which had been used, and had used them again. Now that he knows such action was wrong, he desires to repay the Government the amount "justly due," and, to make it "dead sure," inclosed stamps to the amount of 10 cents, which were covered into the conscience fund.—Washington Star.

SABBATH READING.

The Loom of Life.

All day, all night, I can hear the jar
Of the loom of life, and near and far
It thrills with its deep and muffled sound,
As tireless the wheels go always round.

Busily, ceaselessly goes the loom,
In the light of day and the midnight's gloom;
The wheels are turning early and late,
And the woof is wound in the warp of Fate.

Click, clack! there's a thread of love woven in;
Click, clack! another of wrong and sin!
What a checkered thing this life will be,
When we see it unrolled in eternity!

Time, with a face like mystery,
And hands as busy as hands can be,
Sits at the loom with arms outspread,
To catch in its meshes each glancing thread.

When shall this wonderful web be done?
In a thousand years, perhaps, or one,
Or to-morrow. Who knoweth? Not you or I;
But the wheels turn on and the shuttles fly.

Ah, sad-eyed weavers, the years are slow,
But each one is nearer the end, I know:
And some day the last thread shall be woven in;
God grant it be love instead of sin.

Are we spinners of wool in this life-web—say?
Do we furnish the weaver a thread a day?
It were better, then, oh my friends, to spin
A beautiful thread than a thread of sin.

The Blessings of the Bible.

One of the greatest blessings which the Bible takes with it everywhere is a day once a week when the hard worker can rest and forget that he is a beast of burden, and remember that he is a man. Addison wrote of the Sabbath, that it was "a good institution, because it made poor people wash and dress themselves respectably once a week." The Sabbath was made for man—for man, not as shopkeeper, plowman, statesman, but as a rational, moral, religious creature. A great authoress in one of our London dailies not long since pointed out the contrast between the Christian and the Moslem in this respect. He attends the mosque on his Sabbath Friday, devout, perhaps, as the Christian, but always in his work-a-day dress—there is no change of attire, no general rest from labor. No; the poor Arab, toiling in his one sordid garment, is never able to say to himself; "I am a man, and not a beast of burden;" but wherever this book goes, it seems to hush the machineries of every-day life into silence. Man everywhere throws aside the tools and the soiled garments, by means of which he earns his daily bread; he goes forth after his weekly ablution and change, refreshed in soul and body; and often in this hushed silence—like John in the Spirit—on the Lord's day, he thinks of the white robes of the eternal Sabbath. He remembers that he is more than a mere animal, to be fed and sheltered—more than a mere creature of intellect capable of education; that his highest interests are spiritual, and that the noblest relations which he sustains are to God and eternity.

Out in the Rain.

There is a touching story of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson, which had an influence on many a boy who has heard it. Samuel's father, Michael Johnson, was a poor bookseller in Litchfield, Eng. On market days he used to carry a package of books to Uttoxeter, and sell them from a stall in the market-place. One day the bookseller was sick, and asked his son to go and sell the books in his place. Samuel, from a silly pride, refused to obey.

Fifty years afterward Johnson became the celebrated author, the compiler of the "English Dictionary," and one of the most distinguished scholars in England, but he never forgot his act of unkindness to his poor, hard-toiling father; so when he visited Uttoxeter he determined to show his sorrow and repentance.

He went into the market-place at the time of business, uncovered his head, and stood there for an hour in a pouring rain, on the very spot where the book-stall used to stand. "This," he says, "was an act of contrition for my disobedience to my kind father."

The spectacle of the great Dr. Johnson standing bareheaded in the storm, to atone for the wrong done by him fifty years before, is a grand and touching one. There is a representation of it (in marble) on the doctor's monument.

Many a man in after life has felt something harder and heavier than a storm of rain beating upon his heart, when he remembered his acts of unkindness to a good father or mother now in their graves.

Dr. John Todd, of Pittsfield, the eminent writer, never could forget how, when his old father was very sick, and sent him away for medicine, he (a little lad) had been unwilling to go, and made up a lie that "the druggist had not got any such medicine."

The old man was just dying when little Johnny came in, and said to him, "My boy, your father suffers great pain for want of that medicine."

Johnny started in great distress for the medicine, but it was too late. The father on his return was almost gone. He could only say to the weeping boy, "Love God, and always speak the truth, for the eye of God is always upon you. Now kiss me once more, and farewell."

Through all his after life Dr. Todd often had a heartache over that act of falsehood and disobedience to his dying father. It takes more than a shower of rain to wash away the memory of such sins. Dr. Todd repented of that sin a thousand times.

The words, "Honor thy father and thy mother," means four things—always do what they bid you, always tell them the truth, always treat them lovingly, and take care of them when they are sick or grown old. I never yet knew a boy who trampled on the wishes of his parents who turned out well. God never blesses a willfully-disobedient son.

When Washington was 16 years old, he determined to leave home and be a midshipman in the Colonial navy. After he had sent off his trunk, he went in to bid his mother good-by. She wept so bitterly because he was going away that he said to his negro servant, "Bring back my trunk; I am not going to make my mother suffer so by my leaving her."

He remained at home to please his mother. This decision led to his becoming a surveyor and afterwards a soldier. His whole glorious career in life turned on this one simple act of trying to make his mother happy. And happy, too, will be the child who never has occasion to shed bitter tears for any act of unkindness to his parents. Let us not forget that God has said, "Honor thy father and thy mother."—Signature.

The Syndicate.

There was a little lull in the conversation, and presently Miss Sillibub asked the first society young man "What the syndicate was?"

The first society young man stared, and presently said he believed it was the name of a new opera. Last time he was in Chicago he heard Mapleson, fellah that runs Queen's Opera Company say he was going to—

"'Tain't that," a best young man broke in; "I read all 'bout it tothah day. It's a kind of—haw—darkies all going to Kansas, you know; whole boat-loads of 'em going every day. Political scheme; Republicans and Abolitionists all mixed up in it. Goin' to be a war if it 'tain't stopped."

"Guess you're wrong," said a son of one of our first families. "Syndicate's nothing to do with politics; heard some fellows talking 'bout it down town to-day. Aw—fellow has one in the Court House; has to have it, you know, or they wouldn't let him build it. That's what a syndicate is."

The son of one of our first families was looked up to with so much confidence that there was at first a general inclination to accept his theory; which was disturbed, however, by a young lady who said "She couldn't exactly understand how that could be, because she read or heard somewhere that Gen. Sherman has ordered the syndicate, or had something to do with it."

"O yes—fences!" suddenly broke out a young man who makes a living by sucking his cane. "Fences," he added vaguely, but still with considerable enthusiasm. "Don't you know? Mendin' his fences; Sherman's fences—fences."

And the sudden gleam of intelligence died out of his face, and his voice sunk into a feeble mutter. He reached around for his cane, intending to recruit his failing intellect by a long suck at the ivory knob; but he had left it out in the hall, and dejectedly sucked the knob on the back of the camp-stool, instead.

"Well, syndicate, as I understand it," remarked a fragile young man who was straining himself trying to see something through a pair of eye glasses—"a syndicate is when a fellow's going to do something, and another fellow doesn't want him to; other fellow goes to court, and the Judge gives him—sues him out, law-fellows call it—sues him out a syndicate; then this fellow can't do it."

This was so clearly put that the company sat for a little while wrapped in silent admiration of the young man's profound knowledge of the law. But the whole question was finally settled by the decision of a young man who wasting a rare and valuable life by trying to raise eleven whiskers on each cheek and look over his collar at the same time. He looked up with an air of dawning interest, and, after a painful intellectual effort, asked:

"Wha' is it? Wha' talking about?"

They told him.

"Syndicate?" he asked—"syndicate? yes, I know. Blamed vulgar thing. Low. Beastly low. Beastly piece of beastly political business. 'Tain't no way fit to talk about here."

And then the company very properly dropped the indelicate subject, and resumed the conversation about the lawn-party.—Burdette.

A "Happy Family."

A policeman found a family of five persons and two old trunks under a shed near the foot of Second street, waiting to go up the river on a wood-barge which wouldn't leave until the next forenoon. The man had both hands pressed to his face, the woman was wiping her eyes on a handkerchief and all the children were squalling.

"What seems to be the matter?" inquired the officer as he halted among them.

"Oh, nothing much," answered the man. "I've got the jumpin' tooth-ache, but it allus slacks up on me about midnight."

"What ails your wife?"

"Oh, she's kinder tired out and nervous, but as soon as she gets a good rest for her back agin the wood-pile she'll go to sleep and forget all about it. She's all right, she is."

"But the children are crying," continued the officer.

"Yaas, kinder crying," replied the man, "but that's nothing. That boy, Augustus Cæsar, he wants a stick of gum, but he'll soon chaw himself to sleep on a sliver. The next one, Charles Henry, he's howlin' 'cause I won't buy him a rockin'-horse, but soon's I get time to spank him he'll curl down and go to dreamin' of angels. That gal, Minerva, has got her mouth up for fried-cakes and milk, but I'll give her a bite o' pork and bread from the trunk and she'll never know the difference. We are kinder sprawled out here, and we seem to be kinder afflicted, but we are a reg'lar happy family."—Detroit Free Press.

A Brave Woman's Deed.

Abraham Christman, aged 70, an old resident of Clinton, Rock county, was horribly mangled by an angry bull last evening. He was driving cows into the yard, when the bull attacked him, knocking him down, and hooking and trampling upon him. Mrs. Christman saw her husband being crushed by the infuriated brute, and, seizing a club, she bravely ran to the rescue. Dealing the bull a few heavy blows, she caused a lull in the attack, which she took advantage of. With almost superhuman strength she grasped her husband with one hand, while with the other she wielded the club and kept the brute from further attack. In this way she succeeded in getting her husband to the barn. She was, however, too late to prevent her husband receiving fatal injuries. Five ribs were broken from the sternum, crushing the chest, and badly injuring one lung. One horn had passed through the under jaw into the mouth, and the collar-bone was broken. Mr. Christman lived three days, when death relieved him from his sufferings.—Janesville (Wis.) paper.

FARM NOTES.

[Rural, Jr., in Chicago Tribune.]

ROBBING BEES.—During the interval between summer and autumn flowers, bees are apt to get into the habit of robbing. They therefore need frequent visits during the day; and, if they have already begun, remove the victimized hive to some dark place for a day or two. Robbers may generally be known by the manner in which they fly, with their heads toward the hive.

THE hog crop this season will not be so large as last. This is caused by disease and the usual falling-off because of low prices. The enormous crop of corn now ripening will make cheap feed, and the demand for hog-products in Europe will have a tendency to enhance the price of live hogs. Every one who has hogs should now take the best of care of them, and make them realize as much as possible.

PLANTING STRAWBERRIES.—Autumn planting of strawberry vines is never to be recommended, except where necessity requires them to be set out. Good, rich soil, and strong, healthy plants, will sometimes, if the season is favorable, produce a tolerably fair crop of fruit the next year. The leaves should be reduced to one or two, and, if the sun is hot, the plants must be covered from the rays. Wilson's Albany, Crescent seedling, and Charles Downing are good varieties.

BALKY HORSES.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives the following as a cure for refractory horses: My method with balky horses—and I think it equally good in case of kicking or backing in harness, or running away—has proved very successful with my team, requires but a moment in its execution, and is not, I think, in the least inhumane. I take a strong string (three-ply broom twine is the best), long enough to reach from the horse's neck to the carriage, fasten one end around the horse's neck in a hard knot, so the loop will not slip, bring the throat latch through the loop to prevent the string from working back on the neck. When the horse balks do not strike at or about him, but sit quietly in your seat and pull on the string until you choke him. If the horse is very stubborn you may have to choke him severely, but he will be willing to pull before he is choked down. Two of these chokings will render him afraid to balk. I tried this on my team last fall, and have had no trouble with them since.

LAST year, at this time, there was a great deal of talk about tiling. This year, not so much is said; but a great deal more is done; still there are men who last year were fully convinced that they would tile-drain, but the dry season has removed for the time being the necessity, and they have become lukewarm. A couple of average dry seasons would, in a measure, eradicate all thought of tile-draining from the minds of most farmers. This ought not to be so, because no man can tell when his crops may be failures from an extensive rainfall; hence every one should be prepared. The proper season for tile-draining is when the soil is dry and the farmer at leisure. In a majority of cases no better time will be found than the present. The plow may be used to a considerable extent, and the labor be thereby greatly accelerated. In covering tile, after a few inches of soil has been thrown in with a spade to keep it in its position, the balance may be replaced with a heavy pole drawn by horses, provided one team is allowed to walk ahead of the other, so that the soil may be drawn to the center. It is not such a big job, after all, to lay in a few rods of tile, if one only goes at it rightly.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—One would suppose, from the number of times that swindlers and their games have been exposed through the press, that it would be impossible for them to ply their trade, especially among the farmers, the majority of whom usually are subscribers to some newspaper. Every day we read of some one having been swindled by a new game. The favorite one this year appears to have been the "agency" dodge. It takes quite a philosopher to resist the flattery of these fellows. When a man's egotism has been sufficiently excited, he easily falls a dupe to almost any trick. Windmills, wagon-jacks, churns, washing-machines, barb-wire and sulky-plows are all favorites in their season. In most cases the agents send the goods—hence there can be no plea of fraud. There is no law against a man making a fool of himself, and, if he signs papers without reading them, no one will sympathize greatly if he gets swindled. The greatest inducement in this whole business is the expectation of getting something for nothing. The giving away of a sample machine almost always disarms suspicion.

Four Persons Killed by Lightning.

Two of Mr. Le Suer's children, aged 6 and 5, came walking into town, bringing the startling news that their father, mother, two little sisters, a little girl of W. Dricken, of Fountain, D. T., and Will Date, had all been killed "by the wind hitting them." Men on foot and with teams started out in search. Mr. Mosier and Mr. Henretty, after driving about two miles and a half from town, stopped to make inquiries at Mrs. Nubson's house, where they were informed that a wagon load of the dead had just been sent to Canby by Andrew Erickson. At this house was one of the number, Will Date, who, after lying for some time in an unconscious state by the roadside, scrambled three-quarters of a mile to the house and gave the alarm. The light wagon containing the bodies of Mrs. Le Suer, her 2-year-old child, and the body of Rosa Dricken was found south of the creek, near the house, and brought into town about 10 o'clock. The appearance of the corpses was ghastly indeed, all occupying a sitting posture on the seat on which they were sitting when they received the death-dealing shock. Mr. Le Suer was found some little distance off, lying on his face, about two or three feet from the side of the road. While these men were taking Mr. Le Suer to the house, another party, hearing the cries of a child some distance from the road, went and found the 3-year-old boy of Mr. Le Seur lying in the grass. A third party found Mr. Le Suer's dog dead in the road, about a quarter of a mile north of the creek, where the bodies had been found, and, fifteen feet from where the dog lay they found the lifeless form of the infant girl, about two feet from the roadside, she probably having been thrown there when her mother was struck. It is evident from the appearance of the corpse that Mrs. Le Suer received the greatest part of the shock. The sunshade she used that day had steel ribs, covered with silk, and it is thought by many that the electric fluid passed down these ribs, striking Mr. Date first on his right shoulder, and Mr. Le Suer on his left shoulder, and so on to the seat, partly melting the iron bolt, and then down to the ground across the axle of the wagon.—*Canby (Minn.) Farmers' Profits.

The crop reports continue to show that we shall have an uncommonly large harvest of breadstuffs; enough to guarantee abundant supplies at not exorbitant prices to England and Germany, where the crops are short. It is curious that Texas reports a poorer corn crop than any other State in the Union, but in the other trans-Mississippi States this crop promises extraordinary results.

In some of the cotton States corn is said to be doing poorly, which will increase this year the demand upon the Northwest from these States, which have for some years largely and rapidly enlarged the area planted in food-stuffs, greatly to the advantage of their people of both races.

On the whole, the season is now so far advanced that we may reckon securely on uncommonly good crops, which will put a very large amount of money into the pockets of our farmers. We trust they will know how to take care of it, and we advise them and all other industrious people to beware of speculation. It is plain to all observing men that we are about to witness the beginning of a new fever of mining speculation, and whoever has by hard work earned and by economy saved a little money will be tempted by newspaper reports and by a too general example to try to increase it largely and rapidly by putting it into "stock" of some kind, and especially mining stock. We advise everybody to be careful. There are no doubt good mines, but there are certainly a great many worthless ones, and a great many more of which nobody knows whether they are going to turn out well or poorly; and these last two kinds are the ones most easily bought by the inexperienced.

If any farmer or planter has done so well this year that when he has sold his crops he finds himself with money to spare, let him buy land. That is still cheap almost everywhere, and it is always safe to own real estate bought cheaply or at a fair price in a well-settled and law-respecting community.—New York Herald.

A Concurrence of Opinion.

A map-agent went into a manufacturing establishment in Norwich, Ct., recently, with an egotistical idea that his power of reading faces was a great aid to him in his business. He looked the shop over, and fixed upon a commonplace-looking workman, with an intelligent face, as the individual upon which to begin business. Approaching the man, he touched a spring and down dropped an elaborate map of Connecticut, with its towns, railroads, and rivers all properly located. Then it was earnestly and comprehensively described by the glib agent, who briefly stated the advantage of such an educational chart to the possessor, etc. The workman, looking up very innocently from his work, remarked: "That is mighty pretty! Should think it would be first-rate in a family! What is the expense of such an article?" "Only $1.50," responded the agent, dilating upon the bargain there was in the value offered for such a small amount of cash. "Would you rather have $1.50 than to have that?" asked the workman. "Certainly," responded the agent. "Well! I don't know much about such things," said the laborer, "but, with your experience, if you feel that you had rather have $1.50 than to have that map, why, I think I had, too!"

Killed His Father.

The Silver Reef (Cal.) Miner states that John Pickering, Piute county, gave a whipping to one of his sons, a boy aged about 12 years. The boy turned upon his father, and told him that that was the last time that he would submit to a chastisement, and that he would leave home never to return. Next morning the boy got up and sent his younger brother to the pasture for the calves. His father was yet in bed asleep. The youth slipped on his father's shoes, walked out into the road through the dust, so as to make a man's tracks, then went back to the house, took his father's pistol, and, making a rest of the back of a chair, shot him through the heart. The parricide then went to Jim Marshall's ranch, about five miles distant, and told Marshall that John T. Mathias, the stage-driver, had shot and killed his father. Subsequently, the boy became frightened and confessed his crime.

THE total product of the coal mines of the world is about 285,368,370 tons annually. Of this comparatively only a small portion is produced in this country. Great Britain produces almost double as much as all other countries. The product of that country in 1877 was 134,179,068 tons, while the quantity produced in the United States that year was only about 50,000,000 tons. Germany's coal product in 1877 was 48,337,350 tons; that of France 16,773,779 tons; that of Belgium 14,099,281 tons. Coal is also produced in Austria, Hungary, Spain, Russia, China, Japan, Australasia, India, Turkey, Italy and Canada.

"IS THERE an opening here for an intellectual writer?" asked a seedy, red-nosed individual of an editor. "Yes, my friend," replied the man of quills; "a considerate carpenter, foreseeing your visit, left an opening for you; turn the knob to the right."

A FIGHTING EDITOR.

Charles DeYoung, of the San Francisco Chronicle—Sketch of a Notable Character.

Charles DeYoung, the chief actor in the Kalloch tragedy, writes a San Francisco correspondent, is one of the most notable characters upon the Pacific slope. Less than twenty years ago he was a type-setter in the office of the Sacramento Union, then, and for years after, the great newspaper of California. Those of his old comrades at "the case" who survive tell tales indicative of the quiet energy, pluck, shrewdness, and sagacity of the young type-setter of those days, and characteristic of the founder and successful conductor of the Chronicle. Of Jewish origin, possessed of the slenderest educational advantages, and without capital other than that of hands and brains, Charles DeYoung quitted Sacramento for this city, which offered a field better fitted to the abilities and enterprise which he has since so signally demonstrated. He was then not yet 20 years of age. With his brother and present partner, Michael DeYoung, he straightway entered upon the journalistic enterprise, the result of which is the present Chronicle, which in enterprise, circulation and influence must be classed with the leading journals of the country. The beginning was an humble one. The Chronicle of to-day was started as a mere "bill-of-the-play," for gratuitous circulation in the theaters and at the leading restaurants. The small sheet contained, besides the programme, space for theatrical criticism and gossip, and for some spicy, pungent paragraphs upon current topics, more particularly about men and things about town. Besides, there was room for advertisements, upon the proceeds of which the support of the little sheet depended. In the outset this miniature venture in journalism may have been contemptuously ignored as the bantling of "those two young Jews." But the Dramatic Chronicle, as it was then styled, was altogether too lively a sheet to be long ignored. Despite its diminutive proportions, scarcely one-fourth of its present size, it made itself felt in as lively a fashion as ever a hornet's nest, and betimes in somewhat like fashion, for in its personalities it was not only waspish, but unsparing. Besides, it was bright, witty, fresh, and well-written. Withal, it might have failed but for the rare journalistic instincts of Charles DeYoung. He was not, and has not become a writer. But as by intuition he divined what would most interest the public, and the most readable shape in which it might be presented. He knew how, also, to utilize the best materiel among the Bohemians of the day, and long before Mark Twain had grown famous his value had been discovered by DeYoung, and Mark, for a wretchedly slender stipend, contributed regularly to the little Dramatic Chronicle. From this small beginning that sheet enlarged and its business increased until the net earnings were about $400 a month, when the Daily Chronicle was issued as a full-fledged newspaper. From this outset it was an assured success. It was characterized by the same keen personalities, the same brightness and freshness as in its embryo stages, and displayed an enterprise in news-gathering that rapidly distanced competition upon this coast.

The Chronicle retained all the audacity of its dramatic progenitor, and has not been distinguished as a respecter of persons. It has been characterized by that sensationalism which has proved successful in some notable instances in the journalism of the day, and of which illustrations are now to be found in nearly all large cities. In kind the sensationalism of the Chronicle has differed little from that of other papers in other large cities. In degree the Chronicle sensationalism has surpassed that of other journals, as the audacity and temerity of Charles DeYoung has surpassed that of other conductors of such journals. That is all there is of the sensational features of the Chronicle as compared with those of other sensational journals with which the public is familiar. Of course DeYoung has been charged with unscrupulous use of his paper to gratify private malice, and mercenary considerations have been freely attributed to him—just as has been the case with the conductor of every, or almost every important newspaper in the country. But he has never shirked the fullest personal responsibility for the course of the Chronicle in every particular. More than once have persons aggrieved by Chronicle sensations gone for the editor of the Chronicle. But they have always found him ready to meet them without flinching. He does not run when a pistol is presented; and, on the other hand, he has long been known as a man who upon provocation would shoot. Still he is neither a bully nor quarrelsome. No quieter man of business can be found than the small, rather muscularly-built young man of between 37 and 40 years of age, known about town and all over the coast as "Charley" DeYoung. His clear-cut, close-shaven features indicate uncommon coolness and self-control. There is a quiet firmness in his manner and expression that would indicate that he is not a man to be trifled with. But there is about him no trace of bravado. His metal has been proved often enough, most notably, perhaps, in his rencontre in 1872 with Judge Lake. The Chronicle in its society intelligence had published an item disparaging, or construed to be disparaging, to the wife of the Judge. Thereupon, coming upon DeYoung in the street one afternoon, the Judge drew his revolver and began firing. Instead of attempting to get out of the way, DeYoung closed with his assailant, a much larger and more powerful man, and got him down and disarmed him, though not until an unfortunate bystander had been pinked. About two years after the Chronicle contained a ferocious attack upon Mr. B. F. Napthaly, of the Sun, in which disgraceful reference was made to a female member of his family. Napthaly, who had been connected with the Chronicle, was then conducting the Sun, now extinct. He retorted with an article containing the most atrocious attacks upon the mother and sister of DeYoung. This is the article which Kalloch announced he would read. Upon its publication DeYoung armed himself with the avowed purpose of killing Napthaly. The latter also armed and showed fight. Several rencontres occurred, in which shots were exchanged without serious effect. In one of these affairs a bystander, a boy, was hit and seriously wounded, as was claimed, by a bullet fired by DeYoung. That put an end to the pistol practice of the editors, and the matter died out. Of the nature of the article which gave rise to the DeYoung-Napthaly shooting it is unnecessary to say more than that it was an attack of such unutterably atrocious sort upon DeYoung's mother and sister as could only have been intended to invite a shooting affray. It was of such a character that the only response to be made was with a revolver. Upon Kalloch's announcement that he would read and cause to be republished this article, notice was conveyed to him by DeYoung that such would be his response the second time. Kalloch did not publicly read the article, but his speech was not the less offensive, and the shooting was DeYoung's response.

LIVERPOOL papers print the story of one William James Mayor, a respectable citizen, who passed several years in penal servitude for burglary and an attempt to murder, of which he has been proved to be entirely guiltless. It was a case of mistaken identity, and no redress for the injustice has ever been received.

MR. AND MRS. DONOVAN, of St. Louis were driven by rain and poverty to resolve upon suicide. They took poison simultaneously, and the man died; but the woman's life was saved. She has since made three attempts to kill herself, and is now kept in a cell. She says that she is in honor bound to keep the promise that she made to her husband.

A TRAIN was stopped on the Muskegon Valley (Ohio) railroad just in time to save it from being wrecked on a timber that had been tied to the track. A search was made for the plotter, and he was caught hiding behind a bush near by. Asked as to his motive, he said: "Well, it's so damned dull out here in the country that I thought I'd have some fun, somehow."

BURNS.

Pilgrims whose wandering feet have pressed
The Switzer's snows, the Arab's sand,
Or trod the piled leaves of the west,
My own green forest land;

All ask the cottage of his birth,
Gaze on the scenes he loved and sung,
And gather feelings, not of earth,
His fields and streams among.

They linger by the Doon's low trees,
And pastoral Nith and wooded Ayr,
And round thy sepulchres, Dumfries—
The poet's tomb is there.

But what to them the sculptor's art,
His funeral columns, wreaths and urns?
Were they not graven on the heart,
The name of Robert Burns?

LEARNING A NEW GAME.

Poker Bill's First Attempt at Preaching the Gospel, and What Came of It.

Carbon Wyoming Journal.

Of course I went to Leadville, that wonderful mushroom city, which can boast of the most rascally gamblers, hardest drinkers, cheekiest bummers and vilest prostitutes in creation. One's first impulse upon arriving in the town is to start out and see the sights—to gaze in upon the many gambling hells, where money is ever changing hands upon the turn of a card. Above the sharp clicking of the ivory checks can be heard the voices of dealers calling upon the players for "Make your bets, gentlemen," while notes of exultation and cursing come forth in strange chorus, uttered by those who lose and those who win. But it is not of gambling that I would tell you. The scenes are but duplicates of those so familiar to every pioneer in the early days of the Union Pacific railroad.

I was standing in front of the hotel when my attention was attracted by a dilapidated, antiquated looking specimen of a saloon bummer, who was passing along the street ringing a bell. At intervals he would cease ringing, and shout:

"Religious racket right away at the big tent! Roll up tumble up, or slide up on yer y-ears, fur we'll have a bang-up dish o' gospel talk from Faro Bill—and d-o-o-o-n-t you forget it!"

Turning to a dapper little gambler who stood near, I asked:

"Who is Faro Bill?"

"Who is he? Well, now, if that ain't the boss play fur high. You kin break me right here if I thought there was a bloke in the mines that didn't know Bill. He used to be one of the boys, but got capped into a religious game by a slick-tongued gospel sharp about two months ago. He's chopped on all his old rackets, an' don't stand in with nothin' now that don't show up a Bible or prayer-book in the lay out. Billy used to be the boss gambler of the camp, and warn't afeared to 'sit in a game with the flyest sport that ever slung a card; but he's clean gone on the pious lay now, and seems to have lost all the good there ever was in him. The boss mouthpiece of the heavenly mill has gone down to Denver, an Bill is a goin' to stand in an' sling gospel to the boys as well as he can."

This explanation, given in the most earnest tones, started me instanter for the big tent. It was used at night for a variety theater, where artists (?) of questionable character performed acts of still more questionable decency, and was rented for religious services every Sunday morning. I found the tent filled to its utmost capacity. Many had, no doubt, come through curiosity to see how Bill would deport himself in this, his initial sermon. Upon the stage sat a burly, red-faced man, with arms folded in a careless manner, who looked over the large audience with an air of the most decided independence. This was Faro Bill, the speaker of the occasion. When he arose he glanced around the tent for a moment, evidently collecting his thoughts, and began:

"Feller citizens, the preacher bein' absent, it falls on me to take his hand and play it fur all it is worth. You all know that I'm just learnin' the game an' of course, I may be expected to make wild breaks, but I don't believe that's a rooster in the camp mean enough to take advantage o' my ignorance, and cold-deck me right on the first deal. I'm sincere in this new departure, an' I believe that I've struck a game that I can play clear through without copperin' a bet, fur when a man tackles such a lay-out as this, he plays every card to win, an' if he goes through the deal as he orter do, when he lays down to die, an' the last case is slid from the box, he can call the turn every time.

"I was readin' in the Bible to-day that yarn about the Prodigal Son, an' I want to tell yer the story. The book don't give no dates, but it happened long, long ago. This Prodigal Son had an old man that put up the coin every time the kid struck him for a stake, an' never kicked at the size of the pile either. I reckon the old man was purty well fixed, an' when he died he intended to give all his wealth to this kid an his brother. Prod give the old man a little game 'o talk one day, and injuced him to whack up in advance 'o the death racket. He'd no sooner got his divy in his fist than he shook the old man an' struck out to take in some 'o the other camps. He hed a way-up time for a while, and slung his cash to the front like he owned the best payin' lead on arth; but hard luck hit him a lick at last an' left him flat. The book don't state what he went broke on, but I reckon he got steered up agin some brace game. But anyhow, he got left without a chip, or a four-bit piece to go an' eat on. An old granger then tuk him home an' set him to herdin' hogs, an' here he got so hard up an' hungry that he piped off the swine while they were feedin', an' he stood in with 'em on a husk lunch. He soon weakened on such plain provender, an' says to himself, says he: 'Even the old man's hired hands are livin' on square grub, while I'm worryin' along here on corn husks straight. I'll just take a grand tumble to myself and chop on this racket at once. I'll skip back to the governor and try to fix things up, and call fur a new deal, so off he started.

"The old man seen the kid coming and what do ye reckon he did? Did he pull his gun and lay for him, intending to wipe him as soon as he got in to range? Did he call the dogs to chase him off the ranch? Did he hustle around for a club and give him a stand-off at the front gate? Eh! Not to any alarming extent he didn't. No, sir! The Scripture book says he waltzed out to meet him, and froze to him on the spot, and kissed him, and then marched him off to a clothing store and fitted him out in the nobbiest rig to be had fur coin. Then the old gent invited all the neighbors and killed a fat calf, and give the biggest blowout the camp ever seed."

At the conclusion of the narrative the speaker paused, evidently framing in his mind a proper application of the story. Before he could resume, a tall, blear-eyed gambler, with a fierce moustache arose and said:

"'Taint me as would try ter break up a meeting, or do anything disreligious. No, sir; I am not that sort of a citizen. But in all public hoo-doos it is a parliamentary rule for anybody as wants to ax questions to rise up and fire them off. I do not want ter fool away time a questioning the workings of religion; oh, no. As long as it is kept in proper bounds, and does not interfere with the boys in their games, I do not see as it can do harm. I just want to ax the honorable speaker if he has not give himself dead away? Does it stand ter reason that a bloke would feed upon corn husks when there was hash factories in the camp? Would anybody hev refused him the price of a square meal if he had a-struck them fur it? Would any of the dealers that beat him out of his coin see him starve? As I remarked afore, I do not want to make any disrespectable breaks, but I must say that I have got it put up that the speaker has been a trying ter feed us on cussed thin taffy, and no one but a silly would take it in."

Bill glared upon the speaker and fairly hissed:—

"Do you mean to say that I am a liar?"

"Wal, you can take it just as you choose. Some folks would swallow it in that shape."

Bill pulled his revolver, and in an instant the bright barrels of numerous weapons flashed in the air as the friends of each party prepared for active duty. The brevet preacher was the first to fire and the rash doubter of spiritual truths fell dead on the ground. Shot followed shot in quick succession, and when quiet was again restored a score or more of dead and wounded men were carried from the tent. Having secured attention, Bill said:

"Further proceedings is adjourned for the day. You will receive the doxology."

The audience arose.

"May grace, mercy and peace be with you, now and forever, amen; and I want it distinctly understood that I am going to maintain a proper respect for the Gospel, if I have ter croak every dirty son-of-a-gun of a sinner in the mines. Meetin is out.

The crowd filed from the tent as coolly as if nothing extraordinary had occurred, and as I gained the sidewalk I heard a man remark:

"Bill has got the sand to make a bang-up preacher, and I would not wonder if he made a big mark in the world yet."

THE GENUINE

Thomas A. Hendricks.

[South Bend Herald.]

Every true democrat in Indiana likes Thomas A. Hendricks. They like him personally—they like him politically. They like him for his social qualities. They like him for his purity of character—that in all relations of life, public and private, no scandal or dishonor attaches to his name. They like him for his pre-eminent abilities and statesmanlike qualities which make up the character of a born leader and place him at the head of the democratic party of Indiana. As governor of the state—as political adviser in democratic councils; as representative in congress or U. S. senator—wherever and in whatever capacity Thomas A. Hendricks has been tried, he has shown himself "honest and capable" and the peer of his very best official associates. Under his lead Indiana has become the democratic banner state of the northwest and by virtue of that position, as well as by his eminent fitness for the office, her chosen democratic delegates presented his name to the last democratic national convention as a candidate for the first place upon the presidential ticket. He was nominated and elected to the second. Thomas A. Hendricks has now a public reputation, second to no man in the United States. His name will again be presented to the next democratic national convention for the first office in the gift of the people and as he forms one of a small group of recognized democratic statesmen from whom the call is to be made, the central figure of which is Thomas A. Hendricks, we believe the choice will fall upon him to take the helm of the government and bring the ship of state back to its democratic moorings. But should it be otherwise, the democracy of Indiana will not only bow to the expressed will of the majority in the choice of a candidate, but will do equal service under any other leader.

The Machines and Operatives Who Make Spools.

Boston Commercial Bulletin.

White birch is largely used in this manufacture, and as extensive forests of this wood grow throughout the state of Maine, Canada and the Provinces, many spool factories are located in those sections in order that supplies of material may be easily procured. The wood after being delivered to the factories, is first sawed into pieces about four feet long and from an inch to an inch and a half square, according to the size of the spool it is required to make. These pieces are put into a dry-house and thoroughly dried, from whence they are taken into the factory and given to the "roughers" who in an incredibly short space of time bore a hole in the center a couple of inches deep, turn about the same space round, and then cut off the length required for a spool. The machines used for this purpose are revolving planers, in the center of which is a revolving gimlet or bit, and immediately to the right a small circular saw with a gauge set to the proper size of the spools. The "roughers" receive a cent and a half per gross for their work, and experienced men can turn out from 100 to 130 gross per day. The round blocks pass from them to the "finishers," who place them in machines which give them the shape of spools and makes them quite smooth. A man stands with his left hand on a small lever, and with the right places the blocks, one at a time, in the lathe, then draws the lever toward him for an instant and the work is done; the lever is pushed back and the spools drop down into a box below, while the right hand is ready with another block. These blocks are handled at the rate of twenty-five to thirty per minute. The "finishers" also receive a cent and a half per gross, and they can each turn out from 100 to 130 gross per day. The spools are then thrown loosly into a large cylinder, which revolves slowly, so that the spools are polished by the constant rubbing upon each other for some time. On being taken out of the cylinder they are placed in a hopper with an opening at the bottom through which they pass down a slide for inspection. Here the inspector sits and watches closely to see that no imperfect spools are allowed to pass, and a very small knot or scratch is sufficient to condemn them. The spools then pass into the hands of the packers, who handle them very lively. They are packed in large boxes made the proper size, so that the layers of spools exactly fill the box, and no additional packing, and a smart boy who is accustomed to the work can pack about 200 gross per day.

How Jay Gould Astonished the Dutch.

[From the London Railway News, August 19th.]

We hear from Amsterdam that Mr. Jay Gould has been rather astonishing Dutch financiers. It appears that he has been negotiating with bankers there about a Kansas railroad whose affairs have been in litigation for several years. He finally offered $1,800,000 for the first mortgage bonds held by the syndicate, which they accepted, with the proviso that interest should be added to the date of payment. Gould agreed, but created a sensation by immediately writing a check on Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, for the full amount.

Staining Pine.

The Northeastern Lumberman recommends the following manner of staining pine to represent black walnut: Put pulverized asphaltum into a bowl with about twice its bulk of turpentine and set where it is warm, shaking from time to time until dissolved; then stain and apply with either a cloth or a stiff brush. Try a little first, and if the stain be too dark, thin it with turpentine. If desirable to bring out the grain still more, give a coat of boiled oil and turpentine. When the wood is thoroughly dry, polish with a mixture of two parts shellac varnish and one part boiled oil. Apply by putting a few drops at a time on a cloth and rubbing briskly over the wood.

Professor Huxley on "Cramming."

Professor Huxley writes: "Young people who are forced to work at high pressure by incessant and competitive examinations are conceited all the forenoon of life, and stupid all its afternoon. Their faculties are worn out by the strain put upon their callow brains, and they are demoralized by worthless childish triumphs before the real work of life begins. I have no compassion for sloth, but youth has more need for intellectual rest than age; and the cheerfulness, the tenacity of purpose, the power of work, which make many a successful man what he is must often be placed to the credit, not of his hours of industry, but to that of his hours of idleness in boyhood.

Please Let Up.

In speaking of the departure of loved ones to the spirit land, the prevailing custom has been to remark in the obituary, "But our loss is her eternal gain;" it is rarely ever omitted, and we once took occasion to make a few suggestions concerning its use, at the same time offering a gold-headed cane to the first person who could write up an obituary without it. The Kendallville Standard now catches on the chorus and strikes the key note thusly:

Can't that silly and absurd practice of using that old stereotyped sentence, "It has pleased an allwise providence to remove from our midst," etc., when a person dies, be discontinued? It is too old fogy. No person of sense believes that it pleases God, providence, or any other person or thing, to see a person die, especially in youth, or prime of life. It is a base slander on "providence."

A Flirtation in a Theater.

Forney's Progress.

Scene in a theater. Seated in the orchestra a lady and gentleman; the former much enamored with the latter, in fact desirious of winning him. The lady, however, has flirting tendencies, and indulges them with a handsome party in the circle. The escort is not unobservant of this little by play, and finally asks smilingly, "Do you know that gentleman with whom you are flirting?"

An embarrassed negative is the reply.

"Then excuse me a moment."

The escort immediately crosses the theatre, puts a similar question to the other conspirator, "Sir, are you acquainted with the lady at whom you have been smiling this last half hour?"

"No!"

"Would you like to be?" pleasantly.

Very much surprised, "Certainly."

"Then come with me."

A moment later the escort introduces the not altogether comfortable pair. Then the mild expression leaves the insulted gentleman's face, and he says sternly:

"Now, sir, you may accompany this lady home!"

With a bow he takes his leave, and the woman who loves him never hears his voice again.

—As a general rule, when we run across Josh Billings' butchered orthography we gently pass it by; but he occasionally makes a good hit, and the following caught us that way recently:

"The man whom you can't git to write poetry or tell the truth until you git him half drunk aint worth the investment."

"I notiss one thing; the man who rides on the kars every day is satisfied with one seat, but he who rides once a year wants 4."

Tom C. Mays.

South Bend Herald.

Tom C. Mays is sailing H. M.'s ship Pinafore through northern Indiana. Tom can cover more space and hold more positions in a given time than any other man on the green earth. Some greenhorn about his old home in DeKalb county, where he used to run a newspaper, has just waked up in the belief that Tom published a slander on him and has instituted a suit for damages. In the meantime Tom had sold out, had traveled over the state in the interest of "Boss" Fleming, pending the last democratic state convention; had moved to Colorado to explore the head sources of the potato bugs and start a newspaper; but turned up at Indianapolis in time for a clerkship in the last legislature and afterwards boarding a Pinafore troupe to cruise for glory evermore! Tom is a "galorious" fellow anywhere and everywhere.

The Boomerang.

This curious weapon, peculiar to the native Australian, has often proved a puzzler to men of science. It is a piece of carved wood, nearly in the form of a cresent, from thirty to forty inches long, pointed at both ends, and the corner quite sharp. The mode of using it is quite as singular as the weapon. Ask a black to throw it so as to fall at his feet, and away it goes full 40 yards before, skimming along the surface at 3 or 4 feet from the ground, when it will suddenly rise in the air 40 or 60 feet, describing a curve, and finally drop at the feet of the thrower. During its course it revolves with great rapidity, as on a pivot, with a whizzing noise. It is wonderful so barbarous a people should have invented so singular a weapon, which sets laws of progression at defiance. It is very dangerous for a European to try to project it at any object, as it may return and strike himself. In a native's hand it is a formidable weapon, striking without the projector being seen; like the Irishman's gun, shooting round a corner equally as well as straightforward.

Another Fraud.

This time the boot is on the other foot, the farmer does the swindling, instead of the sharper. The trick was played in a city in this state, one day last week by two farmers who drove up to the city weighmaster with two loads of hay. They stopped some distance from the scales, and after a little delay the largest load was driven to the scales and weighed, the driver procured his certificate and returned to the other load. The horses were unhitched and watered, and each team hitched to the wagon that belonged to the other. The large load, weighing some 1200 pounds more than the other, was again returned to the scales and weighed for farmer No. 2, so that each man had a certificate for the same wagon and load. It so happed that a police officer had been watching the transactions and about the time the farmers had finished their little game, the officer waited upon them officially, and the farmers concluded that their ground was in splendid condition to cultivate, and started for home, wiser than they were before, but no better than any patent-right or lightning-rod swindler.

What Has Become of the Great Buildings?

From the Springfield Republican.

Who that visited the Centennial exposition does not wish he could go back and find it just as it was in 1876. That being impossible, who would not like to visit the site of that splendid show? Those who can not do even that would like to know what disposition was made of the several buildings and what is now left of them. The editor of the New York Tribune has placed all such persons under obligation to him by informing them that the majority of the buildings have been torn down and sold for about what the material is worth. The Swedish school house is in Central Park, New York. The department of Public Comfort (so-called) is down on the Jersey sea-coast, with one or two of the state buildings. A Philadelphia cigar dealer now opens the Japanese House. The main or "Permanent Exposition" building is not "permanently" occupied, and will probably be torn down. Horticultural hall is reported by the Tribune to be richer or more delicate in color than its masses of gorgeous tropical flowers, with the dark background of South American ferns and Eastern palms." But poor, forsaken Memorial Hall—the art gallery—is being poorly stayed with, the roof leaks and the authorities will not mend it; so the water pours down upon the costly tapestry, the old brasses and the pottery of the days of the mound-builders. We know this is sad, but we feel pretty sure it is true.

Tobacco in the Hen-Roost.

From the London Telegraph.

A French gentleman has developed a theory that the inhalation of tobacco smoke by fowls causes their flesh to assume a wonderfully white color and become very tender at the same time. He accordingly shut up a chicken in his fowl-house, and set fire to a store of "caporal," which he left burning in the place. The young fowl, so far from being averse to the odor of the narcotic, was inclined to try its taste as well as its smell, and had in a few days time consumed so much "caporal" that its flesh was not only whitened but "nicotinized" with poison. To it as it stood—probably in a rather stupid state—upon its perch entered one night an adventurer. The precious bird was carried off, plucked, cooked and eaten, and a short time after breakfast the thief was seized with violent and intolerable pains. He rushed to the doctor, heedless of the necessity which would arise of disclosing his nocturnal escapade. He was found to have been poisoned by the nicotine contained in the flesh of the fowl, and was with some difficulty saved from death.

How the Pope Looks.

New York Tribune.

Pope Leo is said to look taller than he really is, because of his extreme slenderness; his figure, however, is elegant, in spite of his leanness. He has a splendidly shaped head, fringed with silver hair, and a kindly face, healthy in coloring. His mouth, chin and jaw express strength and firmness, and there is said to be in his expression a beautiful "light of inward joy." He wears a soutane, or close redingote of soft, white woolen cloth, taking the form of the figure at the waist and held there with a band of embroirdered silk, and buttoned quite down in front, showing the slippers of red silk, embroidered with a gold cross. A cape of the same color and material falls from the shoulders to the elbows, similarly buttoned to the coat in front, with some soft substance like down or ermin edging the cape around the neck, but not closely, and down the front; a golden cord hangs around the neck, resting on the shoulders, and depening in front is a golden and jeweled cross. His white hands are narrow, and the fingers long and beautifully rounded, and the nails are perfectly almond shaped and pink-tinted. On his head he wears a white skull cap.

High and Low Prices.

Indiana Farmer.

It is a false notion which many persons entertain, that high prices are necessary to constitute good times, and that low prices are invariably connected with hard times. Stability and uniform low prices constitute good times and are essential to the prosperity of any community. The uniform low price of everything is not an evil, in itself—it is the irregular transition from high to low prices which works the mischief in commercial circles. When prices fall ten or twenty per cent. the holder of property is apt to consider himself the looser to that extent, but the intrinsic value has not changed by the change of price. A barrel of flour bought for $5 will make as much bread as if it cost $10. Nor is there any real loss in commercial value if prices fall uniformly. If the price of wheat declines ten per cent. and the price of everything else falls correspondingly, the purchasing power of the 90 per cent. today will be equal to the buying power of the 100 per cent. yesterday. It is the fluctuation of prices and the temptation to buy and sell on credit which creates hard times. A may buys when the purchasing power of money is low, and has to pay when a dollar will buy twice as much as when he purchased. He is then a real looser to that extent. Stability in the purchasing power of money begets confidence in business, and is the parent of good times.

A Happy Pair.

New Orleans Democrat.

It was Monday at midnight when they were brought into the Central station, each on the arm of a police officer. He said it was a shame, and she did not think that a man calling himself a police officer would be guilty of such an act. "Give your name," cried the clerk "Mr. and Mrs. James O'Donnell." "Where were you born?" "That is none of your business." "Yes it is," said the clerk. "Well, then, put it down, dear old Ireland." "Can you read and write?" Of course we can; do you think we are ignoramuses? Read and write! Well, I do declare." "Your ages?" "Twenty-six years," replied O'Donnell. "Yours, madam?" "I will not give it, you impertinent fellow. What business have you to know my age?" "It is my duty, madam." "Well, you had better got some other duty where you won't have to be so inquisitive. Shall I give it, James? Well, you'll see just twenty-seven; don't you make no mistake." "Are you married?" "Well, now, just listen to that man; are we married! Of course we are, and that's what the row is about. We were man and wife today, and to think that a police officer would have the cheek to lock a bride and groom up in less than twenty-four hours after being coupled!"

"Well, what's the charge?" came the inquiry on behalf of the clerk.

"Record them for disturbing the peace," replied the officers.

When this charge was entered the turnkey cried out, "Open the bridal chamber." "Which one?" came the response. Cell No. 4. And when the door was opened gracefully the bride stepped in. The groom was then furnished with cell No. 1.

The London Ironmonger announces that a Sheffield firm, with its one hundred workmen, engaged in the manufacture of razors, are about to transfer their whole business to this country, and thus secure an American market without the payment of tariff duties. The grindstones are to be brought from England, as well as the water which is used for hardening the razors, as, it is said, the water of this country is unsuitable for that purpose. The firm have had constructed large tubs, in which water for hardening purposes is to be carried. This water is presumed to have some mineral proprieties which give it special value. It is not stated how the supply is to be kept up.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, in CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A SAIL-BOAT capsized on Lake Ontario, near Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., the other day, with distressing result. There were nine persons on board, seven of whom attempted to swim ashore, a distance of half a mile, and were drowned. Two clung to the spar above water and were rescued.

A NEW YORK dispatch states that over 4,000,000 bushels of wheat were shipped to Europe last week from the principal Atlantic ports, and during the last six weeks the exports of wheat exceed those for the corresponding period of 1878 by the enormous amount of 9,970,000 bushels.... Jay Gould, of New York, has telegraphed to Memphis to draw on him for $5,000 for the relief fund, and authorizing the Relief Committee to continue to draw on him until he tells to stop.... Seven weeks ago, Mrs. Kern, wife of the Sheriff of Philadelphia, was bitten by a rabid dog, and she has just died of hydrophobia.... Charles Demond, ex-Treasurer of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society at Boston, is in jail on a charge of embezzling $8,000 belonging to the society.

NEW YORK is vigorously pushing forward its project for a World's Fair in that city in 1883.

THE WEST.

THREE young people, named Louis Summit, Alice Cottrell and Ellen Delinger, were drowned near Petersburg, Ind., a few days ago. They were being ferried across White river in a flat-boat, and the mules attached to the wagon in which they were sitting, becoming frightened, precipitated the vehicle and its human freight into the water, with the result mentioned.... The steamer Alaska, plying between Detroit and Sandusky, met with a serious disaster near Detroit. The lining in her steam-chimney blew out, knocking the front end of the boiler into pieces. The escaping steam scalded eight of the crew. The two engineers, one fireman and one deck-hand jumped overboard. The latter was saved, but the other three were drowned and their bodies lost.

LEADVILLE luck: Rudolph A. Leimer, cashier of the Kansas Pacific Railway Express, at Denver, Col., not long ago invested $250 in a pool to develop a Leadville mine, and has just sold his interest for $30,000 cash. Gov. Tabor has sold out his one-third interest in the Little Pittsburgh mine at Leadville for $1,000,000 cash.

A FREIGHT train on the St. Louis division of the Wabash road ran through a bridge near Carpenter station, killing Engineer Corcoran and Brakeman Unemeyer, and seriously injuring the fireman. The engine and eight cars jumped the track and went through the bridge.

V. A. SEAVEY, Superintendent of the Chicago Police, is dead.... John C. Gault, for many years Assistant General Manager of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, has accepted the position of General Manager of the Wabash road.

THE Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen held their sixth annual session in Chicago last week. There was quite a large attendance.... A fire at Marysville, Cal., destroyed $80,000 worth of business property.... St. Vrain's Hotel and several adjoining buildings at Longmont, Col., have been burned. Loss, $40,000.

PRESIDENT HAYES and party arrived at Cincinnati on the 9th inst., and domiciled themselves in the Grand Hotel. They remained in the city until the 13th, when they left for Fremont.... A brief telegram from Santa Fe, New Mexico, mentions the killing of seven stock-herders by a war party, and a rumor to the effect that sixteen soldiers sent against the savages have met death in a similar manner. No particulars are given.

CHICAGO elevators contain 1,155,681 bushels of wheat, 3,230,841 bushels of corn, 460,347 bushels of oats, 117,000 bushels of rye, 129,036 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,092,905 bushels, against 6,664,447 bushels at this period last year.

DIED, at Cincinnati, John Shillito, aged 71, the leading dry-goods merchant of that city. Mr. Shillito began mercantile life in Cincinnati many years ago, and accumulated a fortune of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000.... A fire at Rawlins, Wyoming Territory, destroyed the Rocky Mountain Paint Company's mill and machinery. Loss, $150,000; no insurance.

THE SOUTH.

TWENTY-TWO deaths from yellow fever and forty new cases of the disease were reported to the Memphis Board of Health for the three days ending on the evening of Sept. 7. Total new cases for the week, 152, of which seventy-eight were whites and seventy-four colored. Total number of cases since the breaking out of the disease, 1,005, and total deaths, 272.

FOR the two days ending at 6 o'clock on the evening of Sept. 9, there were twenty-one deaths at Memphis from yellow fever, forty-six new cases being reported to the Board of Health in the same period.

A STRANGE and fatal disease of the malarial-fever type is creating consternation among the people in three or four counties in the western part of Georgia. POLITICAL.

THE Wisconsin Democratic State Convention assembled at Madison on Tuesday, Sept. 9. Hon. Thomas R. Hudd was made temporary Chairman. After the appointment of the usual committees the convention took a recess. On reassembling the Committee on Credentials reported, after which the Committee on Permanent Organization presented the name of the Hon. James Doolittle, of Racine, for President, and that of one delegate from each Congressional district for Vice President. After the report of the Committee on Resolutions and the adoption of the platform, Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was nominated for Governor by acclamation. The name of William T. Vilas was proposed for Lieutenant Governor, with the understanding that if Mr. Mitchell declined the name of Vilas should be substituted. During the roll-call Mr. Vilas entered the hall and persistently refused to allow his name to be used. The ballot, therefore, was declared informal and a formal one was taken, resulting in the choice of George H. King, of Green county. Samuel Ryan, of Outagamie, was nominated for Secretary of State; Andrew Haben, of Winnebago, Treasurer; J. Montgomery Smith, of Iowa, Attorney General, by acclamation, as was also the nomination of Edward Searing, of Rock, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. ... The Maine election, which was held on Monday, Sept. 8, resulted in the election of Davis, the Republican candidate, by a small majority over both his competitors, Garcelon (Democrat) and Smith (Greenbacker). The Legislature is Republican in both branches.

THE validity of the United States Election laws, which was the subject of so much discussion in the last Congress, and which formed the subject of one of President Hayes' most elaborate vetoes, is to be tested before the United States Supreme Court, in the matter of the Baltimore election cases.

GENERAL.

A NEW YORK dispatch says that Jay Gould has declined the invitation to join the "bear" side of the market. He says the present prosperous condition of the country is an assurance that no combination could depress prices. The demand of the world for food, which the United States can supply, gives evidence of profits which must, for the present at least, quiet the grumblers.

MR. AND MRS. GOLDSMITH, who set sail from Boston for Liverpool in a miniature boat, have come to grief. Mrs. Goldsmith was taken violently ill soon after their departure, and the absence of rest and the prevalence of bad weather soon rendered the Captain unfit for service. After drifting about for a time, both of the adventurers suffering greatly, they were picked up by a steamer and conveyed to Europe.

W. K. BELL, in the employ of the Adams Express Company at Kansas City, Mo., and who absconded with $7,500 of the company's money, has been arrested in Florida, and $2,500 recovered. Bell was taken back to Kansas City.
